17 And the priest shall dip his finger in some of the blood, and sprinkle it seven times before the LORD, even before the veil.

18 And he shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar, which is before the LORD, that is in the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall pour out all the blood at the bottom of the altar of the burnt-offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

19 And he shall take all his fat from him, and burn it upon the altar.

20 And he shall do with the bullock as he did with the bullock for a sin-offering, so shall he do with this: and the priest shall make an atonement for them, and it shall be forgiven them.

21 And he shall carry forth the bullock without the camp, and burn him as he burned the first bullock: it is a sin-offering for the congregation.

22 ¶ When a ruler hath sinned, and ^{done} somewhat through ignorance against any of the commandments of the LORD his God, concerning things which should not be done, and is guilty;

23 Or if his sin, wherein he hath sinned, come to his knowledge; he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a male without blemish.

24 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, and kill it in the place where they kill the burnt-offering before the LORD: it is a sin-offering.

25 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out his blood at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering.

26 And he shall burn all his fat upon the altar, as ^{the} fat of the sacrifice of peace-offerings: and the priest shall make an atonement for him as concerning his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

27 And if any one of the common people sin through ignorance, while he doeth somehow against any of the commandments of the LORD, concerning things which ought not to be done, and be guilty;

28 Or if his sin, which he hath sinned, come to his knowledge: then he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a female without blemish, for his sin which he hath sinned.

29 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, and slay the sin-offering in the place of the burnt-offering.

30 And the priest shall take of the blood thereof with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar.

31 And he shall take away ^{all} the fat thereof, as the fat is taken away from off the sacrifice of peace-offerings; and the priest shall burn it upon the altar, for a sweet savour unto the LORD: and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and it shall be forgiven him.

32 And if he bring a lamb for a sin-offering, he shall bring it a female without blemish.

V. 11. The skin and the flesh of the sin-offerings in general were the perquisite of the priests: (7:7, 8, 10, 16, 17.) but when the high-priest offered the sin-offering for himself, or for the congregation, the whole was burnt; as a more effectual expression of the greatness of the offence, and the abhorrence ^{to} which he held it. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12. Thus the guilt was typically conveyed away from the whole congregation, who were otherwise liable to suffer for it.—Christ, who was made sin, or a sin-offering, for us, suffered without the gate of Jerusalem, as bearing away the sin of his people; that when it is sought for, it may nowhere be found.—(Note, Heb. 13:9-14.) This was also expressive of the nature of true repentance, which expels sin with abhorrence, drives it to a distance out of the camp, and refuses to have any thing more to do with it.

Place where the ashes are poured out.] See Note, 6:9-13.

V. 13-21. The sin of the whole congregation required the same expiation as that of the high-priest. By a criminal oversight, or misconception of the law, it might happen, that some prohibition of the ceremonial institutions should be generally violated, and thus become the sin of the nation at large; even when the worship at the sanctuary was regularly maintained, and idolatry carefully shunned: and in this case, when the error was discovered, the national sin-offering was appointed.—The elders (who are distinguished from the congregation) were directed to lay their hands on this sacrifice, as confessing their sin and the sin of the people, and typically laying the guilt upon the animal; not only as the representatives of the nation, but also as the principals in the crime, who had misled the people. It is not said who should lay the sacrifice; but probably this was done by one of the elders, or perhaps of the priests, as the part of the high-priest is separately mentioned. The other ceremonies exactly accord with those of the high-priest's sin-offering.

denotes the head of a tribe; but the Jews understand it to mean the president of the sanhedrim or national council. When the nation had judges, or kings, or any ruler distinct from the high-priest, he, as well as those next under him in authority over the several tribes, would be concerned in this law. Yet the sin-offering to be offered for him, when he discovered his offence, was not only of less value than that appointed for the high-priest or congregation, but it was sacrificed with very different rites: for it was not expected that the civil magistrates should understand the ordinances of religion so well as the high-priests; nor was he so absolutely the representative of the nation before God, as this typical mediator.—As the ruler's sacrifice was a sin-offering of a distinct nature from those before mentioned, it was slain in the same place where the burnt-offerings were; whereas the other sacrifices were killed in any part of the court. Any priest, as far as it appears from the text, might officiate; the blood was not carried into the sanctuary, nor was the body burnt without the camp, but eaten by the priests.

V. 27-35. The sin-offering for one of the people was of something less value than that of the ruler: but it was presented with exactly the same ceremonies. The transgression of the high-priest and that of the whole congregation brought a kind of typical pollution on the interior part of the sanctuary, as endangering the very essence of religion: the blood of the sin-offering was therefore applied to the altar of incense; for without expiation the typical intercession could no longer be accepted. But the sin of the ruler, or of the private Israelite, did not interrupt this important observance; the blood of the sin-offering therefore was only applied to the altar of burnt-offering, that their sacrifices might there be presented with acceptance. We may suppose, that some place was made at the bottom of the altar, to receive and carry away the blood of the victims: and that various methods were used to preserve the court sweet and clean, while so many animals were continually slaughtered in it.—It is observable that the words, “a sweet savour to the LORD,” are added to none of these sin-offerings, but that of the private Israelite; which might imply an encouragement to offenders to present their offerings when conscious of having sinned, though their sin was not known by others; for, though less costly than those appointed for other orders, they would be equally acceptable to God.—In all the cases however it is implied, that the atonement would be accepted, and the offence pardoned.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is evident that God hath never had any infallible vicegerent in his church on earth; for even the high-priest appointed by himself, with Urim and Thummim, who had access to his oracle in the holy place to inquire of him, and the whole church of God under that dispensation, were supposed liable to fall into sins of ignorance, and to sanction by their authority, example, and general usage, such practices as were directly contrary to some of the commandments of God. All pretensions therefore to infallibility, whether in an individual, or in a multitude, are presumptuous usurpations, claims of arrogance, and sure marks of Antichrist.—We are indeed all liable to err, and ignorance is an alleviation of guilt; yet it is not a sufficient excuse: with the Bible in our hands, it is generally the effect of pride, sloth, and inattention; and would be avoided, were we duly anxious to know the truth and the will of God; and our consequent transgressions arise from want of circumspection. We have need therefore to use frequent self-examination, joined with serious perusal of the Scriptures, and earnest prayers for the convincing influences of the Spirit of God, that we may detect our sins of ignorance, in order that we may repent of them, and so obtain forgiveness through the blood of Jesus Christ.—But let us beware of presumptuous sins: for though they also may be forgiven through his all-sufficient sacrifice; yet when they gain the dominion, they often provoke God to leave the offender to final impenitence and unbelief.—They who sustain public characters much more dishonour God and injure others by their sins, than more obscure individuals: they have therefore double need of circumspection, and earnest prayer for the divine teaching and assistance; and they have also a peculiar right to expect a place in the prayers of others, who are all interested in their conduct. This is especially the case of ministers of the gospel, in whom ignorance of God's commandments is peculiarly shameful; to whose sacred character every sin is a direct contradiction; and whose evil examples will operate as a fatal and swift-spreading infection. In all cases public scandals require public confession, however contrary to the pride of our hearts.—Nations, in their political capacity, should, by their rulers, prevent, or punish and purge, our national sins, if they would escape national calamities.—None are so highly advanced in rank, or so sacred by their office, as to be excused from exercising repentance and humiliation before God, or as to have no occasion for the atonement of Christ: and none are so low and inconsiderable, as either to be exempted from the same duties, or excluded from the same advantages. Let us then learn in this way to put away the guilt, the love, and the practice of sin. And let us adopt the language of the Psalmist, “Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins: let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression. Let the words of my mouth, an the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight. O LORD, my Strength and my Redeemer.” Ps. 131:1-14.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1. If a man were adjured, or required upon oath to bear testimony in a court of justice, and did not declare what he knew, though he did not bear positive false witness, he must consider himself as guilty of a great sin; and exposed to punishment from God, however he might escape detection from men.

V. 2, 3. When a man had in any respect contracted ceremonial uncleanness, and had neglected the appointed purification; or had inadvertently attended upon sacred things while thus unclean; he, by his carelessness, contracted guilt before God.

V. 4. This relates to rash oaths and vows which a man was afterwards unable to perform, or which it would have been sinful in him to adhere to.—Of these some instances are referred to in the margin.—The expression, “he shall be guilty in one of these,” is supposed by some to mean, that he who had rashly sworn to do an unlawful thing, must be guilty either of breaking his oath, or of adding sin to sin by keeping it, and would either way need a trespass-offering.

V. 5. Confess.] This implies a voluntary acknowledgment of the offence, from conviction of conscience, previous to a discovery of it by man. Perhaps some punishment would have been awarded, if the offender had been detected before he had made his confession. The typical sacrifices could only exempt the offerer from the temporal effects of his sin, and not purge the conscience from guilt: and the benefit of the efficacious sacrifice of the great Antitype belongs only to those who humbly confess their sins, and seek an interest in it by faith. As this referred equally to the three cases before stated, and was preparatory to a trespass-offering for each, it is plain that all the sacrifices appointed in this chapter were trespass-offerings: yet many expositors are of another opinion.

V. 6. The difference between the sin-offering for the high-priest, or for the whole congregation, and that for the ruler, or for a common Israelite, was briefly noted in the former chapter: and the distinction between the latter sin-offering and the trespass-offering, should here be clearly and precisely stated. Few things have more perplexed commentators; and the discordant, and even opposite sentiments of the most learned and laborious expositors yield little satisfaction, at least to the author's mind.—It is evident on the one hand that the two words, translated sin-offering, and trespass-offering, are often used for each other, as the attentive reader even of the translation may observe; yet, on the other hand, the marginal references show, that these are frequently mentioned as distinct kinds of sacrifice; (Marg. Ref. k;) and indeed the blood of the sin-offering was put on the horns of the altar, while that of the trespass-offering was sprinkled about the altar. (9. 425, 30.) The word (שָׁחַת) rendered “trespass-offering” signifies also trespass, as that rendered “sin-offering” signifies also sin; which is a strong proof that the guilt or exposedness to punishment, was typically translated from the offender to the innocent animal which was to be sacrificed. The root whence it is derived signifies to be guilty, with reference either to actual criminality, or to the consciousness of that criminality; and the same word is used when the prophet says, “Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin,” or a trespass-offering. Is. 53:10. But this does not show the nature of the trespass-offering, or how it differed from the sin-offering.—In general, neither of them were voluntary oblations, as the peace-offerings, and many of the burnt-offerings were: but some of the sin-offerings were appointed at stated seasons, and others were required in particular cases: while all the trespass-offerings were occasional. The sin-offering committed, ^atwo turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, unto the LORD; ^bone for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering.

8 And he shall bring them unto the priest, who shall offer that which is for the sin-offering first, and ^cwring off his head from his neck, but shall not divide ^dit asunder.

9 And he shall ^esprinkle of the blood of the sin-offering upon the side of the altar; and the ^frest of the blood shall be wrung out at the bottom of the altar: it is a sin-offering.

10 And he shall offer the second for a burnt-offering, according to the manner; and the priest shall make an atonement for him for his sin which he hath sinned, and it shall be forgiven him.

11 ^gBut ^hif he be not able to bring two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons; then he that sinned shall bring for his offering ⁱthe tenth part of an ephah of ^jfine flour for a sin-offering; he shall put ^kno oil upon it, neither shall he put ^lany frankincense thereon: ^mfor it is a sin-offering.

12 Then shall he bring it to the priest, and the priest shall take his handful of it, ⁿeven ^oa memorial thereof, and burn ^pit on the altar, ^qaccording to the offerings made by fire unto the LORD: it is a sin-offering.

13 And ^rthe priest shall make an atonement for him, as touching his sin that he hath sinned in one of these, and it shall be forgiven him; and ^sthe remnant ^tshall be the priest's, as a meat-offering.

14 ^uAnd the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 15 ^vIf a soul commit a trespass, and sin through ignorance, ^win the holy things of the LORD; then he shall bring for his trespass, unto the LORD, ^xa ram without blemish out of the flocks, with ^ythy estimation by shekels of silver, after ^zthe shekel of the sanctuary, for a trespass-offering.

16 And he shall ^{aa}make amends for the harm that he hath done in the holy thing, and shall add ^{ab}the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the priest: and the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass-offering, and it shall be forgiven him.

17 And ^{ac}if a soul sin, and commit any of these things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the LORD; ^{ad}though he wist ^{ae}it not, yet is he guilty, ^{af}and shall bear his iniquity.

18 And he shall bring a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, ^{ag}for a trespass-offering unto the priest: and ^{ah}the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his ignorance wherein he erred, and wist ^{ai}it not; and it shall be forgiven him.

19 It is a trespass-offering: he hath certainly ^{aj}trespassed against the LORD.

seems to have been the expiation of offences committed in matters of religion, from a mistake or inadvertency respecting the law. But the trespass-offerings were required for the casual deviations from the ritual law, when known, through inattention or surprise: or for crimes committed against the moral precepts, which implied injustice to men. In short, all the cases, in which trespass-offerings were appointed, may be referred to the following heads: First, Transgressions of the ritual law, by oversight or surprise. When a man discovered his offence in this case, he was required to bring a trespass-offering, as guilty and needing an atonement and forgiveness from God. (2, 3.) The trespass-offering of the leper seems to have been of this nature; for amidst the various and exact rules laid down for his conduct, it could hardly be supposed that he had never once deviated from any of them, at least by oversight; (14:12.) and that required in a particular case of the Nazirite, was evidently of this kind. (Num. 6:9-12.) Secondly, Such as were appointed when a man had violated the moral law, in some particular which was injurious to his neighbour; even if he had sinned wilfully and knowingly, provided some circumstances in the case exempted him from punishment by the magistrate. (Notes, 6:2-7. 19:20-22.) Thirdly, Such as were required, where an inadvertent infringement of a moral precept of the first table, might also prove injurious to man. (Note, 4.) Lastly, Such as were appointed for trespasses inadvertently committed in holy things, which violated both the ritual and moral law, and were a robbery of God and an injustice to the priests. (15-19. Mal. 3:5, 9.)—The burnt-offerings were typical atonements for sin in general, especially against the moral law; but these were superadded on particular occasions.

V. 7-10. The preceding sacrifice was the same as had been appointed for the sin-offering of the common people; and it was offered with the same observances, except that the blood was not put on the horns of the altar. (4:25, 34.) But, as deviations from some or other of the numerous and particular ritual laws would frequently be committed, even where considerable pains had been taken to understand and observe them; it was proper that a less expensive sacrifice should be appointed for the poor, who otherwise might be discouraged from owning their offences, when conscious of them: and the gracious and condescending Lord was pleased to accept two turtle-doves, or young pigeons, from him who could not afford a lamb or a kid. One of these was offered as a sin-offering, and as such was eaten by the priests, (which appointment had a typical meaning, as it will hereafter appear; Note, 10:16-18.) and the other was consumed on the altar, as a trespass-offering; for otherwise no part of the oblation would have been presented immediately to God. Thus the two distinct sacrifices made one trespass-offering; and therefore one dove could not be accepted, as in the case of the voluntary burnt-offerings. (1:14-17.)

V. 11-13. In general, it might have been supposed that two young pigeons, (the smallest animals allowed in sacrifice,) would have been procured, as readily as the oblation here substituted: but circumstances might render it impracticable, at some seasons of the year, for a poor man to procure them; and in this case of necessity, an offering of fine flour would be accepted, when presented with voluntary confession of sin. The tenth part of an ephah was about five pints.—Part of this oblation was burnt on the altar, ^{ag}upon the offerings made by fire unto the LORD, (so the words may more properly be rendered,) as accepted through those oblations; and the rest was eaten by the priests.—No oil or frankincense, which were presented with the voluntary meal-offerings, were brought with this oblation, as it especially expressed the sorrow of the offender, and the sufferings of Christ for sin.

V. 15, 16. When any one had failed of paying the full of his tithes, first-fruits, or other oblations, and had unwittingly kept back any part of the portion which the Lord demanded, or had eaten of the holy things of which none but the priests should eat; he was required, not only to make restitution in standard-money, adding a fifth part to it, but also to offer a ram for a trespass-offering, as soon as he discovered his fraud.—The priest was to estimate the value of that in which the offeror had trespassed: and his estimation must be taken by the offender.

V. 17-19. This case is supposed to differ from the preceding, merely in that the person concerned was not entirely certain whether he had, or had not, committed the trespass. Upon recollection he was led to suspect, that he had eaten, or otherwise used, some portion of that which was allotted to the priests, and which God had forbidden others to partake of; but yet he could not be certain, whether this had actually been the case or not. This construction is gathered from the variety of terms used about it—^{ah}his ignorance wherein he erred, and wist (or knew) it not.—It is therefore called the doubtful-offering. Yet the man must consider himself as guilty, and burdened with the suspected iniquity; till he had brought his trespass-offering, and made restitution, according to the estimation of the priest, though without adding the fifth part. In this doubtful case, let the offender take the safest course, and bring his trespass-offering. This would serve to render the people more circumspect in such things.—As the offences in these latter instances were more complicated, than in those in the former part of the chapter, a more valuable trespass-offering was required.—The offences specified in this chapter, may serve to illustrate the apostle's meaning, when he says, ^{aj}"The law entered, that sin might abound." (Note, Rom. 5:20, 21.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The law of God is so exceedingly broad, the occasions of sin in this wicked world so numerous, and we are so prone to evil, that we have need to fear always, and to pray continually that we may be preserved; to look before us every step in such a perilous path; and to keep a guard on all our senses, members, and faculties; especially on our tongues, which are unruly and mischievous, and the instruments of much iniquity. With a tender conscience and ^{ak}"the heart of flesh," we shall seldom so transact business, form engagements, spend time in company, or even alone, as in God's ordinances, as not to find somewhat upon recollection, which will grieve and humble us: and the true Christian is daily pleading guilty before God, and seeking forgiveness through the blood of Christ, on the account of much better services, than those which others boast of as meritorious.—In infinite condescension the salvation of the gospel is so free, that the poorest penitent is not excluded; and so full, that the most

CHAPTER VI.

The trespass-offering for sins done wilfully, 1-7. The law for the priest respecting the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering, 8-18. The high-priest's meat-offering, 19-33. The law of the sin-offering, 24-30.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 If a soul sin, and commit a trespass against the LORD, and blie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, or in fellowship, or in a thing taken away by violence, or hath deceived his neighbour;

3 Or have found that which was lost, and lieth concerning it, and sweareth falsely; in any of all these that a man doeth, sinning therein:

4 Then it shall be, because he hath sinned and is guilty, that he shall restore that which he took violently away, or the thing which he hath deceitfully gotten, or that which was delivered him to keep, or the lost thing which he found;

5 Or all that about which he hath sworn falsely, he shall even restore it in the principal, and shall add the fifth part more thereto, and give it unto him to whom it appertaineth, in the day of his trespass-offering.

6 And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the LORD, a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation for a trespass-offering, unto the priest.

7 And the priest shall make an atonement for him before the LORD: and it shall be forgiven him, for any thing of all that he hath done, in trespassing therein.

[Practical Observations.]

8 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

9 Command Aaron and his sons, saying, This is the law of the burnt-offering: (it is the burnt-offering, because of the burning upon the altar all night unto the morning, and the fire of the altar shall be burning in it.)

10 And the priest shall put on his linen garment, and his linen breeches shall he put upon his flesh, and take up the ashes which the fire hath consumed, with the burnt-offering on the altar, and he shall put them beside the altar.

11 And he shall put off his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the ashes with out the camp unto a clean place.

12 And the fire upon the altar shall be burning in it, it shall not be put out: and the priest shall burn wood on it every morning, and lay the burnt-offering in order upon it, and he shall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offerings.

13 The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar: it shall never go out.

14 ¶ And this is the law of the meat-offering: the sons of Aaron shall offer it before the LORD, before the altar.

15 And he shall take of it his handful, of the flour of the meat-offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincense which is upon the meat-offering, and shall burn it upon the altar, for a sweet savour, even the memorial of it unto the LORD.

16 And the remainder thereof shall Aaron and his sons eat: with unleavened bread shall it be eaten in the holy place: in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they shall eat it.

17 It shall not be baken with leaven: I have given it unto them for their portion of my offerings made by fire: it is most holy, as is the sin-offering, and as the trespass-offering.

18 All the males among the children of Aaron shall eat of it: it shall be a statute for ever in your generations concerning the offerings of the LORD made by fire: every one that toucheth them shall be holy.

19 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

20 This is the offering of Aaron and of his sons, which they shall offer unto the LORD, in the day when he is anointed: the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat-offering perpetual, burdened conscience here finds complete relief; yet is the evil of sin so displayed, as to fill pardoned sinners with abhorrence and dread of it; seeing that the not least transgression can be forgiven, but through the agonizing death of the great Emmanuel. They therefore, whose sins are indeed forgiven, will walk circumspectly, and be frequently examining their hearts and lives; and when they but suspect evil, they will have recourse to this one great atonement. They will be careful to bear no false witness, and to withhold no required information; to avoid rash oaths, and carelessness in the performance of their vows and engagements; and to render to God, to the king, and to every one, their due; and should they after all discover that they have failed, they will scrupulously make ample restitution to their utmost ability, acknowledge their fault without extenuation, and seek forgiveness both of God and of the injured party.

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 2-7. These verses, as they relate to a trespass-offering, would have been more properly annexed to the preceding chapter: and they are so in the Hebrew. The various offences specified in them were directly and wilfully injurious to man; but they were also trespasses against God, both in themselves, and as in some of them a false oath had been taken. "Because he hath sinned, and is guilty;" that is, he is conscious of his sin, and willing to acknowledge it. If the offender had been convicted, he would have been exposed to punishment by the magistrate; and must, in some of the cases, have made larger restitution to the injured person; but as he voluntarily confessed his crime, which seemed to imply repentance, he was only required to add a fifth part of the value of the defraud or robbery, according to the valuation of the priest, and give it to the injured person: he must, however, also bring a trespass-offering to the LORD. This was evidently intended to show, that disobedience to God is the great evil, even of those crimes which are injurious to man; and that repentance and works meet for repentance, though needful in order to forgiveness, cannot atone for sin, which can only be expiated by the blood of Christ, and pardoned through faith in his name.—Some explain the priest's estimation, as relating to the value of the ram, which was to be greater or less according to the degree of the offence.

V. 8-13. In the preceding part of this book, Moses was directed to instruct the people concerning several of the sacrifices to be brought by them: but here he was ordered to command the priests, respecting some particulars of their official services.—It is generally thought, that the stated evening burnt-offering was laid on the altar by pieces, so as to continue burning during the whole night, till the time of the morning burnt-offering; which was consumed more speedily, at least when other sacrifices were brought, in order to make room for them. This, however, is not deducible from the text; but only that the fire must be kept in during the night, as well as the day, and never be permitted to go out. As soon as the priests and the tabernacle were fully consecrated, the fire on the altar was kindled from heaven; and it must not be suffered to go out, and then be replaced by ordinary fire.—From this law and some report of this custom in Israel, it is probable, that the gentiles derived their sacred perpetual fires, which were very common in different nations: but they did not understand that this fire was an intended type of the eternal avenging justice of God, and the perpetual efficacy of Christ's all-sufficient atonement.—In order to keep the fire clear and pure, directions were also given concerning the ashes of the flesh and wood consumed on the altar: and, as whatever touched it was relatively holy, the priests in their sacred garments must remove them; and then put off their priestly vestments, to carry these ashes out of the camp to a clean place in the ordinary garments of Israelites. Probably, after the Levites were set apart, and given to Aaron and his sons, they performed this as well as other menial services about the sanctuary.

V. 14-18. (Notes, 2.) Many of the oblations were intended as a provision for the families of the priests: but the meat-offerings were most holy, and must therefore be eaten with, or as, unleavened bread, by the priests alone, and their male children, who were priests by birth, though not yet of age to officiate.—The priests were types of Christ; and the command that they should eat these meat-offerings and sin-offerings, seems to have intimated, that they would typically bear and expiate the sins of the people, and that they should take pleasure in their work. (Marg. Ref.)—The clause, "Every one that toucheth them shall be holy," implies that the priests must not eat of these oblations, when under any ceremonial defilement; and, as some think, that all the utensils used about them must be holy, and not be emoloy'd in any other way.

half of it in the morning and half thereof at night.

21 In a pan it shall be made with oil, and when it is baken, thou shalt bring it in: and the baken pieces of the meat-offering shalt thou offer for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

22 And the priest of his sons, that is anointed in his stead, shall offer it: it is a statute for ever unto the LORD, it shall be wholly burnt.

23 For every meat-offering for the priest shall be wholly burnt; it shall not be eaten.

24 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

25 Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, saying, This is the law of the sin-offering: in the place where the burnt-offering is killed, shall the sin-offering be killed before the LORD: it is most holy.

26 The priest that offereth it for sin shall eat it: in the holy place shall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation.

27 Whatsoever shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy: and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou shalt wash it: whereon it was sprinkled in the holy place.

28 But the earthen vessel wherein it is sodden shall be broken: and if it be sodden in a brazer, pot, it shall be both scoured, and rinsed in water.

V. 20-23. This oblation seems to have been required of the high-priest alone, "on the day in which he was anointed," and from that time, every morning and evening as long as he continued in the office; and then in like manner of his successor: for, by the sins of Aaron may be understood, his descendants and successors in the high priesthood, in their generations. Perhaps the words, "anointed in his stead," may signify, not only the person who succeeded to the high priesthood, when the high-priest died, but also the next in succession, as anointed to officiate in his stead, while living, should any thing incapacitate him.—The whole of this meat-offering, when duly prepared, was consumed on the altar, probably being laid upon the daily burnt-offering by the priest who officiated: and neither of this prescribed oblation, nor of the voluntary meat-offerings of the priests, must any part be eaten; but the whole must be dedicated to the Lord.—The priests typically bore and expiated the sins of the people, but they could not actually atone for them: they therefore, in respect of their own sacrifices, and some others, ate no part, but burnt the whole; which was a typical translation of the guilt from themselves and the people to Christ and his sacrifice, who actually bore and expiated them.—This meat-offering might also represent, that the best duties and services, even of the high-priest himself, could be accepted only through the great Antitype: and that he and his brethren must, nevertheless, daily abound in good works and in personal religion, in the most devoted and disinterested manner.

V. 25-29. The sin-offerings for the ruler, or for individuals, were slain where the burnt-offerings were. The priest who officiated had for his perquisite the whole carcass, on which he and his sons, and any other of the priests whom he invited, might feast in the court of the tabernacle, during the day on which it was sacrificed. But none might touch the flesh of it, except such as were holy persons, and free from ceremonial defilement: and, if the garment of the offerer or any other person was sprinkled with the blood, it must be washed in the court of the tabernacle: nay, when the flesh was sodden in an earthen vessel, which was porous and might retain some part of it, the vessel must be broken: and even a brazen one must be carefully scoured and washed. This shows that all the oblations were sodden or boiled; and none roasted, except the paschal lamb in the houses of the Israelites.—All these regulations were calculated to express the polluting nature of sin, and the translation of guilt from the sinner to the sacrifice; yet so that it was not actually taken away, but in some sense adhered to them: and they denoted that a more efficacious sacrifice was represented by them.—They might also intimate, that no one must pretend to any share with Christ in atoning for sin; that none but the spiritual priesthood, which is separated from the world and sin, and truly devoted to God, have any real benefit from the sacrifice of Christ, or truly feed upon him in their hearts; and that his atonement becomes to many an occasion of additional guilt and deeper condemnation, through their contempt or perversion of it: but that the youngest and most infirm believer is as certainly interested in this salvation, as the most mature and established, though not honoured with so much usefulness.

V. 30. (Note, 4:12.) This is an additional law concerning the sin-offerings for the high-priest, or the whole congregation: and it was also a general rule for the stated sin-offerings. These seem to have been a more explicit type of Christ's suffering without Jerusalem, as devoted to a death pronounced accursed in the law, than any other of the Mosaic institutions: while the priest at the same time carrying the blood into the sanctuary, applying it to the golden altar, and sprinkling it before the veil, most aptly represented the Redeemer rising, ascending, and appearing in the presence of God for us; and, in virtue of his atonement and by his intercession, rendering both our persons and services accepted.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. It is impossible to enumerate all the various methods, in which men, prompted by covetousness, have contrived unjustly to appropriate their neighbour's property. Human laws must indeed discriminate as to punishments, with reference to the welfare of the community: but all these methods of injustice are alike violations of the divine law; (not excepting the case of keeping what is found, when the owner can be ascertained;) and they are generally accompanied with lies, and frequently with perjury.—Would the offender, therefore, escape the vengeance of God, (though he be not exposed to punishment from man,) he must both make ample restitution, if in his power, and seek forgiveness, by faith in that one offering which taketh away the sin of the world.—Confession of sin makes no satisfaction to justice: our municipal laws, therefore, do not require the offender to plead guilty, or to criminate himself, nor will it avail for the mitigation of his sentence; and the case is the same in respect of the law and justice of God. But, before his mercy-seat, that man alone who ingenuously confesses his sin, and condemns himself, obtains the benefit of Christ's satisfaction, the free forgiveness of all sin, and the full comfort of it. Our God approves of that state of heart which produces this conduct, as right and reasonable in a sinner: and no one, who is unfeignedly of a contrite spirit, will either depend on anything for forgiveness, but free mercy through the blood of Christ, or wilfully continue in sin, or fail to bring forth the fruits meet for repentance.

V. 8-30. The efficacy of the priesthood and mediation of Christ is perpetual, and we can never approach to God in his name, by day or by night, unseasonably: thus should the fire of our holy affections, the exercise of our faith and love, of prayer and praise, be constant and without ceasing also; and we should be watchful and unwearied in well-doing. The true ministers of Christ especially should have the fire of their zeal constantly burning, and their spiritual sacrifices ascending; being "instant in season and out of season," in their important work; without sloth, weariness, or dissipation, with all reverence and exactness; and not deeming the meanest service beneath them or admitting of a careless performance.—Such ministers, though they need continual forgiveness themselves, will yet be very useful in bringing men to repent, to seek and find forgiveness, and to become "zealous of good works;" and they alone have a well-grounded claim to be maintained from the sanctuary. But they will also be the last persons to be peremptory in their demands of this nature, to be discontented with their provision, or attentive to their own interest or indulgence. Rather they will make it their study to convince the people that they "seek not theirs, but them;" that they would far rather promote their sanctification, than profit by their sins; and that they desire to be examples to the flock, in practising what they preach, in foregoing their just claims, and in seeking the glory of God and the good of souls, even when their diligence meets with no recompense, or a very ungrateful return, from man. Above all, they will teach the people, both by word and deed, to shun the defilement of sin, to treat sacred things with serious regard, to reverence the atoning blood of Christ, and in a holy manner to apply its benefits; not thence taking encouragement to sin, but deducing powerful motives for devoted obedience unto God. May the Lord send forth many such labourers into his harvest, for the honour of Jesus, the great Head of the Church!

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1-13. In the case of the sin-offering and the trespass-offering, the whole sacrifice was 4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul that is above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away.

5 And the priests shall burn them upon the altar, for an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is a trespass-offering.

6 Every male among the priests shall eat thereof: it shall be eaten in the holy place: it is most holy.

7 As the sin-offering is, so is the trespass-offering: there is one law for them: the priest that maketh atonement therewith shall have it.

8 And the priest that offereth any man's burnt-offering, even the priest shall have to himself the skin of the burnt-offering which he hath offered.

9 And all the meat-offering that is baken in the oven, and all that is dressed in the frying-pan, and in the pan, shall be the priest's that offereth it.

10 And every meat-offering mingled with oil, and dry, shall all the sons of Aaron have, one as much as another.

11 ¶ And this is the law of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which he shall offer unto the Lord.

12 If he offer it for a thanksgiving, then he shall offer with the sacrifice of thanksgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and cakes mingled with oil, of fine flour, fried.

13 Besides the cakes, he shall offer for his offering leavened bread, with the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace-offerings.

14 And of it he shall offer one out of the whole oblation, for an heave-offering unto the Lord, and it shall be the priest's that sprinkleth the blood of the peace-offerings.

15 And the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving shall be eaten the same day that it is offered: he shall not leave any of it until the morning.

16 But if the sacrifice of his offering be a vow, or a voluntary offering, it shall be eaten the same day that he offereth his sacrifice: and on the morrow also the remainder of it shall be eaten.

17 But the remainder of the flesh of the sacrifice, on the third day shall be burnt with fire.

18 And if any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings be eaten at all on the third day, it shall not be accepted, neither shall it be imputed unto him that offereth it: it shall be an abomination, and the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity.

19 And the flesh, that toucheth any unclean thing, shall not be eaten, it shall be burnt with fire: and as for the flesh, all that be clean shall eat thereof.

20 But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of the peace-offerings, that pertain unto the Lord, having his uncleanness upon him, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

21 Moreover, the soul that shall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanness of man, or any unclean beast, or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings which pertain unto the Lord, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

22 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 23 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Ye shall eat no manner of fat, of ox, or of sheep, or of goat.

24 And the fat of the beast that dieth of itself, and the fat of that which is torn with beasts, may be used in any other use: but ye shall in nowise eat of it.

25 For whosoever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, even the soul that eateth it, shall be cut off from his people.

26 Moreover, ye shall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl or of beast, in any of your dwellings.

27 Whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people.

28 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

29 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, He that offereth the sacrifice of his peace-offering divided between the altar and the priest; and the offerer had no share in it, as he had in the peace-offerings. The former was an expression of repentance and sorrow for sin, and was therefore more properly accompanied by fasting than by feasting, but feasting was very suitable to the occasions of the peace-offerings, which denoted communion with a reconciled God in Christ, the joy and gratitude of a pardoned sinner, and the privileges and cheerful services of a believer. The remembrance of sin is never pleasant to a true Christian; but the remembrance of the former kindnesses of God, and his answers to prayer, and the expectation of future benefits, always are so.—The priest, who offered the sacrifice, in some cases, had all that was not burnt for his own perquisite, which would encourage and recompense a constant attendance. In other cases all the priests shared alike, which might forward friendly intercourse and fellowship with each other. The skin belonged to the priest who offered the sacrifice; 'that is,' say the Jewish writers with considerable probability, 'the skins of sacrifices brought by individuals; while those of the public sacrifices were sold to defray the expenses of repairing the tabernacle.'

V. 12—14. Besides the different kinds of unleavened cakes and wafers brought with other sacrifices, leavened bread was presented with the peace-offerings for mercies received; for a thankful, cheerful meal was intended, and such bread was usual at feasts. One loaf or cake of this bread was presented to the Lord as a heave-offering, and eaten by the priest; but none was burnt on the altar. (Note, 2:11.)

V. 15—18. In the prohibition of any part of the sacrifices being kept unto the third day, when it would begin to putrefy, there might be a reference to Christ, who rose again in about the same time, and saw no corruption. But, more evidently, the Israelites were thus cautioned against procrastination in rendering thanks, in paying vows, or in seeking spiritual blessings; against superstition; and against distrust and covetousness. And they were taught to use hospitality to their friends and to the poor, without grudging; for, if they spared, they only spared for the fire; except they would, by disobedience, prevent the acceptance of their sacrifices, and even render it an abomination.—The thank-offering must be entirely eaten on the same day on which it was sacrificed: for we should especially make haste, when recent mercies have excited our gratitude, to express it by fervent thanksgivings; and the Lord's kindness to us should peculiarly enlarge our hearts in bounty to our brethren.—If these laws were wilfully broken, the offender would "bear his iniquity;" nor was any sacrifice appointed: but an inadvertent violation of them must be expiated by a trespass-offering.

V. 20. Cut off from his people. We find no rule or example, leading to suppose that this was a law, which the priest or the civil magistrate was empowered to execute, either by solemn excommunication, or by death. It seems rather to have been an awful denunciation of divine vengeance. The offenders would deserve, and might expect, to be cut off by some immediate judgment of God; and no sacrifice was appointed to expiate their guilt. (Marg. Ref. k.)

V. 25—27. (Note, 3:17.) The prohibition of the fat, or suet, was restricted to such animals as were offered in sacrifice; but that of the blood was extended to all kinds of land animals. The former taught reverence to the altar and ordinances of God; but the latter had especial respect to the atoning blood of Christ.

V. 29—34. The offerer was required, with his own hands to bring these parts of the sacrifice to the priest, that the oblation of them might appear his own voluntary action. The breast, (which seems to have included the whole of what is at present, in cutting up slaughtered animals, divided into the two breasts,) having been solemnly waved to and fro, as ings unto the LORD, shall bring his oblation unto the LORD, of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings.

30 His own hands shall bring the offerings of the LORD made by fire; the fat with the breast, it shall he bring, that the breast may be waved for a wave-offering before the LORD.

31 And the priest shall burn the fat upon the altar; but the breast shall be Aaron's and his sons'.

32 And the right shoulder shall ye give unto the priest for an heave-offering, of the sacrifices of your peace-offerings.

33 He among the sons of Aaron, that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings and the fat, shall have the right shoulder for his part.

34 For the wave-breast and the heave-shoulder have I taken of the children of Israel, from off the sacrifices of their peace-offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the priest, and unto his sons, by a statute for ever, from among the children of Israel.

35 This is the portion of the anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his sons, out of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, in the day when he presented them, to minister unto the LORD in the priest's office;

36 Which the LORD commanded to be given them of the children of Israel, in the day that he anointed them, by a statute for ever, throughout their generations.

37 This is the law of the burnt-offering, of the meat-offering, and of the sin-offering, and of the trespass-offering, and of the consecrations, and of the sacrifice of the peace-offerings;

38 Which the LORD commanded Moses in mount Sinai, in the day that he commanded the children of Israel to offer their oblations unto the LORD, in the wilderness of Sinai.

devoted to God, was eaten by the priests in general: but the right shoulder, having been heaved upwards, as in like manner given to the Lord, was the perquisite of the officiating priest. This might intimate, that as Christ, with his whole heart and all his power, serves the interest of his Church, so ought the priests to serve God and the congregation. (Note, Ex. 29:22-28.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The faithful ministers of religion will indeed readily forego their own interest or indulgence, for the glory of God and the good of souls: yet it should be noticed, what ample provision God himself of old made for them; and that in proportion to their diligent attendance at his courts. And we have no reason to suppose from the New Testament, that he would now have them doomed to indigence; or that those persons do their duty, who live in plenty, and permit them to continue in perplexing straits: while the more willing any of them are "to suffer all things, rather than hinder the gospel of Christ," the more inexcusable are those, who allow them to be losers by their disinterestedness.—Every thing is beautiful in its season: there is a time, when the Lord calls to weeping and fasting, and a time when thankful joy admits of festivity: indeed, godly sorrow for sin, and believing meditation upon the Saviour's bitter sufferings, prepare for feasting upon his spiritual provisions, and rejoicing in his holy comfort. The infinite sufficiency which is in Christ, furnishes a plenteous feast for all even the vilest sinners, who accept of his gracious invitations: the true believer therefore longs for all around him, yea, for the whole world, to share with him in his felicity. And the same principle, counteracting natural selfishness, covetousness, and distrust, and inspiring gratitude and confidence in God, as well as good-will to man, will enlarge his heart to liberality in temporal things, and render him willing to communicate, and ready to distribute. Nor is any one a loser by so doing: rather they are losers indeed, who are of a contrary spirit; as they lose the blessing of God upon their substance, and the comfortable enjoyment of it; together with the acceptance and benefit of their religious services. For whatever professions may be made of repentance, faith, love, or holy joy: if the heart be leavened with allowed covetousness or malice, or absorbed in selfishness, every religious performance will be deemed an abomination; and the self-deceived wretch, who thus presents it, will be exposed to the awful wo of "bearing his own iniquity."—Delays often cause good purposes and holy affections to wear off without effect; and we frequently lose the benefit of divine ordinances, by improperly conducting ourselves after them.—To approach the throne of grace, or the Lord's table, unclean through unrepented sin; or in proud contempt and careless neglect of the cleansing blood of Christ, and the sanctifying influences of his Spirit; is an awful presumption, and will be terribly punished, except it be repented of; yet, on such services do multitudes depend to atone for their sins, and to merit everlasting life! But indeed any presumptuous sin, unless truly repented of, must exclude a man from every well-grounded expectation of divine favour, and expose him to awful vengeance. "Let us therefore have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear; for our God is a consuming fire."—For the honour of God, and for an example to others, we should, in some cases, be as explicit as possible in our profession of faith, and in dedicating ourselves and all we have to the Lord; and we ought at all times to do his will, seek his glory, and serve his people, after the example of Christ, with our whole heart and soul. Thus performing the work that he assigns us, we may thankfully receive the portion which he allots us; and be satisfied that, whatever treatment we meet with from man, he will both graciously supply our wants, and accept of our endeavours; while with joyful hope we look forward to the period when he will "present us faultless before the presence of his glory, with exceeding joy."

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 2. This consecration of Aaron and his sons had been prescribed some time before, but was delayed until the tabernacle had been prepared, and the laws of the several sacrifices given. (Notes, Ex. 29:1-37.)

V. 3-5. The congregation was assembled, that they might witness the consecration of Aaron and his sons; and be impressed with the conviction that they had not intruded themselves into this important office, but were called to it by JEHOVAH himself.

V. 6-14. Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 29:1-12. V. 15. The beginning of this verse may be rendered, "And Moses slew it, and took the blood, &c." We find it expressly said in Exodus, that Moses slew these sacrifices (Ex. 29:1.) yet, in general, the offerer seems to have killed his own sacrifice. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1:5-9.)

vessels, both the laver and his foot, to sanctify them.

12 And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head; and anointed him to sanctify him.

13 And Moses brought Aaron's sons, and put coats upon them, and girded them with girdles, and put bonnets upon them; as the Lord commanded Moses.

14 ¶ And he brought the bullock for the sin-offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the sin-offering.

15 And he slew it, and Moses took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger, and purified the altar; and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and sanctified it, to make reconciliation upon it.

16 And he took all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moses burned it upon the altar.

17 But the bullock and his hide, his flesh and his dung, he burnt with fire without the camp; as the Lord commanded Moses.

18 ¶ And he brought the ram for the burnt-offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

19 And he killed it, and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

20 And he cut the ram into pieces, and Moses burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat.

21 And he washed the inwards and the legs in water; and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt-sacrifice for a sweet savour, and an offering made by fire unto the Lord; as the Lord commanded Moses.

22 ¶ And he brought the other ram, the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram.

23 And he slew it, and Moses took of the blood of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

24 And he brought Aaron's sons, and Moses put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet: and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about.

25 And he took the fat, and the rump, and the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat and the right shoulder.

26 And out of the basket of unleavened bread, that was before the Lord, he took one unleavened cake, and a cake of oiled bread, and one wafer, and put them on the fat, and upon the right shoulder.

27 And he put all upon Aaron's hands, and upon his sons' hands, and waved them for a wave-offering before the Lord.

28 And Moses took them from off their hands, and burnt them on the altar, upon the burnt-offering: they were consecrations for a sweet savour: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

29 And Moses took the breast, and waved it for a wave-offering before the Lord: for of the ram of consecration it was Moses's part; as the Lord commanded Moses.

30 And Moses took of the anointing oil, and of the blood which was upon the altar, and sprinkled it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon his sons' garments, with him: and sanctified Aaron and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.

31 And Moses said unto Aaron, and to his sons, Boil the flesh at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and there eat it with the bread that is in the basket of consecrations, as I commanded, saying, Aaron and his sons shall eat it.

32 And that which remaineth of the flesh and of the bread, shall ye burn with fire.

33 And ye shall not go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in seven days, until the days of your consecration be at an end: for seven days shall he consecrate you.

34 As he hath done this day, so the Lord hath commanded to do, to make an atonement for you.

35 Therefore shall ye abide at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, day and night seven days, and keep the charge of the Lord, that ye die not: for so I am commanded.

36 So Aaron and his sons did all things which the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses.

V. 16-21. Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 29:13-18.

V. 22-24. The sin-offering implied that Aaron and his sons deserved to have their blood shed; and, after death, to be made a sacrifice to the offended justice of God; instead of being able to bear and atone for the sins of the people, and being honoured as intercessors for them, and typical representatives of the Saviour. The burnt-offering denoted, that, being pardoned and accepted through the atonement of Christ, they willingly and thankfully dedicated themselves without reserve, to be consecrated unto God for this sacred ministry. The ram of consecration was their peace-offering; and represented that, as reconciled unto God, they had fellowship with him, and delighted in his service and in being wholly employed in it; that he would accept and honour their services and ministrations; that they were thankful for past and present benefits, and confided in him for future sufficiency and acceptance. Accordingly, the several laws prescribed in the foregoing chapters were observed by Moses, the officiating priest; with only such additions and variations, as had a peculiar reference to their entire separation to God for the work of the priesthood. (Note, Ex. 29:19-21.)

V. 25-32. Moses, as the priest, had the breast, and Aaron and his sons the remainder, except the right shoulder, which was laid on the altar with the fat. This, in all other peace-offerings, belonged to the officiating priest: but, as Moses was the only priest till Aaron and his sons were fully consecrated, and as the whole breast belonged to him; so it seems to have been appointed on this occasion, that the shoulder should be laid on the altar, rather than left to be burnt with the residue in some other place, according to the law of the peace-offerings. (Note, Ex. 29:22-28.)

V. 33-35. During seven days, Aaron and his sons abode constantly at the door of the tabernacle, not being yet allowed to enter into it. We may suppose, that such accommodations were provided for them as were necessary: but it seems that they watched, at least by turns, day and night all the while. On each of these days, a sin-offering, a burnt-offering, and a peace-offering of consecration, were sacrificed, with exactly the same ceremonies as on the first day, and they were expressly warned, that it would be at the peril of their lives, if they neglected to observe the commands given them. All this was suited to show the inefficacy of these oblations and purifications: and that they were only "shadows of good things to come."—One sabbath must have occurred during the time of their consecration; perhaps it was on the last day of the seven: and it has been observed, that the Lord Jesus, our great High-Priest, came to Jerusalem and to the temple, on the day after the sabbath, and five days before the passover, which he spent in labours and watchings, and was crucified on the sixth day; then he rested on the sabbath-day, and arose the next morning, as having fully completed his consecration.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In these types we see our great High-Priest, as solemnly appointed, anointed, and invested in his sacred office; and, by his own blood, and the influences of his Holy Spirit, sanctifying the ordinances of religion to the benefit of his people; and to the honour of God, who, for his sake, accepts our worship, though we are sinners and our services polluted with sin. We may also rejoice that he, though free from sin himself, yet, "having suffered being tempted" is "a merciful and faithful High-Priest," full of tender compassion to the feeble-minded and tempest-tossed soul; and that, having finished his consecration and sacrifices upon earth as our perfect High-Priest, he "for ever appears in the presence of God for us." But when these heavenly things we see shadowed forth in the persons and priesthood of men; what care was taken to show that they were not appointed, for any worthiness of such an honour, or capacity for such a service, in themselves, when they were not admitted to appear before God, except through the shedding of the blood, and the burning of the bodies, of so many innocent and useful animals; through repeated washings, sprinklings, and anointings, with change of garments, and every observance which could mark them in themselves to be guilty and polluted in his sight, and show that they defiled all they touched! Surely this was intended to lead the people to expect a nobler priesthood, better sacrifices, and a more effectual atonement and intercession: and we must be blind indeed, yea, willingly ignorant, if it do not teach us, that nothing can atone for sin, or render a sinner accepted of God, but the righteousness, blood, and intercession of the holy Jesus, our great High-Priest; which are always accompanied with his sanctifying grace poured into every believer's heart.—Doubtless, when Aaron offered his sin-offering, he would remember, with mixed humiliation, admiration, and gratitude, his recent transgression in making the golden calf, and the Lord's forgiveness of it; and would acknowledge that he deserved himself to be made a sacrifice to offended justice with those who perished, instead of being appointed to so honourable an office. This would teach him lowliness of mind, and compassion and tenderness to other poor sinners, seeing "he himself was so compassed with infirmity." Thus was "boasting excluded;" the whole glory given to God, and a preparation made for Aaron's properly bearing the honour of the priesthood, and performing its duties. In like manner, our God prepares his true ministers for their office: he teaches them the knowledge of him and of themselves; he convinces them of their guilt and sinfulness, and brings them to a simple dependence on Christ for every thing needful for their own salvation. Thus they learn to consider themselves as no better than the vilest sinners; except as the Lord hath made them to differ, by interesting them in the Redeemer's sacrifice, washing them in his blood, arraying their souls in his righteousness, and anointing them with his grace. Whilst they feed upon his spiritual provision, and are happy in communion with him; and whilst their hearts are fraught with love to Christ, and compassion for their fellow-sinners: they are prepared and qualified for the work, and disposed to "give themselves wholly to it;" and to be constant, persevering, tender, and affectionate in it; and they are made willing to forego all personal considerations, that they may point out the Saviour to perishing sinners, and assist the spiritual sacrifices of believers, to the glory of God and to the salvation of souls.—But, indeed, all true Christians are consecrated to be spiritual priests: and we should seriously ask ourselves, whether we are conscious of such a consecration, as "bought with a price, to glorify God, in body and spirit which are his?" whether we are partakers of this washing, anointing, and arraying in the robes of righteousness and salvation? whether in our daily walk we study to maintain the honour of the priestly character? and whether we abound in "spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ?" If so, let us not despise, disdain, or despair of our fellow-sinners; but, remembering what we have done, and how we are saved, let us seek and pray for their salvation too. Yet at last, our whole life, after our conversion, is only a week of consecration, as God's priests, to offer up spiritual sacrifices in his courts above, throughout an eternal sabbath. Let us then improve our present opportunity, wait with patience and perseverance, and cheerfully expect this high and everlasting honour.

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. 1-7. On the eighth day, after the consecration of Aaron and his sons had begun, Aaron was directed to enter on his sacerdotal ministrations: but though so many sin-offerings had been brought, and so many solemn rites of purification had been exactly observed; his first oblation must be another sin-offering for himself! As, however, no particular offence was to be expiated, but merely the defects of his preceding services, a calf of the first year, instead of a young bullock, was appointed; yet some think that he was thus reminded of his sin, in making the golden calf.—After offering this and his own burnt-offering, the next sacrifice was a sin-offering for the people; not a young bullock, as required for any special transgression, but a kid of the goats as on the great day of atonement. After this sin-offering and burnt-offering of the people had been sacrificed, peace-offerings were added, on which they might feast before God: but, as the priests would have a part of the oblations brought by the people, they presented no peace-offering. During the preceding days, there had been no peculiar discoveries of the divine presence or glory; and the sacrifices seem to have been offered with common fire, as on former occasions: but now, in honour of Aaron's typical priesthood, and to sanction what had been done, the Lord intended to display his presence and glory, and the people must therefore prepare to meet him.

V. 8-11. It seems evident from the narrative, that Aaron personally (though assisted by his sons) slew his own sacrifices; and also those of the people as their representative, though perhaps the elders assisted in this part of the service. The Levites were not yet set apart for their work; and the most laborious part of such offices afterwards devolved on them, or on the Nethinims. On this occasion, however, Aaron and his sons took the lead, as well in killing and preparing the sacrifices, as in burning the sin-offerings. It does not appear that the blood, either of the sin-offerings described in the preceding chapter, or of this for Aaron, was brought into the sanctuary: yet the bodies were burned without the camp. The priests ate the sin-offerings of the people, as typically bearing their iniquity; but they could not bear their own sin; and therefore they ate no part of any sin-offerings sacrificed for themselves, but the whole was carried forth out of the camp, as taken quite away by Christ the great Antitype.

V. 12-14. It is not certain, whether these burnt-offerings, and the fat of the other sacrifices, were consumed by common fire, as on the former days; or only laid in readiness, till the fire from the Lord fell and consumed the whole.

V. 15. Aaron prepared the sin-offering of the people as he had his own; but it is not certain, whether it was then burnt without the camp, or afterwards on the altar. It ought not to have been burnt at all, but eaten by him and his sons. (Notes, 10:16-20.)

V. 17. Beside the burnt-sacrifice, &c.] It is probable, that from the first setting up of the altar, Moses had offered on it the morning and evening sacrifice of a lamb for a burnt 16 And he brought the burnt-offering, and offered it according to the manner.

17 And he brought the meat-offering, and took an handful thereof, and burnt it upon the altar, beside the burnt-sacrifice of the morning.

18 He slew also the bullock and the ram, for a sacrifice of peace-offerings which was for the people: and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled upon the altar round about,

19 And the fat of the bullock, and of the ram, the rump, and that which covereth the inwards, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver.

20 And they put the fat upon the breasts, and he burnt the fat upon the altar:

21 And the breasts and the right shoulder Aaron waved for a wave-offering, before the Lord; as Moses commanded.

22 And Aaron lifted up his hand towards the people, and blessed them: and came down from offering of the sin-offering, and the burnt-offering, and peace-offerings.

offering; and accordingly, it had been offered on the morning of this memorable day.

V. 22, 23. When Aaron had finished his sacred work at the altar, he blessed the people before he left the place: that is, he prayed for them, pronounced a blessing on them in the name of God, and encouraged their hopes of the divine acceptance in their services. This seems to have been always considered as a part of his priestly office; and orders are afterwards given about it. (Notes, Num. 6:23-27.) He then came down; (for the altar seems to have been rather raised above the rest of the court;) and he entered into the tabernacle with Moses, who doubtless directed him how to perform the appointed services there, as he had before shown him how to order the sacrifices at the altar. Then they both united in again blessing the people; and, while thus employed, the divine glory appeared resplendent from the cloud, resting on the tabernacle, and probably filling it; which denoted the Lord's acceptance of it for his typical dwelling-place in Israel.

V. 24. This fire came forth from the visible glory before mentioned. Perhaps the former sacrifices had already been consumed, and the latter had been placed upon the altar; when fire from before the Lord rapidly consumed them. This fire was afterwards long preserved upon the altar. By this token the Lord signified his acceptance of the vicarious atonement; as the fire which represented his righteous vengeance consumed the sacrifice and spared the sinners. On witnessing this awful, but probably expected scene, the people shouted with exultation, and prostrated themselves in adoring worship.—Thus, our sins having been laid upon Christ, and divine justice satisfied by his atonement, mercy is extended and grace given to every true believer. (Marg. Ref. g.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

After the example of Aaron and his sons, and of him whom Aaron typified, the ministers of Christ should consider their ordination as "filling their hands;" and without delay enter upon their important business: for he that properly desires that office, desires not honour, profit, ease, or pleasure, but "a good work;" so that, without waiting to receive even the congratulation of his friends, he should set about it; and not deem any thing, which is honourable to God, or useful to the Church, or to a single individual, too laborious, mean, or disgusting. He should also first take heed to himself; and be careful that his public ministrations do not interrupt his personal religion, and the care of his own soul. And all persons should remember, that the exercise of repentance, faith, and devotedness to God, and communion with him in his ordinances, is not merely the work of a few days, at the commencement of a religious profession, but the daily business of the believer's whole life.—Words can never express the energy, with which these multiplied sacrifices, all at once superseded by the death of Christ, mark the insufficiency of all other atonements, and the efficacy of his "one offering of himself;" and teach us that our best services need washing in his blood; and that the guilt of our best sacrifices needs expiating by one more pure and noble than they. Let us then be thankful that "we have such a High-Priest over the House of God," who hath no sin of his own to atone for, and who, by his "one oblation of himself once offered," hath 23 And Moses and Aaron went into the tabernacle of the congregation, and came out and blessed the people: and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people.

24 And there came a fire out from before the Lord, and consumed upon the altar the burnt-offering, and the fat: which when all the people saw, they shouted and fell on their faces.

CHAPTER X.

Nadab and Abihu, burning incense with strange fire, are consumed by fire from the Lord, 1, 2. Moses shows the reason of this judgment, and orders their burial; while Aaron holds his peace, 3-6. Aaron and his other sons are forbidden to mourn, 6, 7; and are prohibited from drinking wine, or strong drink, when going into the sanctuary, 8-11. Moses gives directions about eating the holy things, 12-15. A mistake is discovered about the people's sin-offering; Moses reproves the priests, and Aaron excuses it, 16-20.

AND Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer, and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not.

3 Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the Lord spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified. And Aaron held his peace.

fully atoned for the sins of all his people. Having offered his sacrifice, and being risen from the dead, he blessed his church before he entered the holy place, to appear in the presence of God, and to make intercession for us: (Note, Luke 24:50-53.) whence he will shortly come again; and with the full consent of prophets, apostles, saints, and angels, make good his benediction, in the everlasting felicity of every true Israelite. In the mean time, he will manifest himself, and show the glory of the Father to those who wait upon him, though not to the world.—Let us, however, remember with holy awe, that the same agonies of the beloved Son of God, which assure the humble penitent of exemption from the deserved fiery vengeance of divine justice, loudly proclaim the inevitable destruction of such as proudly and impenitently neglect, or hypocritically abuse, so great salvation: for he, who in awful justice "spared not his own Son," will not spare them. Finally, let us attend on the means of grace; and, as it were, lay the wood in order, and prepare the sacrifice, and wait and pray, till the "baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire" burn up our corrupt affections, kindle the flame of true devotion, and enable us to offer "spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ."

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1, 2. The golden calf had occasioned a lamentable delay in erecting the tabernacle; and now the sin of Nadab and Abihu caused an awful interruption in the opening of the service. Next to Moses and Aaron, none stood higher, or were more likely to be honourable in Israel, than these two young men. Perhaps they were elated with this distinction, and were influenced by pride and ostentation; it is also probable they were in some measure heated with wine. (Note, 8-11.) Being fully consecrated, and considering the burning of incense as the most honourable part of their office, they were impatient to enter upon it; and, at the season, when the people were prostrated in adoration of the manifested presence and glory of God, they rashly and presumptuously, without orders, which they should have waited for; both at once, which was never practised; and with fire taken, not from the altar of burnt-offering, but probably from under the peace-offerings; attempted to enter the tabernacle to burn incense, though it was not the hour at which this service was appointed to be done. Perhaps, they intended to place their censers on the golden altar. This conduct evidenced great irreverence, and might have been a very bad precedent to their brethren and successors; to prevent which, the Lord was pleased to make them an example to the Old Testament church at its first formation, by causing the fire from his presence to slay them suddenly, without consuming their bodies, or their clothes; (Note, Num. 16:35.) as Ananias and Sapphira were struck dead at the first establishment of the New Testament church. (Note, Acts 5:1-11.)

V. 3. The priests were especially intended by the words, "them that come nigh me," and some of the texts referred to in the margin show, that they had been repeatedly warned in this respect, in order that their example might edify the people. Indeed, this accords to the tenor of divine revelation in every part; and not only ministers, but all who worship God, are often reminded, that if they do not honour him, he will honour himself in their punishment.—Even the way of a

4 And Moses called Mishaël and Elzaphan, the sons of Uzziel the uncle of Aaron, and said unto them, Come near, carry your brethren from before the sanctuary out of the camp.

5 So they went near, and carried them in their coats out of the camp; as Moses had said.

6 And Moses said unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar and unto Ithamar his sons, Uncover not your heads, neither rend your clothes; lest ye die, and lest wrath come upon all the people: but let your brethren, the whole house of Israel, bewail the burning which the LORD hath kindled.

7 And ye shall not go out from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: for the anointing oil of the LORD is upon you. And they did according to the word of Moses.

8 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Aaron, saying,

9 Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die. It shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations:

10 And that ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean:

11 And that ye may teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the LORD hath spoken unto them by the hand of Moses.

sinner's acceptance, though full of encouragement, and an especial manifestation of the mercy of God, clearly reveals his awful justice and holiness; and solemnly and loudly proclaims that he will be approached with reverence, and in sincere abhorrence of all sin: but this is often overlooked. The Lord hath therefore seen good, under both dispensations, to deter men from perverting his mercy, by terrible threatenings and awful judgments; and we have reason to think, that the death of Nadab and Abihu had a very salutary and durable effect, especially upon Aaron and his sons, and their successors. But with what exquisite anguish must the heart of Aaron have been torn! and what dismay must have seized upon him, at this unlooked-for and most afflicting stroke! His own sons—his eldest sons—just consecrated to so high and important an office,—concerning whom he had doubtless formed the most pleasing hopes;—cut off suddenly, in such a state of mind, by the immediate judgment of God, for presumptuous disobedience, and publicly, as an example to all Israel!—Each of these reflections must have struck a dagger into his heart, and have aggravated the agony to which he was all at once reduced, from a confluence of the most delightful sensations. This must have been the effect of every reflection, but one; namely, on the justice, wisdom, and love of God; his sovereign right to dispose of him and his, as he saw good; and the important purposes, for his glory and the good of his people, which would thence result; and this thought seems to have so far quieted his mind, as to repress every hard and murmuring thought, and to bow his will into reverent submission; as well as to stop his mouth, and prevent him from uttering one complaining word!—Without doubt, he would now recollect the golden calf, with deep humility and admiration of the Lord's patience towards him. Indeed, in all respects, he seems to have been peculiarly supported by divine grace on this most trying occasion.

V. 4, 5. It is far more probable, that Nadab and Abihu were struck dead at the door of the tabernacle, than that they had actually entered; for Moses and others seem to have witnessed the catastrophe, which would not have been the case, had they been within. The sacerdotal garments being thus polluted, were no longer fit for use, and they seem to have been buried in them.—Mishaël and Elzaphan were Levites; the service allotted them was an impressive lesson; and when they carried the dead bodies through the camp, they presented to the view of the people a most affecting sight, which would be an important caution and a solemn warning to them all.

V. 6. Different opinions have been formed, concerning the prohibition contained in the words rendered, "Uncover not your heads." But, as it must denote something immediately to be done or omitted, the opinion that the priests were forbidden to put off their sacerdotal bonnets, as well as to rend their clothes, is most probable.—Aaron, however, and his surviving sons, were forbidden to express their grief by the customary tokens; that they might not seem to reflect on the divine justice and goodness; to teach them to subject their strongest passions to reason and conscience; and to remind them, that in comparison of the divine glory, even the nearest relations must be disregarded. And as they had so lately been anointed to their sacred and important office, with which even the safety of the nation was intimately connected; they must not, on any personal consideration, suffer their services to be interrupted. For had they also provoked the Lord to slay them, the people would have been left without priest or sacrifice, exposed to the just wrath of God. Yet neither on this occasion, nor at any subsequent period, was another family appointed to succeed, in case that of Aaron should be extinct.—The people in general, however, were allowed to bewail this event, which doubtless they did, with the usual expressions of sorrow.

12 ¶ And Moses spake unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar, and unto Ithamar, his sons that were left, Take the meat-offering that remaineth of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and eat it without leaven beside the altar: for it is most holy.

15 The heave-shoulder, and the wave-breast shall they bring, with the offerings made by fire of the fat, to wave it for a wave-offering before the LORD, and it shall be thine and thy sons' with thee, by a statute for ever; as the LORD hath commanded.

V. 8-11. As the sin of Nadab and Abihu seems, in part at least, to have been occasioned by a degree of inebriation; a law was on this account enacted, that the priests should drink no wine, nor intoxicating liquor, either before or during their ministrations in the sanctuary; in order that their judgments might be unclouded by the fumes of intemperance, especially when required to practise or interpret the law of God. This command was immediately given to Aaron, to encourage him by such a token of regard; and because the Lord would not have it appear, as if Moses had not sympathized in his affliction, or had intended to charge him with criminality in this respect.

V. 12-15. (Marg. Ref.) Moses at this time repeated, or explained, and enforced, the laws before given; lest the interruption which had taken place should cause Aaron and his sons to forget them.—The meat-offering, as most holy, must be eaten by the priests, or the sons of the priests, in the holy place; but the portion allotted them of the peace-offerings might be eaten in any clean place, with their families.

V. 16-18. The sacrifice here spoken of was a sin-offering for the congregation; yet, as it was a goat, and not a young bull, (no doubt by special direction,) the blood was not carried into the sanctuary, to be put upon the altar of incense, or sprinkled before the veil; and therefore the flesh ought not to have been burnt without the camp, or upon the altar; but, when the priests had done eating, to have been consumed in the same manner as the remaining flesh of the other sacrifices. It is not evident, whether this was done by inadvertency, or because Aaron, from the state of his mind, drew a wrong conclusion. Moses, however, was angry at this deviation from the divine precept, and probably feared that further rebukes would be the consequence. He therefore expostulated with Eleazar and Ithamar; not with Aaron, lest he should add to his heavy distress.—His language is remarkable: "God hath given it to you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, &c." Sinners, who suffer deserved punishment are said to "eat of the fruit of their own ways, and to be filled with their own devices." Prov. 1:31. Thus the priests, by eating the sin-offering of the people were represented as bearing their iniquity for them; but in burning without the camp their own sin-offerings, and all other sacrifices, the blood of which was carried into the sanctuary, they owned that they were only types; and that both their own iniquity, and that of the people, must be finally transferred to the great Antitype, and effectually expiated by him.—God bestowed upon the priests this reward of their service, that they might be more willing to take upon them the people's sins, and to make an expiation carefully for them. And indeed, the very eating of the people's sin-offering argued the sins of the people, in some sort, laid upon the priests, to be taken away by them. Which being done, they had reason to rejoice also in a feast upon this sacrifice, which God had been pleased to accept, for the taking away of the sins of the people. From whence 17 Wherefore have ye not eaten the sin-offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and God hath given it you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the Lord?

18 Behold, the blood of it was not brought in, within the holy place: ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy place, as I commanded.

19 And Aaron said unto Moses, Behold, this day have they offered their sin-offering and their burnt-offering before the Lord; and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin-offer-the sacrifice of Christ may be explained, who is said to bear our iniquity, (as the priest is here said to do,) all our sins being laid on him; who took upon him to make an expiation for them by the sacrifice of himself. For the priest here, by eating of the sin-offering, receiving the guilt upon himself, may well be thought to prefigure one, who should be both priest and sacrifice for sin: which was accomplished in Christ. Bp. Patrick.

V. 19, 20. Though Eleazar and Ithamar were addressed, Aaron alone replied; conscious perhaps that the sin-offering had been burnt by his directions, or that he had not been sufficiently careful that it should be rightly disposed of. He acknowledged that, in this respect, the rule had not been exactly observed: but he intimated that, in other things, his surviving sons had been very attentive to their duty, and had offered the sin-offering and burnt-offering for the people, (for so he seems to mean,) with much circumspection. Indeed, the deviation which had been made, was by no means the effect of a presumptuous disregard to the divine command; and such things had befallen him, that he could not have eaten the sacred feast with calmness and cheerfulness, though he had submitted to the will of God in the awful dispensation. And, as his mind was agitated with various conflicting passions, and depressed with a sense of his unworthiness; he could not suppose that his service would have been acceptable, if he had attempted it.—With this excuse Moses was satisfied; being sensible that Aaron had borne his affliction in a proper manner; that he could not possibly with cheerfulness have eaten the holy things; and that he intended to do right in burning them. It seems also, that the Lord approved of this determination.

Their sin-offering, &c. (19) The priests had, on the same day "offered their sin-offering, and their burnt-offering," which were burnt; and through inadvertency, they had disposed of the sin-offering of the people in the same manner. This may be the meaning; and then the sin-offering of the people was not burned intentionally, by Aaron's direction, but by the mistake of his sons.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. With what solemn attention should we hear these words of the great and terrible Lord God, "I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified!" Contemplating with holy awe his majesty, purity, and avenging justice, we may well exclaim, "My flesh trembleth for fear of thee, and I am afraid of thy judgments." Nay, even the discoveries of his boundless mercy, as revealed in the gospel, and of the way in which that mercy is exercised, are suited to form our spirits to humble reverence united with filial confidence.—Alas! when we consider from what motives, and in what manner, great numbers of those who are called the "priests of the Lord," draw nigh to him in their sacred services; and what effects their spirit, conduct, and ministrations, are suited to produce on the people; we cannot but wonder, that examples of severity, like that before us, are not frequently made. But assuredly, unless repentance intervene, the Lord will, before the assembled world, "be glorified" in the dreadful punishment of those who have thus openly dishonoured him, and who have led others also to despise his ordinances or revile his truth.—It behooves us, however, to beware, not only of profaneness, or gross irreverence in this sacred work, but likewise of strange fire. Great earnestness and fervency may be shown, when we are actuated by no better motives than an eager desire of distinguishing ourselves, of acquiring honour or advantage, or of promoting the credit and success of the party to which we are attached. Our zeal may result from enthusiasm and unscriptural confidence; it may be exercised with bitterness and malevolence; it may excite us to call for fire from heaven on our opponents, or to kindle the flames of persecution on earth; and in various ways it may be no other than the heat and vehemence of selfish passions. This is strange fire, not kindled at the altar of burnt-offering, not the fruit of the Spirit of Christ, not a heavenly fervour of love to God and man, inducing humble, earnest, affectionate, and patient endeavours, by warranted means alone, to promote the cause of religion in the world, and especially among those with whom we are immediately connected. But not ministers alone are concerned: all who profess to worship God, "draw nigh to him;" and if their lives do not honour him, he will at length glorify himself in their awful destruction.—We need not, however, go further than ourselves: for when we ing to-day, (should it have been accepted in the sight of the Lord?

20 And when Moses heard that, she was content.

CHAPTER XI.

What beasts might be eaten and what might not, 1-8: what fishes, 9-12: what birds, or flying creatures, 13-23. How ritual uncleanness would be contracted, by touching the carcasses of unclean animals; and how it must be cleansed, 24-40. Reptiles not to be eaten, 41-43. The reason of these laws, 44-47.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses, and to Aaron, saying unto them,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying,

duly consider the holiness of our heart-searching Judge, and the adorations of the heavenly host, and then reflect on our prayers and praises; we must be ready to say, "Wo is me, I am undone! because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts!" Is. 6:5. And nothing but the sense of pardoning love through the atonement of Christ, his gracious promises, and the consolations of the Holy Spirit, can embolden us in attempting to serve and worship our Holy God. Yet, even thus encouraged, we should look diligently to ourselves and to our rule, that we may approach him in the appointed manner, and in a recollected, humble spirit; fearing the rebukes with which he chastens his own people, even though delivered from the dread of the everlasting punishment reserved for his enemies.—Honours and distinctions are dangerous, because they tend to excite and invigorate the pride and ambition of our hearts; we should therefore be peculiarly watchful over ourselves, and earnest in prayer to be kept humble, when the Lord is pleased to employ us in any useful and reputable service, or in any way to advance us above our brethren. And as all, who would serve God, must "take heed, that their hearts be not overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness," so the ministers of religion especially should keep at the greatest distance from this hateful vice. Above all other men they need clear heads and sound judgments, as well as upright hearts; not only that "they themselves die not," but that they may "put a difference between holy and unholy," and teach the people all that the Lord hath spoken." They are peculiarly required to watch and be sober, that they may rise superior even to their natural affections, that they may be able to govern every passion, and be examples to others of that supreme love of God, which subordinates all other regards; for the important work of their ministry must not be interrupted, lest wrath come upon the people also. Indeed, we all should learn to mourn and rejoice, as though we mourned and rejoiced not; for we may be assured, that all our comforts must be counterbalanced with trials, and all our honours with "some thorn in the flesh, lest we should be exalted above measure." But the remembrance of former sins may well stop our mouths, and produce silent submission under our bitterest sorrows: "for it is of the Lord's mercy we are not consumed;" and we have still many unmerited comforts remaining, and encouraging prospects before us. However great our inward anguish may be, we should learn to suppress the rising murmur, to "keep our mouth as with a bridle," and be careful that we do not reflect upon God. If we thus profit by these examples of his severity, we shall have "a witness in ourselves" of the wisdom and goodness of God, in this part of his dealings with mankind.

V. 12-20. Though our improper attendance on religious ordinances may expose us to wrath, yet we must not neglect them. Some indeed, by unworthily receiving the Lord's supper, "have provoked the Lord to plague them with divers diseases, and with sundry kinds of death;" yet others should not, on that account, neglect this bountiful duty and service; on the contrary, "let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup." Nor need an humble communicant, who comes, "not trusting in his own righteousness, but in the Lord's mercy," be discouraged; for he knows how to distinguish between presumptuous rashness or contemptuous disobedience, and the involuntary infirmities or unallowed mistakes of the conscientious. After the example of Christ also, his ministers, while taking heed that all is done in the prescribed manner, noticing whatever is amiss, and on some occasions expressing a holy indignation, and rebuking with all authority; must be cautious not to confound inadvertencies with intended disobedience, or to grieve those whom the Lord has wounded: they must rather make allowances, and accept of excuses; and "restore those who have been overtaken in a fault, in the spirit of meekness, considering themselves, lest they also be tempted."

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 1. Aaron was at this time fully established in the high priesthood, and these laws related to such things as fell especially under the cognizance of him and his sons; he was therefore addressed along with Moses on this occasion.

V. 2. The Creator pronounced all his works separately good, and altogether, when finished, very good: (Note, Gen. 1:31.) yet the distinction between clean and unclean animals was known even before the flood; though probably it only

*These are the beasts which ye shall eat, among all the beasts that are on the earth.

3 Whatsoever ^bparteth the hoof, and is cloven-footed, and ^ccheweth the cud among the beasts, that shall ye eat.

4 Nevertheless, these shall ye not eat, of them that chew the cud, or of them that divide the hoof: as the camel, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you.

5 And ^dthe coney, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof: he is unclean unto you.

6 And the hare, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof: he is unclean unto you.

7 And the swine, though he divideth the hoof, and be cloven-footed; yet he cheweth not the cud: he is unclean to you.

8 Of their flesh ye shall not eat, and their carcass ye shall not touch: they are unclean to you.

9 ¶ These shall ye eat, of all that are in the waters: ^ewhatsoever hath fins and scales in the waters, in the seas, and in the rivers, them shall ye eat.

10 And all that have no fins nor scales in the seas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing, which is in the waters; they shall be an abomination unto you.

11 They shall be even an abomination unto you: ye shall not eat of their flesh, but ye shall have their carcasses in abomination.

12 Whatsoever hath no fins nor scales in the waters, that shall be an abomination unto you.

13 ¶ And these are they which ye shall have in abomination among the fowls, they shall not be eaten; they are an abomination: ^fthe eagle, and the ossifrage, and the ospray, 14 And the vulture, and the kite, after his kind:

15 Every raven after his kind:

16 And ^gthe owl, and the night-hawk, and the cuckoo, and the hawk, after his kind,

17 And the little owl, and the cormorant, and the great owl,

18 And the swan, and the pelican, and the gier eagle, 19 And the stork, the heron after her kind, and the lapwing, and the bat.

20 All fowls that ^hcreep, going upon all four shall be an abomination unto you.

21 Yet these may ye eat of every flying creeping thing that goeth upon all four, which have legs above their feet, to leap withal upon the earth:

22 Even these of them ye may eat: ⁱthe locust after his kind, and the bald locust after his kind, and the beetle after his kind, and the grasshopper after his kind.

23 But all other flying creeping things, which have four feet, shall be an abomination unto you.

24 And for these ye shall be unclean: whosoever ^jtoucheth the carcass of them shall be unclean until the even.

25 And whosoever beareth ought of the carcass of them shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

26 The carcasses of every beast which divideth the hoof, and is not cloven-footed, nor cheweth the cud, are unclean unto you: every one that toucheth them shall be unclean.

27 And whatsoever goeth upon his paws, among all manner of beasts, that go on all four, those are unclean unto you: whoso toucheth their carcass shall be unclean until the even.

related to sacrifices. But at this time, very particular laws were enacted respecting the people's diet, and the ceremonial uncleanness contracted by touching the carcasses of unclean animals. These laws seem to have been enacted, in the first place, as a test of obedience, like the prohibition to Adam of "the tree of knowledge;" and to teach the Israelites habits of self-denial, and the government of their appetites. Secondly, to keep them distinct from other nations, both by throwing hindrances in the way of their social intercourse with them, and by establishing the distinction between clean and unclean, which was applicable to persons as well as things: when therefore this distinction was no longer to be observed, Peter was instructed by a vision, which had relation to the distinction of meats, "not to call any man common or unclean." (Note, Acts 10:9-16.) Many also of these forbidden animals were occasions of superstition and idolatry to the Heathen. Thirdly, to teach them to make distinctions between holy and unholy, in the choice of companions, and in forming intimate connexions. And fourthly, the propensities of these animals taught them what manner of persons they ought to be: for if the pure, useful, gentle, patient nature of the animals appointed for sacrifice, was emblematical of the Saviour's character, it is obvious to conclude, that the exclusive prescription of some animals for the diet of the Lord's people was also significant. Some have even thought that the allowance of the slaughter of innocent animals, for the food of sinful man, forms a continued type of the purchase and application of the salvation of Christ, and of our transformation into his image, while we spiritually "eat his flesh and drink his blood."

V. 3-8. "Parting the hoof" may denote separation from sin and the world, and distinguishing between truth and error, good and evil; while "chewing the cud" aptly represents serious, pleasant, habitual meditation upon the truths and precepts of the word of God, in order to a holy conversation. These are united in the experience and character of the true Christian; but hypocrites show that they do neither in sincerity, by evidently attempting to separate between profession and practice; and therefore they are as unclean as the avowed infidel or profligate.—The fox, the dog, the lion, the wolf, and indeed animals in general which are carnivorous, neither chew the cud nor divide the hoof; other animals do only the one, and were therefore unclean. The former are apt emblems of the crafty, the covetous, the cruel, and the fierce; many of the latter, of the lewd, the sensual, and the carnally minded; whilst the sheep and ox, and other animals which unite the two, aptly teach us what we ought to be, and with whom we should associate. The foot of the camel is divided on the upper part of it, but it is strongly joined beneath; so that he does not "part the hoof." It is doubted whether the words rendered coney and hare, be properly translated; because it is not known that these animals chew the cud. They were, however, unclean. The swine is the emblem of filthiness; but it is marked as unclean on the same ground as the other animals. It is probable, that the peculiar aversion of the Jews to the swine, arose from those animals being commonly sacrificed in the worship of idolaters. Some think that the flesh of the unclean animals was prohibited as unwholesome; yet the flesh of hares and rabbits seems to be as wholesome as that of sheep and goats.—The Israelites were not only forbidden to eat the flesh of the unclean beasts, but they must not touch their dead bodies: and consequently the use of their skins, and even of their fat, was interdicted.

V. 9-12. Frogs, amphibious creatures, sea-monsters, eels, and several species of fishes, were thus prohibited as an abomination; but the emblem is very obscure: some of them may represent such persons as attempt to reconcile in their conduct the service of God and mammon.

V. 13-20. Here the critics find abundance of word; and if this law were now in force, it would be necessary to decide upon the meaning of the original words, many of which are used in no other part of Scripture, except in the parallel passage in Deuteronomy (Deut. 14:11-20.) Many of the unclean birds are fierce and ravenous; others feed very grossly; several instinctively love darkness and desolate places; and few of them are generally eaten at present. The harmless, loving dove, and such as were of a cleanly nature, were allowed for food; and the emblem is easily applied.

V. 21, 22. The several species of locusts, here excepted from the general prohibition, (for the words rendered beetle and grasshopper, are supposed to mean different kinds of locusts,) have, besides four feet on which to walk or crawl on the earth, two longer legs on which they leap. Locusts have been eaten by many nations, and are at this day.—"After his kind," means all of this kind.

V. 25, 27. Not only those beasts which have single hoofs, as horses and asses, were unclean, but such likewise as divided the feet into paws, or more than two pairs, as lions, tigers, and many other beasts.

28 And he that beareth the carcass of them shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: they are unclean unto you.

29 ¶ These also shall be unclean unto you among the creeping things that creep upon the earth; the weasel, and the mouse, and the tortoise after his kind,

30 And the ferret, and the chameleon, and the lizard, and the snail, and the mole.

31 These are unclean to you among all that creep: whosoever doth touch them, when they be dead, shall be unclean until the even.

32 And upon whatsoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it shall be unclean; whether it be any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or sack, whatsoever vessel it be, wherein any work is done, it must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even; so it shall be cleansed.

33 And every earthen vessel whereinto any of them falleth, whatsoever is in it shall be unclean; and ye shall break it.

34 Of all meat which may be eaten, that on which such water cometh, shall be unclean: and all drink that may be drunk in every such vessel, shall be unclean.

35 And every thing whereupon any part of their carcass falleth, shall be unclean; whether it be oven, or ranges for pots, they shall be broken down: for they are unclean, and shall be unclean unto you.

36 Nevertheless, a fountain or pit, wherein there is plenty of water, shall be clean: but that which toucheth their carcass shall be unclean.

37 And if any part of their carcass fall upon any sowing-seed which is to be sown; it shall be clean.

V. 31-33. When they be dead. (31) The unclean animals did not render a person unclean, who touched them when alive; for many of them were beasts of burden, as the horse, ass, and camel. Yet, even with this limitation, the law would be to us extremely burdensome: for instance, a dead mouse, cat, weasel, or squirrel, falling upon earthen vessels, ovens, or ranges, would render it necessary to destroy them; and even when vermin or reptiles were killed, the removal of their carcasses, or those of any animal that died of itself, would occasion pollution. (32-35.) This indeed was only ceremonial; yet, it would often exclude persons from public ordinances and society; and much circumspection, in properly purifying themselves and their furniture, would be requisite, and a constant circumspection to avoid contracting defilement. This evidently represented the necessity of the "sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience." the daily pursuit of true holiness, in the exercise of "repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ;" and habitual watchfulness and self-examination.

V. 34-38. If water, from any vessel thus rendered unclean, fell on such food as was before clean, this must not afterwards be eaten; nor must water be drunk from such a vessel. But water in a well or pit, into which any carcass had fallen, was not unclean; but, when afterwards brought or drawn from it, might be used.—This exception seemed necessary, in order that water for the various ablutions might be procured.—Corn for food, if the carcass of any creature fell into it, must not be used till washed and cleansed: but this was not needful in seed-corn, except it was steeped in water; and then it must be washed in other water.

V. 39, 40. The carcasses of unclean animals, in whatever way they died, or were killed, rendered those unclean who touched them; but the carcasses of the clean animals did not pollute, except when they died in any way by which the blood was not separated from them. In this case, if any one inadvertently ate of them, he contracted uncleanness, and needed the appointed cleansing.

V. 41-45. The serpent, by which the devil tempted Eve, was condemned to move on his belly, and to eat dust; and deceivers, liars, slanderers, and murderers, of every description, with all who hate God and diffuse the poison of impiety among men, are in Scripture called the seed of the serpent, and the children of the devil. (Note, Gen. 3:14, 15.) Other reptiles aptly represent the earthly minded and sensual; and probably this was the implied instruction of the prohibition. The word abomination denotes an union of hatred and terror. The frequent use of this word concerning these animals, would have had a tendency to render the Israelites peculiarly circumspect in keeping aloof from them; and shows 38 But if any water be put upon the seed, and any part of their carcass fall thereon; it shall be unclean unto you.

39 And if any beast, of which ye may eat, die; he that toucheth the carcass thereof shall be unclean until the even.

40 And he that eateth of the carcass of it, shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: he also that beareth the carcass of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even.

1 ¶ And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth shall be an abomination: it shall not be eaten.

42 Whatsoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all four, or whatsoever hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth; them ye shall not eat, for they are an abomination.

43 Ye shall not make yourselves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled thereby.

44 For I am the LORD your God: ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves and ye shall be holy; for I am holy: neither shall ye defile yourselves with any manner of creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

45 For I am the LORD that bringeth you up out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: ye shall therefore be holy; for I am holy.

46 This is the law of the beasts, and of the fowl, and of every living creature that moveth in the waters, and of every creature that creepeth upon the earth:

47 To make a difference between the unclean and the clean, and between the beast that may be eaten and the beast that may not be eaten.

how we should abhor and dread the contagion of wicked companions, and the poison of false doctrines.—The argument deduced from the holiness of JEHOVAH, who redeemed Israel from Egypt, and separated them from other nations, to enforce their diligent attention to these rules concerning external purity, proves much more conclusively, that his redeemed worshippers should be "holy in all manner of conversation." (Note, 1 Pet. 1:13-16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilst we enjoy our Christian liberty, as exempted from burdensome observances, and are allowed the use of so many kinds of wholesome and palatable food, from which Israel was restricted, let us not forget to be thankful, and to serve God with joyfulness of heart, that we are indulged in this abundance of all things: and let us be careful not to use our "liberty as an occasion to the flesh." Even at this day, "to the unbelieving all things are unclean; yea, to all except those who receive them with thanksgiving, and to whom they are sanctified by the word of God and prayer: and such will not be slaves to their appetites; but both in the quality and quantity of what they eat and drink, will consider what fits them for God's service; and what suits their circumstances, and consists with temperance, justice, and charity, that they may do all to his glory.—The Lord hath redeemed and called his people, that they may be holy even as he is holy: we should therefore come out, and be separate from the world; we must renounce the company of the ungodly, and all intimate and needless connexions, with those who are dead in sin; we should be "a peculiar people zealous of good works;" "followers of God as dear children;" devoted to him, conformed to the image of his Son, and associating with his people; and, if we would not commit wickedness, we must watch and pray against temptation.—Let us also remember, that in this sinful world we are contracting, not ceremonial, but moral pollution every day; and except we are continually washing "in the Fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness," we can have no fellowship with a holy God on earth, or admission into a holy heaven: and that this will be the case till the evening of death, when all who have been thus washed shall be clean for ever; but they that are found "filthy shall be filthy still," even to eternity. We should therefore spare no pains, nor grudge any expense or self-denial, which we may be called to in the pursuit of holiness; we should walk every circumspectly, frequently employ ourselves in self-examination, and be far more careful to discover, and to avoid or wash away, the pollution of sin, than the Israelite would be about his ceremonial uncleanness; waiting with glad expectation our dismissal from this sinful world. For though death, being the wages of sin, is in itself pollu-

CHAPTER XII.

The loss of a woman's uncleanness by childbirth, 1-5. Her subsequent purification, 6-8.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a woman have conceived seed, and borne a man-child: then she shall be unclean seven days; according to the days of the separation for her infirmity she shall be unclean.

3 And in the eighth day, the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised.

4 And she shall then continue in the blood of her purifying three and thirty days: she shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary, until the days of her purifying be fulfilled.

5 But if she bear a maid-child, then she shall be unclean two weeks, as in her separation; and she shall continue in the blood of her purifying threescore and six days.

6 ¶ And when the days of her purifying are fulfilled, for a son or for a daughter: she shall bring a lamb of the first year for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon or a turtle-dove for a sin-offering, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation unto the priest;

7 Who shall offer it before the LORD, and make an atonement for her, and she shall be cleansed from the issue of her blood. This is the law for her that hath borne a male or a female.

8 And if she be not able to bring a lamb, then she shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons: the one for the burnt-offering, and the other for a sin-offering: and the priest shall make an atonement for her, and she shall be clean.

Rules for distinguishing the plague of leprosy, 1-44. The conduct prescribed to lepers, 45, 46. The leprosy in garments, 47-59.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron, saying,

2 When a man shall have in the skin of his flesh, a rising, a scab, or bright spot, and it be in the skin of his flesh like the plague of leprosy; then he shall be brought unto Aaron the priest, or unto one of his sons the priests.

3 And the priest shall look on the plague in the skin of the flesh: and when the hair in the plague is turned white, and the plague in sight be deeper than the skin of his flesh; it is a plague of leprosy: and the priest shall look on him and pronounce him unclean.

4 If the bright spot be white in the skin of his flesh, and in sight be not deeper than the skin, and the hair thereof be not turned white; then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague seven days.

tion, and issues in corruption, yet to the believer its sting is not only removed, but its uncleanness is destroyed; and, as a desirable messenger, it conveys him home to his Father's holy and blissful habitation.

NOTES.—CHAP. XII. V. 2-5. For one week the mother of a male child, and for a fortnight the mother of a female, was ceremonially unclean herself, and rendered all who touched her unclean: during the remainder of the terms here prescribed, the mother was secluded from sacred ordinances, but communicated no pollution to others.—The time appointed for the female child was double; for by that sex sin first entered; but in Christ this stigma is removed. When the seven days were expired, and the touch of the mother no longer caused pollution, the male child was to be circumcised. This was enjoined to Abraham, as the seal of the covenant made with him; (Notes, Gen. 17: Rom. 4:9-17.) and it was also incorporated with the law, as distinguishing the worshippers of JEHOVAH from idolaters.

V. 6, 7. The sacrifices, appointed on this occasion, were not peace-offerings, as expressing gratitude and joy, which might have been expected; but a burnt-offering, implying a solemn dedication of both mother and infant unto God; and a sin-offering to make atonement, and to bring sin to remembrance, that it might be repented of and expiated.

V. 8. Here again the case of the poor is specially provided for. (Notes, Luke 2:21-24.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

What could the infinitely wise God intend by all these institutions, but to bring a charge of guilt and pollution against the whole species, as born of Adam's fallen race? Doubtless this charge is well grounded: and the Lord, knowing how prone men are to deny or forget their real character and situation, thus purposed to hold up the memorial of them continually before their eyes; and "by line upon line, and precept upon precept," to teach them this salutary lesson; that man, from his conception in the womb to his grave, is an unclean creature; that he contracts guilt, through this defilement, even in the most lawful and necessary actions; and that he propagates the same depraved nature to his offspring: inasmuch that, except as the atonement of Christ and the sanctification of the Spirit prevent, the original blessing, "increase and multiply," is become to the fallen race a dire curse, and the communication of sin and misery: for "who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one." This should teach us habitual humiliation before God, and to rejoice in our domestic comforts with trembling; to walk watchfully; to search out the evil that cleaves to our ordinary actions; and to give diligence that we may secure the salvation of the gospel.—As we are so unworthy of every good, we have the greater reason to be thankful for all our mercies, and to unite the exercise of repentance and faith, with all our sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving.—When those women, who profess godliness, have been preserved in childbirth; though exempted from these burdensome ceremonies, they should deem themselves doubly bound to take the earliest opportunity of rendering public unfeigned thanks to God for such a mercy: they should acknowledge the justice of God in all the pains and perils which through sin have come upon the sex; and join all with penitent confessions of guilt, renewed application to the blood of Christ for forgiveness, and dedication of themselves unto God through him. And whilst these sacrifices of praise, for mercies in some sense common to both parents, are offered with united hearts by both; conscious that their infant offspring hath from them derived a depraved nature, and is come into an evil world, how proper it is that with harmonious consent they devote their child unto the Lord; and take comfort from the assurance, that the "covenant is made with them, for their good, and the good of their children after them!" for in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female." Finally, let us bless God, that the Saviour "was made of a woman, made under the law, that he might redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons;" and also that "for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich." (Notes, Gal. 4:4-7. 1 Tim. 2:15.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XIII. V. 1, 2. As the law contained in the preceding chapter, was easily understood and applied, it was addressed to Moses only; but as that contained in this chapter and the next, involved many difficulties, of which the priests were the appointed judges, it was given to Aaron likewise.—Whatever diseases, in some respects like that here described, had been known in other nations; it is evident from the very language used, that this disease was in great measure peculiar to Israel.—It is called "the plague of leprosy," which implies that it was generally, if not always, inflicted by the immediate judgment of God. Indeed, this must be evident from a careful consideration of the scriptures referred to in the margin. No remedy is any where mentioned: nay, it is implied in the answer of the king of Israel respecting the leprosy of Naaman, that it could not be cured but by the immediate power of God. (2 Kings 5:7.) When any one supposed that he was visited with this disorder, or it was suspected by those about him; he was not directed to consult a physician, but to apply to the priests: great care was required, and many particular rules given, in order to distinguish it from other maladies; and when it was removed, the diseased person is more frequently said to be cleansed, than healed.—It does not appear to have been infectious, as many suppose; but, as ceremonial pollution was communicated to all who touched the leper, he was excluded from the society of the people, as well as from the courts of the Lord: and when the leprosy was cleansed, he was not readmitted, till after divers sacrifices and purifications.—All this seems to represent the state of a sinner, whose heart is entirely unsanctified, and in whom sin has dominion: whatever his profession may be, he has yet no benefit from the great Sacrifice for sin, nor is he meet for communion with God, or his people on earth, much less in heaven, unless he be cleansed; and as we proceed, we shall perceive many other things admitting of an apt accommodation.—A few hints, however, must suffice on this intricate, and to us not very interesting subject. Yet we must suppose that the all-wise Legislator had some important meaning in these institutions; and therefore we should not blame the sober attempts of those, who modestly point out what seems to them to have been intended. Indeed, the scriptures referred to in the margin generally give the best intimations on the subject.

V. 3-8. The hair turned white, in the diseased part, may denote the case of those who grow hoary in sin, and yet go on in it; and the plague apparently deeper than the skin, as

5 And the priest shall look on him the seventh day : and, behold, if the plague in his sight be at a stay, and the plague spread not in the skin ; then the priest shall shut him up seven days more.

6 And the priest shall look on him again the seventh day : and, behold, if the plague be somewhat dark, and the plague spread not in the skin ; the priest shall pronounce him clean : it is but a scab ; and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

7 But if the scab spread much abroad in the skin, after that he hath been seen of the priest for his cleansing ; he shall be seen of the priest again.

8 And if the priest see, that, behold, the scab spreadeth in the skin ; then the priest shall pronounce him unclean ; it is a leprosy.

9 ¶ When the plague of leprosy is in a man, then he shall be brought unto the priest :

10 And the priest shall see him : and, behold, if the rising be white in the skin, and it have turned the hair white, and there be quick raw flesh in the rising ;

11 It is an old leprosy in the skin of his flesh, and the priest shall pronounce him unclean, and shall not shut him up : for he is unclean.

12 And if a leprosy break out abroad in the skin, and the leprosy cover all the skin of him that hath the plague, from his head even to his foot, wheresoever the priest looketh ;

13 Then the priest shall consider : and, behold, if the leprosy have covered all his flesh, he shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague : it is all turned white : he is clean.

14 But when raw flesh appeareth in him, he shall be unclean.

15 And the priest shall see the raw flesh, and pronounce him to be unclean : for the raw flesh is unclean : it is a leprosy.

16 Or if the raw flesh turn again, and be changed into white ; he shall come unto the priest :

17 And the priest shall see him ; and, behold, if the plague be turned into white ; then the priest shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague : he is clean.

18 ¶ The flesh also, in which, even in the skin thereof, was a boil and is healed,

19 And in the place of the boil there be a white rising, or a bright spot white, and somewhat reddish, and it be showed to the priest :

opposed to a superficial, cutaneous disorder, may mark those evil courses, which result from the habitually corrupt state of the heart, as distinguished from sins fallen into through sudden temptation.—If the case were doubtful, the priest must shut up the person for a week or two, if needful: which implies the care ministers should take, in discriminating between cases which at first view appear alike. If then the disease appeared to be stopped, and no peculiar symptoms of leprosy were seen, it was concluded to be some other disorder, and the priest pronounced him clean; yet, having been considered as a leper, he must wash his clothes before he went into society, or to the courts of the Lord.—On the other hand, the spreading of the disease was a proof that it was a leprosy; as it is evident that a man who grows worse and worse, after convictions and reproofs, is under the dominion of sin.

V. 9-17. The principal symptoms to be noted in these verses, are "the quick raw flesh in the tumour," indicating a sharp corrosive humour, breaking through the skin in a particular part. It was thus distinguished from a disorder, called indeed the leprosy, but of another nature, which freely broke out in a white scurf all over the body, but without the raw flesh. The former indicated an inveterate leprosy, and whenever it appeared rendered the person unclean; but the latter did not. As these are thus contrasted, the latter aptly represents that consciousness of sin, which produces unreserved ingenuous confessions, and patience of reproof, and the former may perhaps denote the disposition of unhumiliated sinners to 21 But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hairs therein, and if it be not lower than the skin, but be somewhat dark ; then the priest shall shut him up seven days.

22 And if it spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean ; it is a plague.

23 But if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not, it is a burning boil ; and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

24 ¶ Or if there be any flesh, in the skin whereof there is a hot burning, and the quick flesh that burneth have a white bright spot, somewhat reddish or white ;

25 Then the priest shall look upon it : and, behold, if the hair in the bright spot be turned white, and it be in sight deeper than the skin ; it is a leprosy broken out of the burning : wherefore the priest shall pronounce him unclean : it is the plague of leprosy.

26 But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hair in the bright spot, and it be no lower than the other skin, but be somewhat dark ; then the priest shall shut him up seven days.

28 And if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not in the skin, but it be somewhat dark ; it is a rising of the burning, and the priest shall pronounce him clean ; for it is an inflammation of the burning.

29 ¶ If a man or woman hath a plague upon the head or the beard ;

30 Then the priest shall see the plague : and, behold, if it be in sight deeper than the skin, and there be in it a yellow thin hair ; then the priest shall pronounce him unclean : it is a dry scall, even a leprosy upon the head or beard.

31 And if the priest look on the plague of the scall, and, behold, it be not in sight deeper than the skin ; and that there is no black hair in it : then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague of the scall seven days.

32 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the plague : and, behold, if the scall spread not, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the scall be not in sight deeper than the skin ; resist conviction, and, amidst the clearest evidence of criminality, to be angry with the mildest faithful reprov.

V. 18-23. These verses direct the priests how to distinguish between any ordinary malady, which might follow an old ulcer after it had been healed, and the leprosy breaking out in the spot.—The word rendered "reddish" probably signifies very shining, and seems distinguished from a dusky white, as a symptom of leprosy.—The "leprosy broken out of the boil," may represent the return of a professed believer to the habitual practice of sin, when "his last state becomes worse than the first."

V. 24-28. This passage is supposed to state the case of such as had been hurt by fire ; for the introductory words may be rendered, "Or the flesh, when there shall be in the skin a burning of fire," &c. This would leave a scar ; and a leprosy might appear in the spot, and must be distinguished from the scar by the rules here given.—It may be discovered on careful investigation, whether sin or grace rules in the heart, from the effects produced by various external events on a man's spirit and conduct.

V. 29-37. The priests were here taught to distinguish the leprosy among the hair, on the head or beard, from other disorders which might resemble it. The yellow thin hair, instead of the white, was here the symptom of leprosy, in connexion with the marks before laid down, and the black hair of the contrary. If therefore neither of these appeared, after the person had been shut up seven days, the case still remained 34 And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall: and behold, if the scall ^abe not spread in the skin, nor be in sight deeper than the skin; then the priest shall pronounce him clean: and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.

35 But if the scall spread much in the skin after his cleansing;

36 Then the priest shall look on him: and, behold, if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for yellow hair; he is unclean.

37 But if the scall be in his sight at a stay; and that there is black hair grown up therein; the scall is healed, he is clean: and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

38 ¶ If a man also, or a woman, have in the skin of their flesh bright spots, even white bright spots;

39 Then the priest shall look: and, behold, if the bright spots in the skin of their flesh be darkish white; it is a freckled spot that groweth in the skin; he is clean.

40 ¶ And the man whose hair is fallen off his head, he is bald: yet he is clean.

41 And he that hath his hair fallen off from the part of his head toward his face, he is forehead-bald: yet he is clean.

42 And if there be in the bald head, or bald forehead, a white reddish sore; it is a leprosy sprung up in his bald head, or his bald forehead.

43 Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the rising of the sore be white reddish in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the leprosy appeareth in the skin of the flesh;

44 He is a leprous man, he is unclean: the priest shall pronounce him utterly unclean; his plague is in his head.

45 ¶ And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent, and his head bare, and he shall put a covering upon his upper lip, and shall cry, Unclean, unclean.

46 All the days wherein the plague shall be in him, he shall be defiled; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be.

47 ¶ The garment also that the plague of leprosy is in, whether it be a woollen garment, or a linen garment,

48 Whether it be in the warp, or woof, of linen or of woollen, whether in a skin, or in any thing made of skin:

49 And if the plague be greenish or reddish in the garment, or in the skin, either in the warp or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; it is a plague of leprosy, and shall be showed unto the priest.

50 And the priest shall look upon the plague, and shut up it that hath the plague seven days.

51 And he shall look on the plague on the seventh day: if the plague be spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in a skin, or in any work that is made of skin; the plague is a fretting leprosy; it is unclean.

52 He shall therefore burn that garment, whether warp or woof, in woollen or in linen, or any thing of skin, wherein the plague is: for it is a fretting leprosy; it shall be burnt in the fire.

53 And if the priest shall look, and, behold, the plague be not spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin;

54 Then the priest shall command that they wash the thing wherein the plague is, and he shall shut it up seven days more.

55 And the priest shall look on the plague after that it is washed: and, behold, if the plague have not changed his colour, and the plague be not spread; it is unclean, thou shalt burn it in the fire; it is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without.

56 And if the priest look, and, behold, the plague be somewhat dark after the washing of it: then he shall rend it out of the garment, or out of the skin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof.

57 And if it appear still in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; it is a spreading plague: thou shalt burn that wherein the plague is, with fire.

58 And the garment, either warp or woof, or whatsoever thing of skin it be, which thou shalt wash, if the plague be departed from them, then it shall be washed the second time, and shall be clean.

59 This is the law of the plague of leprosy in a garment of woollen or linen, either in the warp or woof, or any thing of skins, to pronounce it clean, or to pronounce it unclean.

doubtful, and he must be shut up other seven days.—Yet, at last, if the disorder spread much, after the priest had pronounced him clean, he was to be deemed leprous, even though no yellow hairs appeared.

V. 38, 39. Such spots as are called freckles are here distinguished from leprosy.—May not the white, very shining, yellow, gold colour, which in all cases distinguished the leprosy from other disorders, and which are opposed to black, or darkish white, be emblematic of the pride, self-complacency, and ostentation, or of the boasting and glorying in things either evil or worthless, which mark the servant of sin, as contrasted with the modesty and humility of the true penitent?—Even “the bright spots,” in this case, are said to be darkish white.

V. 40-44. The leprosy in the bald head is here distinguished from mere baldness.—The word rendered “reddish,” here also means very shining.—It is observable, that he that was leprous in the head was pronounced “utterly unclean.” This may represent the dangerous case of those who are emboldened in wickedness by infidel or heretical principles.

V. 45, 46. The leprosy was a disgrace to a man’s character; it incapacitated him for business, secluded him from the society even of his nearest friends, and that of all persons except lepers like himself; and even shut him out from the sanctuary of God: yet he must abide by the decision of the priest, and humble himself under the divine rebuke; proclaim his own shame, and show peculiar indications of self-abasement, and of submission to the righteousness of God.

V. 47-59. The leprosy in garments was evidently supernatural, and peculiar to the Israelites. The word rendered “greenish,” means the most vivid green.—The different kinds of garments mentioned are put for every sort which they should use.—This extraordinary case might denote the malignity and defiling nature of sin, and the necessity there is of parting with all occasions of transgression, “hating even the garment spotted with the flesh.” Such spotted garments are those, however rich and beautiful, which are the incentives to pride and lust.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is a question of the utmost importance, whether sin possess dominion in our hearts, or not. For if it do, we have no interest in Christ, no fellowship with Christians, no real communion with God in his ordinances, no inheritance in his kingdom, no meetness for that holy habitation: but, if sin be dethroned, though it dwell within, and cause much conflict and disquietude, and even produce defilements in our conduct and in our best services, which require us to humble ourselves before God; yet we are his children, accepted in the Beloved, and have the seal of his Spirit in our hearts. We should therefore be willing to give this important matter a fair trial, according to the sacred oracles, using the assistance of ministers and experienced Christians; but, above all, opening the case to our heart-searching, compassionate High-Priest above. Though we ought to be jealous of ourselves, and ready to suspect the worst, we should not deem every infirmity, or occasional misconduct, an evidence of hypocrisy or unconversion: but should judge impartially; duly considering, on the one hand, the imperfect state of Christians in this world, and on the other, adverting to the numbers “who think themselves something when they are nothing.”—The ministers of Christ peculiarly need exact knowledge of the Scriptures, and experimental acquaintance with the nature and effects of divine grace, as well as much caution, attention, and tenderness, when they are called upon to deal thus with men’s consciences in doubtful cases; that they may neither deceive some, nor distress others; and they must be sure to do nothing rashly, or without mature examination.—They who desire to ascertain the state of their own souls, should not decide hastily, but should wait upon the Lord, and on the ministry of the word, week after week: and if on such occasions they separate themselves more than usual from the world, that they

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 This shall be the law of the leper, ⁱⁿ the day of his cleansing: he shall be brought unto the priest:

3 And the priest shall go forth out of the camp: and the priest shall look, and behold, if the plague of leprosy be healed in the leper;

4 Then shall the priest command to take for him that is to be cleansed, ^atwo birds alive and clean, and ^acedar-wood, and ^bscarlet, and ^chyssop.

5 And the priest shall command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen vessel over running water:

6 As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar-wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them and the living bird in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water.

7 And he shall sprinkle upon him, that is to be cleansed from the leprosy, seven times, and shall pronounce him clean, and shall let the living bird loose into the open field.

8 And he that is to be cleansed shall wash his clothes and shave off all his hair, and wash himself in water, that he may be clean; and after that he shall come into the camp, and shall tarry abroad out of his tent seven days.

9 But it shall be on the seventh day, that he shall shave all his hair off his head, and his beard, and his eyebrows, even all his hair he shall shave off: and he shall wash his clothes, also he shall wash his flesh in water, and he shall be clean.

10 And on the eighth day he shall take two he-lambs without blemish, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish, and three tenths of fine flour for a meat-offering mingled with oil, and one log of oil.

11 And the priest that maketh him clean, shall present the man that is to be made clean, and those things before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation:

12 And the priest shall take one he-lamb and offer him for a trespass-offering, and the log of oil, and wave them for a wave-offering before the LORD.

13 And he shall slay the lamb in the place where he shall kill the sin-offering and the burnt-offering in the holy place: for as the sin-offering is the priest's, so is the trespass-offering: it is most holy.

14 And the priest shall take some of the blood of the trespass-offering, and the priest shall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

15 And the priest shall take some of the log of oil, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand:

may in secret search the Scriptures, and pour out their hearts more frequently and fully in prayer, it will greatly conduce to a satisfactory solution. But even if this question is resolved, and we are humbly satisfied that we are real Christians, we must remember that "in many things we offend all;" and that we have occasion for continual washing in the blood of Christ. —On the other hand, when it is plain, on scriptural grounds, that a man is unconverted and unclean; it is right that he should know it, and that others should be warned to withdraw from his polluting society. And how dreadful is the case of those whom the decisions of faithful ministers, the conduct of true believers, and the express testimonies of God's word, concur in declaring unmeet to partake of sacred ordinances; and consequently inadmissible into the kingdom of heaven, if they live and die in this state! Even on earth all their possessions, comforts, and performances, are defiled; if they do not also contaminate the principles and conduct of others. Yet still there is hope in this case; for by the gospel that leprosy is cleansed, which the law could but discover. It is therefore the only wisdom of him who discovers this to be his case, to condemn himself, to submit to God, and to seek the mercy and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; to watch against the self-deceptions to which the human heart is prone; to beware of self-preference, on account of those splendid distinctions which men admire, but which are often abominations in the sight of God; and to apply to the Saviour, as he of old, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." But would they hear him say, "I will, be thou clean;" they must renounce every other plea, be willing to part with every sin, and every occasion of sin, submit to his rebukes, attend upon his directions, and give him all the praise for their deliverance from so dreadful a malady. Finally, if we have in some measure experienced his cleansing power, we shall gradually become willing to put off this leprous garment of the body, and leave it to be refined in the grave, that we may be for ever with the Lord.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIV. V. 1-3. No means are here appointed for healing the leper; the cleansing mentioned being no other than his ceremonial purification, previously to his readmission to sacred ordinances and to society, when the Lord had been pleased to remove the plague; and the rules given very aptly represent many of the duties of repenting sinners, as well as those of ministers respecting them.—It seems the priests might visit the lepers, and even touch them, without contracting uncleanness; and the seasonable instruction which they might give them, as well as the assistance that they would be able to afford them in their devotions, might often render this a great mercy and comfort to them under their affliction.

V. 4-7. The "two birds," one slain over springing water in an earthen vessel, and the other set at liberty, having been dipped in this mixture of blood and water, may signify Christ shedding his blood for sinners, and then rising and ascending into heaven, there to appear in the presence of God for us; or the bird that was slain may represent the Saviour dying for our sins; and the living bird, the sinner, preserved and liberated, by being washed in his atoning blood, and the purifying grace of his Spirit; and being set free from sin and Satan, "seeking those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." The "cedar-wood," a supposed emblem of the soundness of the cleansed leper's flesh, may denote the sincerity of the true convert's heart, and the incorruptible nature of true grace: the "scarlet," as distinguished from the glistening whiteness of the leprosy, might imply that the man was recovered to his former ruddy complexion, and represent the true penitent as come to himself and to his right mind; the "hyssop," a shrub commonly used in the legal sprinklings, might signify faith, of small estimation among men, but of great efficacy in applying the salvation of Christ to the soul; or it might show that mean instruments may be useful in directing sinners to Christ. These were to be dipped in the blood and water: for all our sincerity, repentance, and faith, are derived from the Holy Spirit, and are accepted only through the blood of the Saviour.

V. 8, 9. The healed leper, who was about to cleanse himself from ceremonial pollution, was required to wash his clothes, and, after "shaving off all his hair," to wash his body also. Then he was admitted into the camp; but it is supposed he was obliged there to lodge in some hut, apart from his family and all society, during seven days: and then, having again shaved, and washed his clothes and his body, he was restored, as clean, to his family and the congregation of God.—Thus the penitent, having in private conference with the ministers of Christ, and in the secret exercises of faith and prayer, got some comfortable hope of acceptance, proceeds to put away all the remainder of his sins, and seriously to prepare himself for a more solemn profession of his faith in the public ordinances of the gospel, and in communion with the Lord's people.

V. 10-20. To show that the leprosy was to be considered, both as a judgment immediately inflicted by the Lord, and also as an emblem of a transgressor under the condemnation and dominion of sin; these multiplied sacrifices and purifications were required before the healed leper was fully restored to the privileges of an Israelite. A trespass-offering, a sin-offering, and a burnt-offering, must be presented by him; perhaps the trespass-offering for the deviations from the prescribed rules, which might have been fallen into during his leprosy; the sin-offering for the offence which exposed him to this plague; and the burnt-offering as a renewed dedication of himself to the Lord. Peace-offerings might indeed afterwards be accepted as voluntary oblations, but they did not suit a leper's condition, till fully restored to communion with the people of God. Meat-offerings for each of these sacrifices were also required, and a small quantity of oil, the emblem of the sanctifying Spirit. A log was about three quarters of a pint.—The priest presented the man and his oblations, but he mar himself seems to have killed the 16 And the priest shall put his right finger in the oil that is in his left hand, and shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger seven times before the Lord.

17 And of the rest of the oil that is in his hand, shall the priest put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of the trespass-offering.

18 And the remnant of the oil that is in the priest's hand, he shall pour upon the head of him that is to be cleansed: and the priest shall make an atonement for him before the Lord.

19 And the priest shall offer the sin-offering, and make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed from his uncleanness, and afterward he shall kill the burnt-offering.

20 And the priest shall offer the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering, upon the altar: and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and he shall be clean.

21 ¶ And if he be poor, and cannot get so much; then he shall take one lamb for a trespass-offering to be waved, to make an atonement for him, and one tenth-deal of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering, and a log of oil;

22 And two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, such as he is able to get; and the one shall be a sin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering.

23 And he shall bring them on the eighth day, for his cleansing, unto the priest, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the Lord.

24 And the priest shall take the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the log of oil, and the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before the Lord.

25 And he shall kill the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the priest shall take some of the blood of the trespass-offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.

26 And the priest shall pour of the oil into the palm of his own left hand.

27 And the priest shall sprinkle with his right finger some of the oil that is in his left hand, seven times before the Lord.

28 And the priest shall put of the oil that is in his hand, upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the place of the blood of the trespass-offering.

29 And the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand, he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed, to make an atonement for him before the Lord.

30 And he shall offer the one of the turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, such as he can get;

31 Even such as he is able to get, the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, with the meat-offering. And the priest shall make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed, before the Lord.

32 This is the law of him in whom is the plague of leprosy, whose hand is not able to get that which pertaineth to his cleansing.

33 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, and unto Aaron, saying;

34 When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I give to you for a possession, and I put the plague of leprosy in a house of the land of your possession;

35 And he that owneth the house shall come and tell the priest, saying, It seemeth to me there is as it were a plague in the house:

36 Then the priest shall command that they empty the house, before the priest go into it to see the plague, that all that is in the house be not made unclean: and afterward the priest shall go in to see the house.

37 And he shall look on the plague, and, behold, if the plague be in the walls of the house, with hollow strakes, greenish or reddish, which in sight are lower than the wall;

38 Then the priest shall go out of the house to the door of the house, and shut up the house seven days.

39 And the priest shall come again the seventh day, and shall look: and, behold, if the plague be spread in the walls of the house; sacrifices.—The ceremonies, observed on this occasion, are exceedingly similar to those used in consecrating the priests. The principal difference was, that common oil was sprinkled seven times before the Lord, and put over the blood on the right ear, the thumb, and the great toe of the leper, and also poured on his head; whereas the holy anointing oil was sprinkled with the blood on the garments of the priests, and poured only on the head of the high-priest. But, in the former case, the blood was that of a sin-offering, taking away the guilt of crimes, in which the members of the body had been instruments, and thus, typically preparing them in general for the Lord's service; in the latter, it was the blood of "the ram of consecration," by which the priests were set apart to their special service. This similarity was very instructive. For every true penitent is, through Christ, a spiritual priest; and no priest, except the Saviour himself, was ever any better than a cleansed leper.—According to the emblem here given, the Christian's dedication of himself to the Lord, at his table, should be the counterpart of what has secretly passed between God and his soul; and the exercise of repentance and faith should always be followed by this public profession; in preparing for which, the counsel and approbation of pious and experienced ministers may be very useful.

V. 21-32. The condescension of the Lord to the case of the poor, in these institutions, is very instructive. Yet not one ceremony was omitted in the poor man's cleansing, though the sacrifices were cheaper. Even in this case, one lamb was absolutely necessary; which might intimate, that no sinner could ever have been saved, had it not been for "the Lamb that was slain, and hath redeemed us to God with his blood."—It is remarkable, that the priest, in putting the oil upon the head of him that was to be cleansed, is said to "make an atonement for him;" which may imply, that the work of the Spirit seals our interest in the great atonement, as well as enables us to apply it.

V. 34-53. This extraordinary plague is expressly spoken of, as immediately inflicted by the hand of God; and it is very probable it was one method, in which he rebuked the idolatry or iniquity which men committed in their houses, and the dishonest or sacrilegious gain which they brought into them, when the magistrate did not detect and punish them. Indeed, the plague of leprosy in general may well be considered, as one of the punishments in those cases, where it is said, "that man shall bear his iniquity;" and yet the criminal escaped the sword of the magistrate.—Many expositors endeavour to account in part for this singular disorder from natural causes, and likewise consider many of these rules and restrictions, as cautions against infection: but there is not the most remote intimation in these laws, or any where in Scripture, that the disorder was at all infectious.—The methods to be taken, in respect of the leprosy in houses, are very similar to those prescribed in the other cases; and also the ceremonies of purification, when the plague was removed; only no sacrifices were in this case brought to the altar.—It might represent the prevalence of sin in families, churches, and nations; and it very aptly described the state of Israel, when idolatry had so infected the whole nation, that it must, as unclean, be demolished, and carried captive to Babylon, the unclean metropolis of idolatry.—The rules prescribed seem to imply the care with which they who fear God, should protect against prevailing iniquities, and separate from them; and the attention and pains which magistrates, ministers, and masters of families should employ, in checking, restraining, censuring, and punishing sin, in preventing its progress, and in promoting reformation. They may also be emblems of the methods which the Lord takes with nations and churches, before he proceeds to extremities; and of the certain, shameful, and miserable destruction, which awaits them, when these methods prove unsuccessful: and they likewise intimate that the Lord frequently gives men up to that filthiness, in which they have 40 Then the priest shall command that they take away the stones, in which the plague is, and they shall cast them into an unclean place without the city.

41 And he shall cause the house to be scraped within round about, and they shall pour out the dust that they scrape off, without the city, into an unclean place.

42 And they shall take other stones, and put them in the place of those stones: and he shall take other mortar, and shall plaster the house.

43 And if the plague come again, and break out in the house, after that he hath taken away the stones, and after he hath scraped the house, and after it is plastered;

44 Then the priest shall come and look, and, behold, if the plague be spread in the house, it is a fretting leprosy in the house: it is unclean.

45 And he shall break down the house, the stones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the mortar of the house: and he shall carry them forth out of the city into an unclean place.

46 Moreover he that goeth into the house, all the while that it is shut up, shall be unclean until the even.

47 And he that lieth in the house, shall wash his clothes: and he that eateth in the house, shall wash his clothes.

48 And if the priest shall come in, and look upon it, and behold, the plague hath not spread in the house, after the house was plastered: then the priest shall pronounce the house clean, because the plague is healed.

49 And he shall take to cleanse the house two birds, and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop.

50 And he shall kill the one of the birds in an earthen vessel, over running water.

51 And he shall take the cedar-wood, and the hyssop, and the scarlet, and the living bird, and dip them in the blood of the slain bird, and in the running water, and sprinkle the house seven times.

52 And he shall cleanse the house with the blood of the bird, and with the running water, and with the living bird, and with the cedar-wood, and with the hyssop, and with the scarlet.

53 But he shall let go the living bird out of the city into the open fields, and make an atonement for the house: and it shall be clean.

54 ¶ This is the law for all manner of plague, of leprosy, and scall,

55 And for the leprosy of a garment, and of an house,

56 And for a rising, and for a scab, and for a bright spot:

57 To teach when it is unclean, and when it is clean: this is the law of leprosy.

CHAPTER XV.

Leaves respecting the running issues of men, 1-18; and of women, 19-35.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses, and to Aaron, saying,

2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When any man hath a running issue out of his flesh, because of his issue he is unclean.

3 And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue: whether his flesh run with his issue, or his flesh be stopped from his issue, it is his uncleanness.

4 Every bed, whereon he lieth that hath the issue, is unclean: and every thing whereon he sitteth shall be unclean.

5 And whosoever toucheth his bed, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

6 And he that sitteth on any thing, whereon he sat that hath the issue, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

7 And he that toucheth the flesh of him that hath the issue, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

8 And if he that hath the issue spit upon him that is clean; then he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

9 And what saddle soever he rideth upon that hath the issue, shall be unclean.

10 And whosoever toucheth any thing that was under him, shall be unclean until the even: and he that beareth any of those things, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

delighted.—Thus also sin is so interwoven with the fabric of the human body, that it must be taken down by death: but if previously the leprosy be cleansed, and sin be dethroned and mortified, the soul will be received into the holy mansions of the blessed, and the body also will be raised incorruptible; otherwise both soul and body must at last be carried forth out of the city of God, to that unclean place "prepared for the devil and his angels."—Yea, the earth itself must be destroyed by fire, as the unclean, leprous habitation of the polluted sons of men.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love, wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, quickens us" by his Spirit, we soon evidence the change, by sincerely repenting, and forsaking all our evil ways; we discover a right judgment, and disposition of heart, and become the servants of the Lord; but especially we are led, by the ministry of the word, to see the suitableness and preciousness of the atoning blood, and the sanctifying grace of Jesus Christ; and gladly washing in "th's fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness," we in heart and affection ascend, whither the risen Saviour is gone before. They, who are thus delivered from the prevailing power of sin, endeavour continually to "cleanse themselves" more and more "from all" remaining "filthiness of flesh and spirit, and to perfect holiness in the fear of God;" and they should deem it their duty and privilege, without needless delay, yet with previous examination and serious preparation, to seek admission to the communion of the saints; that with them they may publicly profess their faith, and their grateful love to the Saviour, in the ordinance of his appointment. Considering themselves as bought with a price, they now desire to do all in the name of Christ, and through him "to glorify God with body and spirit, which are his."—This is the true cleansing of a leper, and his subsequent admission into the courts of the Lord's house; or the consecration of an unclean sinner to the spiritual priesthood.—Have we then the inward consciousness ness of such a change? and have we thus joined ourselves to the Lord and to his people? If so, let us give him the praise; let us humbly remember what we were; let us abound in spiritual sacrifices according to our ability and opportunity; let us follow after holiness; and let us compassionate other poor lepers, and seek and pray for their cleansing also.—All these ancient institutions should remind us of the odious nature and the desert of sin, and the absolute necessity of the blood of Christ, to render our repentance, and the best of our "fruits meet for repentance," acceptable before a holy God; and that all, who are interested in the blood of the Redeemer, partake of his Spirit, and are devoted to his service. They likewise call on us to watch and pray; and to look well to our hearts, to our households, and to the Church of God; that in our places we may search and purge out our iniquity, and so prevent its prevalence to the destruction of those with whom we are connected. For the readiness of God to pardon the true believer is not more manifest, than his determination to destroy impenitent sinners.—Let us all then take warning, and cry earnestly to him to cleanse our souls before we die, that we may never enter the place where unclean spirits are tormented; but that, "when this earthly house of our tabernacle shall be dissolved, we may have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

NOTES.—CHAP. XV. V. 2. It is not needful for us particularly to consider the laws contained in this chapter: they are not binding on us; and the emblematical instruction may be sufficiently understood from the Practical Observations. In some cases, the disease mentioned was contracted by licentiousness; in others it might be the result of shameful secret practices; and even the diseases and infirmities, which were only an affliction, and had no immediate connexion with personal and actual sin, were all originally the consequence of the sinful state of human nature: nay, the cases, in which neither positive disease nor actual sin was implied, might be thus marked, to show how a fallen nature poisons every thing we do.

shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

12 And the vessel of earth, that he toucheth which hath the issue, shall be broken: and every vessel of wood shall be rinsed in water.

13 And when he that hath an issue is cleansed of his issue; then he shall number to himself seven days for his cleansing, and wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in running water, and shall be clean.

14 And on the eighth day he shall take to him two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, and come before the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and give them unto the priest.

15 And the priest shall offer them, the one for sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for him before the LORD, for his issue.

16 And if any man's seed of copulation go out from him, then he shall wash all his flesh in water, and be unclean until the even.

17 And every garment, and every skin whereon is the seed of copulation, shall be washed with water, and be unclean until the even.

18 The woman also with whom man shall lie with seed of copulation, they shall both bathe themselves in water, and be unclean until the even.

19 ¶ And if a woman have an issue, and her issue in her flesh be blood, she shall be put apart seven days: and whosoever toucheth her, shall be unclean until the even.

20 And every thing that she lieth upon in her separation, shall be unclean: every thing also that she sitteth upon, shall be unclean.

21 And whosoever toucheth her bed, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

22 And whosoever toucheth any thing that she sat upon, shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

23 And if it be on her bed, or on any thing whereon she sitteth, when he toucheth it; he shall be unclean until the even.

24 And if any man lie with her at all, and her flowers be upon him, he shall be unclean seven days: and all the bed whereon he lieth shall be unclean.

25 And if a woman have an issue of her blood many days out of the time of her separation, or if it run beyond the time of her separation; all the days of the issue of her uncleanness shall be as the days of her separation; she shall be unclean.

26 Every bed whereon she lieth all the days of her issue, shall be unto her as the bed of her separation: and whatsoever she sitteth upon shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her separation.

27 And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, and shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even.

28 But if she be cleansed of her issue, then she shall number to herself seven days, and after that she shall be clean.

29 And on the eighth day she shall take unto her two turtles, or two young pigeons, and bring them unto the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

30 And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering; and the other for a burnt-offering: and the priest shall make an atonement for her before the LORD, for the issue of her uncleanness.

31 ¶ Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness, that they die not in their uncleanness, when they defile my tabernacle that is among them.

32 This is the law of him that hath an issue, and of him whose seed goeth from him, and is defiled therewith;

33 And of her that is sick of her flowers, and of him that hath an issue, of the man, and of the woman, and of him that lieth with her which is unclean.

V. 11. If the diseased person rinsed his hands in water, just before he touched any one, he did not communicate pollution; otherwise he did.

V. 13-15. The purification and sacrifices, when this disorder was removed, were not very dissimilar to some of those, which were appointed at the cleansing of a leper; but the sacrifices were less expensive, and only a sin-offering and a burnt-offering were required.

V. 16-18. In these cases, as well as that of one who contracted pollution by touching an unclean person, nothing but ablution was required. This part of the law the Jews might observe at present; but it is said they do not think themselves bound by it, now they have no temple, and live in other lands; as it had reference to the sanctuary of God and the holy land. (31)

V. 24. When this was done in presumption, it was to be punished with death if detected; and if not, the offenders might expect to be cut off by the judgment of God: (20:18.) but when inadvertently, this purification was to be observed. This restriction must not be considered as merely ceremonial; for the nature of the case, and the punishment denounced against wilful transgressors, combine to prove it to be of perpetual moral obligation.

V. 28. It is not said, that the woman must "wash her clothes, and bathe her flesh in running water," as it had been of the man. (13) The reason of this difference does not appear.

V. 31. This shows, that these laws were principally intended to impress the minds of the Israelites with reverence for the sanctuary: and on the one hand, to show them what need they had of circumspection and purity of heart and life, in order to worship the holy God with acceptance; and on the other hand, that being sinners in a world full of temptations and defilements, they would continually need forgiveness, through the great atonement typified by all the sacrifices, and the sanctification of the Spirit shadowed forth by all the purifications. While they were encamped in the desert, it would not be very burdensome to bring the prescribed oblations; but after they were settled in Canaan, many of them at a great distance from the tabernacle, this would become much more difficult.—We may however observe, that many of the cases stated only required such washings as might anywhere be performed; and that those respecting which sacrifices were appointed, would more rarely occur. We may also suppose, that provided these were brought, when the person who had been unclean first came to the sanctuary, it would suffice; though distance or other hindrances prevented its being done immediately, at the expiration of the seven days.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We have great cause for thankfulness that we need fear no defilement but that of sin; and have no occasion for any of these ceremonial and burdensome purifications; yet when we consider how nearly we are beset with occasions of moral uncleanness, by day and by night, alone and in company, nay, sleeping as well as awake, we may well say with David, "Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults."—And these laws may remind us that God sees all those things, which are totally concealed from human eyes, and escape the censure of mortal men. Being unholiness, and having to do with so holy a God, we must for ever have been banished from his presence, had he not said, "From all their filthiness will I cleanse them;" and both provided the fountain for our purification, and appointed the means. In the daily exercise of self-examination, repentance, and faith in the one sin-offering of Christ, and by daily prayer for his sanctifying grace, we seek and find this purification, and this purity of heart, with which we shall be admitted to "see God."—While we observe the rule of God's word, and aim at his glory through Jesus Christ, all things become pure to us; but every thing is an occasion of increasing and communicating defilement to the impenitent and unbelieving. With serious recollection and humble reverence, we should approach our holy, heart-searching God in his ordinances, and in our daily walk be careful to "possess our vessels in sanctification and honour;" consulting expediency and avoiding excess in things most lawful, and being careful not to be "brought under the power of any."—Many of our diseases may remind us of our personal transgressions; all our infirmities evince that we are sinners: thence we should learn patience, and take occasion to humble ourselves before God more earnestly to seek forgiveness; and to wait with cheerful expectation for the coming of him "who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body according to the working, whereby he is able even to subdue all things to himself." (Note, Phil. 3:20, 21.)

CHAPTER XVI.

The high-priest must not enter the most holy place at all times; but, on a day of atonement, yearly observed, having slain a sin-offering for himself, and another for the people, he must enter with the sprinkling of blood, and burning of incense. 1-17. assurance that he would be continued and accepted in the priesthood; and to instruct him and his sons how to avoid the sin and punishment of Nadab and Abihu: for they would be perfectly safe whilst they adhered to the rule, and that example would render them attentive to it.

V. 2. The ordinary priests went into the sanctuary, where the golden candlestick and the table of show-bread were placed; and there, without "the veil, before the mercy-seat," they burnt incense upon the golden altar, one at a time: but they went no further. (Notes, Ex. 30:7. Luke 1:8-10. Heb. 9:6, 7.) The high-priest alone went within the veil into the holy of holies, where the ark of the covenant was; and that only on one day in the year: and it was at the peril of his life, if at any other time, or in any other manner, on ordinary occasions, he ventured into the presence of the Lord, of which the cloud of glory above the mercy-seat was the symbol; for the visible glory seems to have shone from the midst of a cloud.—When the tabernacle was to be removed, and on some other occasions, deviations from this strict rule became indispensable. (Notes, Num. 4:5. 2 Chr. 29:12-19.)—The worship appointed by the law was intimately connected with sensible objects, which are less revered when rendered familiar: but that of the New Testament, being more simple, is maintained entirely by faith; and the objects of it are admired and adored, in proportion to the frequency and intensity with which we meditate upon them: the Israelites therefore were commanded to keep their distance, but we are invited to draw near.

V. 3. The daily sacrifice doubtless preceded the solemnities appointed in this chapter.

V. 4. The repeated washings of the high-priest might typify Christ's perfect purity; but they more evidently reminded him of his own sinfulness.—He performed the appropriate services of this day, in the mean garments of the ordinary priests, not in his own rich robes: for Christ made atonement for us in his holy human nature, having laid aside his robes of majesty when he assumed "the form of a servant;" and as man he even now intercedes for us. (1 Tim. 2:5-7.)

V. 6. The word "offer" seems in this verse to mean no more than to present the bullock before the Lord, with confession of sins, and earnest prayer that it might be accepted as an expiatory sacrifice. (11)

V. 8-10. The word rendered "the scape-goat," (שְׂעִיר comp. of שָׁח a she-goat, and נָח to go away), signifies "the goat which went away." But the Jews say, that the place, to which the goat was led, is intended, and not the goat itself.—Probably, however, our translation is as expressive of the meaning of the type, as any other for which it could be changed. The other goat was allotted to the Lord to be sacrificed to him; and this was sent away into a separate place, at a distance from the tents and dwellings of Israel. (22. marg.)—The dying goat represented Christ suffering for our sins;—"the scape-goat," Christ rising to carry into effect the purposes of his death in the actual forgiveness and justification them before the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

8 And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats: one lot for the LORD, and the other lot for the "scape-goat."

9 And Aaron shall bring the goat upon which the LORD's lot fell, and offer him for a sin offering.

10 But the goat on which the lot fell to be "the scape-goat," shall be presented alive before the LORD, to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a scape-goat into the wilderness.

11 ¶ And Aaron shall bring "the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself," and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin-offering, which is for himself.

12 And he shall take a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the LORD, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small and bring it within the veil.

13 And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the LORD, that "the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy-seat that is upon the testimony," that he die not.

tion of his believing people. A goat was clean by the law, yet not cleanly as the sheep in the opinion of man; nay, goats are the emblem of the wicked in the representation of the day of judgment. (Matt. 23:32, 33.) Thus Christ seemed to men a sinner, but was absolutely sinless; and when "numbered among transgressors," he died by the sentence of man as a malefactor, but in the purpose of God as a Sacrifice.—Two kids of the goats having been provided as a sin-offering, it was decided by lot which should be slain and which should escape. A lot is a solemn appeal to God in a doubtful matter, relative to practice, as an oath is in testimonies and engagements; and each of them ought to be the last resource, when other methods of decision fail, and to be used as a solemn act of religion, or not at all. It is therefore an unanswerable objection to all lotteries and games of chance, that they are a profanation of a religious ordinance: for so it is every where spoken of in Scripture. "The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposal of it is of the LORD:" they are therefore an appeal to God to decide in a matter of covetousness, or of diversion; and so form a species of "taking his name in vain," not much unlike rash and profane swearing in trifling conversation, or when men are striking bargains.

V. 11-14. After the high-priest had slain the sin-offering for himself and his family, he seems to have left the other priests to prepare the blood, the fat, and the flesh of the sacrifice; and to have taken a censer full of burning coals from off the altar, and as much incense as both his hands would hold, which doubtless was put into a cup or plate for that purpose. With these he entered within the veil, immediately putting the incense on the coals, and causing the smoke to ascend before the mercy-seat; without which he must not have gone thither on pain of death. He then seems to have fetched the blood of his own sin-offering, and to have sprinkled it as prescribed; then to have gone forth again, and to have killed the people's sin-offerings, and with the blood of them to have entered the third time; and to have left the censer, till he had applied the blood to the altar of incense, and then to have entered the fourth time to fetch it away.—All that the Jewish writers have very copiously advanced on the manner in which the services of this day were performed, can only show how they understood the Scriptures which relate to the subject; and in some cases what variations, and additions to the divine appointments they made, which contribute little to our edification: for it should be kept in mind, that what learned men extract from them on these subjects, was written long after the temple was finally destroyed by the Romans, and the Mosaic ceremonial thus actually abolished; and many of their assertions are directly contrary to the words of the law.—As the mercy-seat was placed at the west end of the tabernacle, the word eastward must either mean, that the high-priest stood eastward of the mercy-seat when he sprinkled the blood; or that it was sprinkled on that part of the mercy-seat which faced the east.

15 ¶ Then ¹shall he kill the goat of the sin-offering that ²is for the people, and ³bring his blood within the veil, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat, and before the mercy-seat.

16 And he shall make ⁴an atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins: and so shall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation that ⁵remaineth among them, in the midst of their uncleanness.

17 And there shall be ⁶no man in the tabernacle of the congregation, when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, ⁷and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel.

18 And he shall ⁸go out unto the altar that ⁹is before the LORD, and make an atonement for it; and shall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put ¹⁰it upon the horns of the altar round about.

19 And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it, and ¹¹hallow it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel.

The uncleanness of the people, and all their manifold transgressions, contaminated even the tabernacle that was among them, and all its furniture; yea, the holy of holies; even if none either of the priests or people had entered, during the whole preceding year. 'See,' says Ainsworth, 'the horrid filthiness of sin!'—Thus the depravity of the human heart renders the best services of man defiled, so that he needs the atonement of the blood of Christ to render them acceptable.

V. 17. The high-priest was the grand type of Christ, under the Mosaic dispensation, and this solemnity more especially represented his sufferings for us on earth, and his intercession for us in heaven: the express prohibition therefore of any man, even of the priests, to enter into the tabernacle while the high-priest performed this typical service, emphatically showed, that no sacrifice, no intercession, must so much as in appearance be joined with those of Christ, in his mediatorial work.—It is said, that the high-priest spent a considerable part of the day in prayer for himself, his family, and the congregation; and without doubt this would be the case with those high-priests who fully entered into the design of the sacred service.

V. 18, 19. The altar of incense is generally supposed to be here intended; for this ceremony had been appointed for that altar, but not for the altar of burnt-offering, at the foot of which all the residue of the blood was poured out. (Note, Ex. 30:9, 10.) The typical meaning also requires this interpretation: for every thing within the sanctuary was purged with the blood shed without, at the altar of burnt-offering; as the efficacy of our Lord's intercession in heaven is derived from his sacrifice here on earth.—Aaron came out of the most holy place into the holy place for this part of the service.

V. 20—22. The word rendered "reconciling," is the same as that before translated "make atonement," and it signifies to cover or hide.—When the high-priest had sprinkled the blood of the two sin-offerings, separately, in the most holy place, upon the mercy-seat, and afterwards seven times each in the holy place before the mercy-seat, and applied it to the altar of incense; he then came out of the tabernacle, and laying both his hands on the head of the live goat, he confessed over it all the sins of Israel of every kind with their various aggravations. Thus the guilt was typically transferred to it, in respect of the temporal punishment: for such sacrifices "could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience;" much less could they actually remove the guilt of every individual in Israel, whether penitent or impenitent. But by this annual confession and atonement, the judgments of God were averted from the nation. The Lord still condescended to dwell among them, as his worshippers, notwithstanding their past transgressions; and they continued to enjoy the benefit of his ordinances and oracles.—In the latter days of the Jewish church the high-priest had a form of confession: but God prescribed none. An attentive observance of the divine law, and of the people's conduct, with suitable previous consideration, would enable him to do it much more profitably without one.—When the sins of Israel had thus been "put upon the head of the goat," a proper person was sent to lead him away into the wilderness, to a place sufficiently distant from the habitations of men; and there to let him go at liberty, bearing upon him their sins, never more to be heard of.—Christ "bare our sins in his own body on the tree;" they were imputed to him, and he bare the punishment due to them: this was typified by the goat which was slain and burnt. He then ascended into heaven, and by his intercession grounded on his atonement, renders our persons and services accepted: this was typified by the high-priest entering with the blood and incense into the most holy place. In consequence of this, the sins of all believers are entirely forgiven; and they are dealt with, as if they had never committed them: this was shadowed by the scape-goat sent away into the wilderness.

V. 23—25. When the scape-goat had been sent away, "bearing on him all the iniquities of Israel," the high-priest, going into the tabernacle, put off his linen garments, and left them there; (the Jews say, never to be worn again;) and then, having "washed his flesh with water in the holy place," he put on the rich garments which were peculiar to his office: for the more humiliating, sorrowful, and penitential part of the solemn service was now ended, and way was made for joy and exultation.—The word here rendered wash, is very frequently translated bathe; (26, 28.) but it is obvious, that it cannot exclusively mean the covering of the whole body with water; for there was no provision made for this, either in the holy place, or in the court of the tabernacle, which probably induced the translators to render it wash in this connexion, but whether the hands and feet alone were washed, or some of the other parts of the body, or every part of it, seems to have depended on circumstances. (15:6, 7, 13, 16.) The high-priest, having touched the scape-goat, seemed to have contracted a degree of ritual uncleanness, which his washing might refer to.—He then offered his own burnt-offering: and also that of the people, which probably means one prescribed in a subsequent law: (Num. 29:8.) though some suppose this to have been offered in the morning, and that the burnt-offering here mentioned was the evening sacrifice; all the intervening time having been taken up in the solemn services of the day. By these oblations, Aaron made a further atonement for himself and the people, at the altar of burnt-offering: and thus the expiation was completed, in respect of all things pertaining to the instituted worship of Israel.—As the bodies of the sin-offerings were reserved till the other solemnities were finished, before they were carried out of the camp to be burned; so the fat of them was likewise kept to be laid on the altar upon the burnt-offerings: for we have no reason to suppose, that this also was mentioned out of its proper order.

V. 26—28. To show still further the defiling nature of sin, and the insufficiency of these typical expiations; both he who led away the scape-goat, and he who burnt the sin-offering, contracted defilement and needed purification. Note, 6:30.—Jerusalem in later ages answered to the camp in the wilderness. (Note, Heb. 13:9-14.)

V. 29-31. The Israelites, all over the camp at this time, and all over the land afterward in Canaan, were required to spend this day in solemn humiliation before God for their sins: in godly sorrow, penitent confessions, and devotional exercises, either in secret, or in their families and assemblies: and for this purpose all other business was laid aside. Fasting is not expressly mentioned; but it is generally supposed to be implied, with several other expressions of contrition, and instances of self-denial. The day must also be observed as a most solemn sabbath, on which no work might be done, either by an Israelite or a stranger; for "afflicting their souls" for sin would be sufficient employment. (Marg. Ref. c. Note. Acts 27:9.)—Various reasons are assigned, why the tenth day of the seventh month was particularly appointed: but there seems no certainty in any of them.

V. 32-34. None except the high-priest was allowed to perform the solemn service of this day; and "he could not continue by reason of death:" it was therefore appointed, that he, among Aaron's descendants, who was anointed to the high-priesthood through succeeding generations, should thus make atonement for the sanctuary, the priests, and the people, once every year.—Moses anointed and consecrated Aaron, and probably Eleazar; but it is not expressly said by whom the high-priests in succession should be anointed. It is generally thought, that the eldest son of the high-priest, (if a proper person,) or the next in succession, was previously anointed and consecrated, that he might officiate, if any thing occurred to prevent the high-priest, as sickness or ceremonial uncleanness; and then he entered on that office when his predecessor died. It is probable, in this case, that the high-priest himself anointed his successor: if this had not been done we may suppose that the chief of the priests, in age or authority, anointed the eldest of the sons of the deceased high-priest, who had no defect or impediment: or perhaps, a subsequent anointing also was used after the high-priest's death; as David, after having been anointed by Samuel to succeed Saul, was repeatedly anointed after Saul's death, when he reigned on his regal office. (1 Sam. 16:12,13. Notes, 2 Sam. 2:4. 5:3.)—The words rendered "whom he shall anoint," seem only to mean, who shall be anointed; and may be rendered, "whom one shall anoint."—Many learned men imagine, that these atonements expiated nothing but the guilt contracted by transgressing the ceremonial law; and they seem to think it actually prevailed for the full and final pardon of these offences, to all for whom they were offered: but the varied expressions used on this occasion, show that all kinds of sins were alike atoned for: (16:21.) and the apostle's argument (Heb. 9:8-10.) proves that no sin was thus actually pardoned, as to the conscience. All true believers, using these as means of grace, were pardoned and accepted for the sake of the great Antitype and his atonement: the temporal punishment, for sins of every kind, was averted by the offering in that case instituted; but there were many crimes for which no sacrifice was appointed. The annual expiation of national guilt, however, prevented the forfeiture of the national covenant: but in idolatrous times it was either utterly neglected, or very carelessly attended to; and when the Substance came, all these shadows lost their use and efficacy: for the words rendered "everlasting," and "for ever," in this connexion mean perpetual during that typical dispensation. (Note, Gen. 17:7,8.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-4. These varied shadows of good things to come lead us into almost unavoidable repetitions: for it must surely be inexcusable to shut our eyes that we may not see, or seeing to refrain from noting, though repeatedly, these manifold remembrances of sin, as chargeable upon the best of men in their most holy actions; as polluting all things that the sinner touches; yet atoned for by nothing except blood, and nobler blood than that of bulls and goats. Doubtless these are so many demonstrations, that we rightly understand what the New Testament teaches of Christ, when we consider him as the Substance of all these shadows; and his Church the building, for which all these scaffolds were prepared. Here, in a type, we view our great High-Priest, our Sacrifice, our Advocate, our Saviour from sin. Thus he veiled his glory. "Because the children were partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same," and appeared in human nature, yet free from sin; though he had richer robes of glory and beauty, when angels saw and adored him "in the form of God," as their Creator and Lord. By the one sacrifice of himself he made an actual atonement for sin on earth; and with the same human nature, and with his own blood, he ascended into heaven, to appear before the Father's mercy-seat, to present the incense of his prevailing intercession for his people; in which service none, even of the spiritual priesthood, must presume to unite with him. Thence with his spiritual presence he meets his assembled disciples, and renders his ordinances sanctifying to them, and acceptable to God; and at the end of the world he "will come in his own glory, and in the glory of his Father," to complete the grand design.

V. 15-34. Here also in another glass, we see the Saviour in the sin-offering of the goat. In the likeness of sinful flesh, he suffered without the camp, by the hands of wicked men, but according to the purpose of God; while in the scape-goat we see him rising, and bearing the sins of all true believers into the land of forgetfulness. But in how many things do these shadows fail of truly representing the substance! It was very evident "that the way into the holiest was not made manifest," when the high-priest himself must enter so seldom, and so circumspectly, on pain of death. Jesus needed not to offer sacrifice for his own sin; for he was without sin. Though "the Lord thence to meet on him the iniquities of us all," yet he thence contracted no pollution, nor needed any purification, having perfectly expiated the whole. And feebly indeed do "the holy places made with hands" shadow forth the heaven of heavens; or the smoke of the fragrant gums, for a few hours in a year, his continued and meritorious advocacy.—Nor are the benefits which Israel as a nation derived from this annual atonement, or the external privileges thus continued to them, at all comparable to "the access with boldness to the throne of grace," the mercy, the peace, the spiritual and everlasting blessings, and consolations, which true believers in all ages enjoy through the atonement of the Son of God!—Yet let it be remembered that none but humbled souls, who "repent and bring forth fruits meet for repentance," can derive true comfort from these privileges. The proud, the carnal, the impenitent and unbelieving, have but the shadow still; a shadow often of their own devising, not of God's appointing. It was not requisite that Christ should suffer more than once; but we need constantly to look to him: and, besides our daily exercise of repentance, seasons set apart from time to time to afflict our souls, to humble ourselves before God, and to mortify our sinful desires, are very profitable, and have in all ages met with the approbation of God, and been sanctioned by the example of holy men. Nor will this mar our holy joy: it will rather purify it; it will endear the Saviour, and greatly assist us, in so looking unto him, that we may not be weary or faint in our minds, either in doing his will or suffering for his sake.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVII. V. 3-7. The language of this passage evidently means, that the Israelites, while in the wilderness, must not kill any of those animals which were appointed to be sacrificed, even for food, elsewhere, either in the camp, or without: but must bring them all, as peace-shed blood; and that man shall 'be cut off' from among his people:

5 To the end that the children of Israel may bring their sacrifices, which they offer ⁱⁿ the open field, even that they may bring them unto the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation unto the priest, ^{and} offer them ^{for} peace-offerings unto the LORD.

6 And the priest shall sprinkle the blood upon the altar of the LORD, ^{at} the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and ^{burn} the fat for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

7 And they shall no more offer their sacrifices ^{unto} devils, after whom they have ^{gone} a whoring. This shall be a statute for ever unto them ^{throughout} their generations.

8 And thou shalt say unto them, Whatsoever man ^{there be} of the house of Israel, or of the strangers which sojourn among you, ^{that} offereth a burnt-offering or sacrifice,

9 And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer it unto the LORD; even that man shall be cut off from among his people.

10 ¶ And whatsoever man ^{there be} of the house of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, ^{that} eateth any manner of blood; ^I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people.

11 For the life of the flesh ^{is} in the blood, and ^I have given it to you upon the altar, to make a atonement for your souls: for it ^{is} the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul.

12 Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, ^{neither} shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood.

13 And whatsoever man ^{there be} of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, which ^{hunteth} and catcheth any beast or fowl that may be eaten, he shall even ^{pour} out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust.

14 For ^{it is} the life of all flesh, the blood of it ^{is} for the life thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh: for the life of all flesh ^{is} the blood thereof: whosoever eateth it shall be cut off.

15 And ^{every} soul that eateth ^{that} which died of itself, or that which was torn with beasts, ^(whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger,) he shall ^{both} wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even: then shall he be clean.

16 But if he wash ^{them} not, nor bathe his flesh; then ^{he} shall bear his iniquity.

offerings, to the door of the tabernacle; that the blood might be sprinkled, the fat burnt on the altar, and the due portion allotted to the priest, according to the laws before given.—It may be supposed, that few animals, in proportion to the multitudes of Israel, would at this time be slain; the manna being their principal sustenance: and when they came into Canaan, and many of them lived far from the sanctuary, they might kill cattle for food in any place. “Even as the roe buck, and as the hart, so shalt thou eat them.” (Deut. 12:15, 22.) These animals, therefore, or any other clean animal, not appointed for sacrifice, if caught in the wilderness, might be eaten, without being brought to the door of the tabernacle. In the mean while, the transgression of this law would be imputed to any Israelite, as a capital crime; even as if he had committed murder; and, if the magistrate did not punish him, God himself would “cut him off from among his people.”—This law was intended to honour the divine institutions, and to put an end to the custom of offering sacrifices “in the open field,” or in any place indiscriminately, by habituating the people to bring all their oblations to the tabernacle; nay, to present the animals slain for food as a sacrifice to God.—It was also meant as a preservative from idolatry, which was even at that time secretly practised, in direct violation of the national covenant. For idolatry is evidently intended; when it is said, that the people “sacrificed to devils, after whom they had gone a whoring,” the common term for idolatry in the Scriptures. The word (שׂוֹמְרִים) translated “devils,” is taken from the roughness of a goat, and indeed signifies goats; and many translate it satyrs, which are fabled to have appeared in the form of goats in the woods to their votaries; and it is certain, that several imaginary deities of the Gentiles were often worshipped by images, formed nearly in the shape of goats.—Our translation, however, is not improper: for all idolatry in fact deifies devils, by rendering worship to those ambitious spirits, even as all wickedness is serving them; and by both Satan aspires to be honoured as the god and prince of this world. (Note, 1 Cor. 10:18-22.)—The prohibition of offering sacrifices elsewhere than at the sanctuary, was of perpetual obligation; though the people were afterwards allowed to kill animals for food in any place. (Notes, Deut. 12:5-7, 22.)—The whole kingdom of Israel, from the days of Jeroboam, habitually violated this law; and through the reigns of most of David’s successors, the kingdom of Judah was in great measure guilty of the same, whilst “the people sacrificed upon the high places.” In some cases the Lord dispensed with the letter of it, by accepting sacrifices from his prophets on particular occasions, which were offered elsewhere: for the typical import formed the grand intention of the ceremonial law.—The worship of God at the tabernacle represented the sinner’s approach to God in Christ, and through his mediation; but sacrifices, offered elsewhere, generally evinced a proud, contemptuous neglect of that great salvation.

V. 8, 9. A mixed multitude accompanied Israel out of Egypt, many of whom probably had before this returned; but some might still continue, and strangers from other parts might come on different occasions. None of these however were permitted, in the camp of Israel, while sojourning in the wilderness, or afterwards residing among them in the land of Canaan, to offer sacrifices of any kind to their idols, or any sacrifice even to JEHOVAH, except at the sanctuary: and if any one resolutely violated this law, he, as well as the rebellious Israelite, would be cut off from among his people. It is certain, that in after ages many uncircumcised persons brought sacrifices to the temple, which were offered by the priests in their behalf, though they themselves might not enter into the inner court; and it does not appear that this was a violation of the law. Many learned men, however understand all these passages, in which strangers are mentioned, of proselytes, or circumcised Gentiles, and the Septuagint is thought to favour this interpretation. But the proselytes of this description, in ordinary cases, seem to have been incorporated with the Israelites; and the rules, here and elsewhere given, may relate to the case of such persons, from other countries, as were not fully proselyted to the religion of Israel, whether they ever resided among the Israelites or not.

V. 10-16. This prohibition has repeatedly been considered. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 3:17. Gen. 9:3-4. Acts 15:19-21.) The expression, “I will set my face against that man,” implies the highest degree of indignation and avenging justice; and is seldom used, except for idolatry, or some very aggravated wickedness. (Note, 20:2-5.)—The reason of the prohibition is several times repeated; namely, because the life of the animal is in the blood, and it was appointed at the altar to make atonement for the lives of the people; as a type of him, who gave himself a sacrifice for our sins, to save our souls from eternal death.—This law extended even to clean animals taken in hunting, or wild fowl, as well as all tame land-animals; and the covering of the blood with dust taught the people, that some great mystery was implied in the atonement of blood, and tended to create a reverence of it: for the same reason they were forbidden to eat the animals which died of themselves; for the blood was in them also.—Yet this is not forbidden in such energetic language as the eating of blood in other cases; and a ceremonial purification was appointed, in case of failure, which is generally understood of inadvertent transgressions. The stranger was included in this statute also; and yet the Israelites might give that which died of itself to the “strangers within their gates,” or sell it to aliens. (Note, Deut. 14:21.) This seems to establish a distinction among strangers, according as they had in some degree embraced the religion of Israel, or the contrary. It also marked a distinction between directly eating the blood, either as actually separated from the flesh, or as wisely retained in it; and eating it with the flesh when it was unavoidably combined with it. The former was expressly forbidden to all the sons of Noah, the latter only to Israel: but after the use of blood in sacrifice ceased, the reason of the restriction in both cases was taken entirely away.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should greatly reverence all the Lord’s appointments, and it is at their peril if men contemn or change them; but the greatest danger lies in neglecting the salvation, which is in Jesus Christ. “In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.” “He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father, that sent him." "And he that gathereth not with him scattereth." If then his human nature be the true temple, in which God dwells and will be worshipped;—"if his name be Emmanuel,"—"if this be the true God, and eternal Life,"—"may we not add, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols?" (Note, 1 John 5:20, 21.) Surely all who value their own souls, should look to themselves in an age and nation, where men, called Christians, spend their lives in degrading him, whom prophets and apostles shed their blood to glorify, and "whom all the angels of God worship." For though we may offer our spiritual sacrifices in every place, yet unless we come by Christ as our Way, trust in him as our all-sufficient Atonement and almighty Saviour, and worship God in him; our services will be found an abomination, and our hope a delusion. From such temptations of the enemy we should keep at the utmost distance, by adhering to the word of God, constantly attending on his ordinances, and depending on his grace alone; and he will in that case preserve us from the snares of our crafty and malicious enemy: while faith in Christ, and love to him and our brethren, will sanctify even our ordinary meals, and convert them into spiritual sacrifices.—Though the prohibitions we have been reading are no longer in force, we may learn from them to adore the mystery of atoning blood with deep veneration; to use our liberty without cruelty or sensuality; and to exercise habitual self-denial and circumspection, while we seek to "purify ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." But let presumptuous, careless sinners tremble: for if God "set his face against them," he will at length cut them off with terrible vengeance.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVIII. V. 2-4. Many of the laws, enacted in this and the following chapters, were extremely different from the maxims and customs of other surrounding nations; and this introduction, though applicable to the general conduct of Israel, seems particularly to have related to these laws. The great Lawgiver, therefore, again and again confirms his statutes by adding, "I am JEHOVAH your God," intimating that he would be obeyed in all his requirements.—The people were especially warned against the customs of Egypt and Canaan, because most in danger from those nations; but others doubtless were also meant.

V. 5. Which if a man do, &c.] By an upright obedience to the moral precepts, and a believing attendance on the appointed ordinances of the law, not only temporal advantages, but the favour of God and eternal life might be expected; though not as a merited recompense. But probably the Lord intended thus to warn the Israelites of the danger not only of incurring condemnation by neglecting these commandments, but of resting in their imperfect obedience, instead of looking through them to "Christ, as the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth," as he alone perfectly fulfilled its demands. (Note, Ez. 20:11.) St. Paul repeatedly quotes this text as descriptive of the righteousness of the law, in distinction from the righteousness of faith: and this also shows, that the words relate to something more important than temporal prosperity. (Marg. Ref. e.)

10 The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover: for theirs is thine own nakedness.

11 The nakedness of thy father's wife's daughter, begotten of thy father, she is thy sister, thou shalt not uncover her nakedness.

12 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister: she is thy father's near kinswoman.

13 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister: for she is thy mother's near kinswoman.

14 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's brother, thou shalt not approach to his wife: she is thine aunt.

15 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter-in-law: she is thy son's wife, thou shalt not uncover her nakedness.

16 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife: it is thy brother's nakedness.

17 Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter, neither shalt thou take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to uncover her nakedness; for they are her near kinswomen; ⁱit is wickedness.

18 Neither shalt thou take a wife to her sister, ^jto vex her, to uncover her nakedness, besides the other in her life-time.

V. 6-17. As these laws forbid marriage betwixt near relations, they certainly prohibited unchastity between them, and every approach to it: and this may account in part, for the singular manner in which they are expressed.—The marriage of parents and children, or grandchildren, &c. in all the variations here spoken of, has something in it at first glance unnatural; and would be destructive of all authority and subordination, which are of the greatest importance to society. In the marriages of nephews with aunts, somewhat of the same kind may be perceived: and it is observable that the marriage of uncles with their nieces is not prohibited, though, from the supposed parity of the case, it is included in our laws. The only collateral relations which are forbidden to marry, are brothers and sisters, by whole or half blood, or by affinity, legitimate or illegitimate. The first marriages indeed of Adam's posterity must have been of brothers and sisters; and therefore we cannot pronounce them immoral in themselves. But, as human nature now is, it is very expedient that those, who are so much together in youth, should by such a restriction be taught to look upon all intercourse as prohibited and incestuous; which must assist in keeping out temptations to evil. It is moreover desirable, that by intermarriages, relationship, and its endearments and benevolence should be diffused, and an unsocial separation of families prevented; and this is the tendency of these laws. They are therefore to be considered, either as moral in themselves, or so nearly connected with other moral obligations, as to be proper to be observed by all mankind; and in general the wiser heathens have deemed such marriages unlawful, and abstained from them. It is elsewhere enjoined, that if a man died without issue, his surviving brother should marry his widow. (Note, Deut. 25:5-10.) But, as this appointment respected special purposes under the Mosaic dispensation, the prohibition of marrying a brother's wife is absolute to us; and, by parity of reason, that of a woman marrying the husband of her deceased sister.—Some laws on this subject seem essentially necessary, and have always been judged to be so by legislators, heathen as well as Christian. Yet if these laws are not obligatory under the Christian dispensation, there is no law of God in force regulating marriages, nor any, restricting the intermarriages of the nearest relations.—Did the Lord then intend to leave his church under the New Testament, wholly without law in this most important concern? or hath he confirmed his own pre-existing law, as of moral obligation? St. Paul's language concerning the incestuous Corinthian,—"Such fornication as is not named among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife," (1 Cor. 5:1).—implies that Christians had a rule in this respect, and a stricter rule than the Gentiles: yet that rule can be found only in this chapter. The restrictions here imposed are all of moral tendency, and highly beneficial: as missionaries and others, who attempt to propagate Christianity among the heathen, know and feel more than other Christians; because others live among those, who are habitually restricted by them. I therefore must consider these laws as in equal force at this day among Christians, as they were formerly in Israel: those implied by parity of reason, as well as those more expressly mentioned.

19 ¶ Also thou shalt not approach unto a woman to uncover her nakedness, as long as she is put apart for her uncleanness.

20 Moreover thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's wife, to defile thyself with her.

21 And thou shalt not let any of thy seed pass through the fire to Molech, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the LORD.

22 Thou shalt not lie with mankind, as with womankind: it is abomination.

23 Neither shalt thou lie with any beast to defile thyself therewith: neither shall any woman stand before a beast to lie down thereto: it is confusion.

24 Defile not ye yourselves in any of these things: for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out before you.

25 And the land is defiled: therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land itself vomiteth out her inhabitants.

26 Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments, and shall not commit any of these abominations; neither any of your own nation, nor any stranger that sojourneth among you;

27 (For all these abominations have the men of the land done, which were before you, and the land is defiled;)

28 That the land spue not you out also, when ye defile it, as it spued out the nations that were before you.

29 For whosoever shall commit any of these abominations, even the souls that commit them shall be cut off from among their people.

30 Therefore shall ye keep mine ordinance, that ye commit not any one of these abominable customs, which were committed before you, and that ye defile not yourselves therein: I am the LORD your God.

according to the regulation of our ecclesiastical law; perhaps with the single exception of an uncle being prohibited to marry his niece. Yet even this exception may be doubtful, and is not to be insisted on.

V. 18. Some think, that this verse contains an express prohibition of polygamy; supposing the word sister merely to signify a wife, which the person spoken of had already married. But though the Mosaic law contains no explicit allowance of polygamy; yet there is no other passage which favours the interpretation of this text as a direct law against it, and many things in the whole subsequent history imply a connivance at it. The context also seems to suggest a more literal interpretation; namely, the marrying of two sisters together. This conduct in Jacob proved a source of vexation both to Leah and Rachel; who were more jealous of each other than of the handmaidens whom they willingly gave to their husband: and perhaps it would be found on trial, that those who before had lived together in the intimate equality of this near relationship, would be more apt to rival each other, if married to the same man, than strangers would be; at least their jealousies and bickerings would be more unseemly and distressing. As a woman might not in ordinary cases marry the brother of her deceased husband; it can hardly be supposed, that it was allowable for a man to marry the sister of his wife, even after her decease; though this verse seems not to contain a prohibition of it.—These are all the restrictions on marriage, which are contained in the divine law; and such as pride, covetousness, or human policy have superadded, do not seem to have proved beneficial to mankind.

V. 21. Molech is nearly the same as the word always rendered king, and is of similar meaning with Baal, which signifies lord, or governor. It is generally supposed, that the sun was worshipped under the name of Molech. Children on some occasions were consecrated to him, by passing through the fire; but at other times, one of the family was sacrificed to him, in a most cruel manner, in order to secure his favour and protection to the rest. (Note, 20:2-5.) The former practice is supposed to be here meant.—The several abominations, afterwards mentioned, certainly were practised by the heathens, even in their religious worship; as it might be proved by the remaining unexceptionable testimonies of pagan writers themselves.

V. 21-30. The word abomination, repeatedly used in these verses, seems especially to refer to the vile and unnatural practices above spoken of. Incestuous marriages indeed of the gross kind always were an abomination; but some of those above prohibited had in certain circumstances been necessarily allowed, nay, virtually enjoined, by the Creator himself; and though in other circumstances they are highly inexpedient and wisely prohibited, yet they must not be classed with the unnatural practices here reprobated with such decided abhorrence.—The observance of the divine laws respecting marriage, would be a strong barrier to Israel, to keep them at a great distance from the abominations of the heathen; the example of the Canaanites, on whom they were commissioned to execute the vengeance of God, would be a salutary but awful warning: and at length, when they nevertheless copied the example of the devoted nations, and were driven out of the promised land, the denunciation, here implied, was proved to be a prediction of what would take place in remote ages.—Nothing can exceed the energy of the strong figure here used, of a land loathing and vomiting out its inhabitants.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If we would obey the divine commands, we must break off bad customs, and also renounce conformity to the world: for wherever we go, we shall find its maxims and observances, in many things, directly opposite to the law of God; yet enforced with an authority which rivals his, and which is disobeyed with great difficulty, and at the expense of much contempt and reproach. But the broad, smooth, frequented paths of the world lead to destruction; the ways of God to life eternal: every one of his commandments is also good in itself, and conducive to the peace, comfort, and true honour of the human species; and he is as kind in what he prohibits, as in what he allows. He formed mankind for social life, created them male and female, instituted marriage, and blessed it; he hath formed the regulations of it in wisdom and love, for the good of individuals, of families, and of society,—of the present and of succeeding generations. Where his laws are observed, the most important advantages follow: where they are disregarded, disgrace, disease, and numberless most destructive evils ensue.—But what a sink of iniquity is the human heart, that it should be necessary to prohibit such detestable, filthy, and cruel practices, as are here mentioned! That ever it should enter into the minds of rational creatures to serve the devil and their own lusts, with degradation far beneath the brutes themselves! From this polluted fountain the earth hath been filled with abominable crimes in all ages, and the very creation groans under the burden of man's iniquity: and though one land after another vomiteth out its inhabitants, as unable any longer to endure their wickedness; and though one generation is swept away after another into the grave; yet still the earth is filled with sin. Ere long it shall be burnt up with all its works: and "new heavens and a new earth, in which dwelleth righteousness," shall succeed. But unless we be previously cleansed in the fountain of the Redeemer's blood, and have a "new heart given us, and a new spirit put within us," we shall not find admission there. Let us then profit by the awful examples of vengeance recorded, and fear the threatenings denounced, in the sacred oracles: let us mortify the deeds of the body, and learn self-denial: and above all, aware of the deceitfulness and wickedness of the human heart, let us walk watchfully, and humbly dependent upon the grace of God sought in earnest prayer. Then we shall escape the condemnation of the wicked, and the Lord himself will be our God and our Portion for ever.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIX. V. 2. Holiness consists in separation from sin, devotedness to God, and conformity to his moral excellences, which are also transcribed in his holy law. Without holiness we cannot walk with God, or have fellowship with him; and though an external, or ceremonial, purity was called being "holy to the LORD," yet it was only as an emblem of that purity of heart which was especially intended. (Note, 1 Pet. 1:13-16.) This injunction is repeated on different occasions, to enforce the several prohibitions to which it is annexed. (Marg. Ref.) Should the worshippers of a holy God copy the vile practices of abominable idolaters?

V. 3. In order to understand most of these precepts, an attentive mind and an obedient heart, in the reader, are more requisite than the labour of the expositor.—"Every man," whatever his age, wisdom, or wealth may be, is commanded "to fear his mother," (here placed first), "and his father." That is, to treat them with respect and tenderness, fearing to grieve or offend them, and reverencing their authority an thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed: neither shall a garment mingled of linen and woolen come upon thee.

20 And whoever lieth carnally with a woman that is a bondmaid betrothed to an husband, and not at all redeemed, nor freedom given her; she shall be scourged: they shall not be put to death, because she was not free.

21 And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the LORD, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, even a ram for a trespass-offering.

22 And the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass-offering before the LORD, for his sin which he hath done: and the sin which he hath done shall be forgiven him.

23 ¶ And when ye shall come into the land, and shall have planted all manner of trees for food, then ye shall count the fruit thereof as uncircumcised: three years shall it be as uncircumcised unto you: it shall not be eaten of.

24 But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy, to praise the LORD withal.

25 And in the fifth year shall ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you the increase thereof: I am the LORD your God.

26 ¶ Ye shall not eat any thing with the blood: neither shall ye use enchantment, nor observe times.

27 Ye shall not round the corners of your heads, neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard.

28 Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you: I am the LORD.

29 Do not prostitute thy daughter, to cause her to be a whore; lest the land fall to whoredom, and the land become full of wickedness.

30 Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the LORD.

31 Regard not them that have familiar spirits, neither seek after wizards to be defiled by them: I am the LORD your God.

32 Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head and honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God: I am the LORD.

33 And if a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him.

34 But the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

35 Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in mete-yard, in weight, or in measure.

36 Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin shall ye have: I am the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt.

37 Therefore shall ye observe all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them: I am the LORD.

fully married, nor yet in any degree set at liberty; her case was made different from that of a free woman espoused to a husband; for then both parties would have been adjudged to death. (20:10. Note, Deut. 22:22-27.) Yet the crime was heinous, and must not be passed over, but "there must be a scourging," (a most severe scourging, as the word implies,) probably of the man as well as of the woman; and he must also offer a trespass-offering for his sin, as the ransom of his life; which the woman having no property was not expected to do.—The legal sacrifices could not atone for sin, as pertaining to the conscience, in such a manner that the impenitent should be actually forgiven in respect of the eternal judgment; and the penitent and believing, whether sin-offerings or trespass-offerings were required or not, were certainly pardoned and justified through the Saviour that was to come: there was therefore no real difference in the situation of the two parties; both were rescued from death; and their final salvation, or the contrary, depended on something widely different from the ceremonial institutions. The words rendered "betrothed to an husband," are translated in the margin, reproached by, or for man; as if they implied that the woman was previously of suspicious character; and this has been by some considered as the ground of the difference between this and other cases of a similar kind.

V. 23-25. Whatever was unfit for use was accounted uncircumcised, till that unfitness was removed, or ceased. The fruit of young trees was therefore to be thus deemed unclean, during three years; and either to be destroyed before it was ripe, or left to perish. On the fourth year it was consecrated as a thank-offering to praise the Lord: but in the fifth the owner might eat of it, and expect a blessing to render the increase abundant.—Some suppose that this law had reference to the idolatrous customs of the surrounding nations; but it also might be intended to teach the people to wait patiently the Lord's time for every desirable good, and not to yield to the eagerness of their natural appetites and inclinations.—Thus he also waits for the maturity of our fruits of righteousness; though our first attempts to glorify him may be unmeet for that purpose, even as the fruits of these young trees, whilst they were to be accounted uncircumcised.

V. 26. Use enchantment, &c. Astrological calculations, or other attempts at prediction or fortune-telling; the use of spells and charms for the cure of diseases; with many other practices, too frequent among professed Christians; are attempts to revive this worship of Satan, and should be abhorred as his very ordinances: being means used to get help and information elsewhere, instead of depending on God, submitting to him, and waiting for all needful good from him in the use of lawful means. (31)

V. 27-29. Some explain the words, "Thou shalt not mar the corners of thy beard," as forbidding the Israelites to shave their beards; but if this had been intended, it would have been more plainly expressed. (Marg. Ref. r, s.) The meaning of the several clauses is not very clear; but, no doubt they were all superstitious practices of the Heathens. And perhaps the prohibition of the twenty-ninth verse has also relation to the very common practices of idolaters in honour of their infamous deities: and indeed nothing could so promote lewdness as to make it a part of religion.—But alas, numbers even in Christian countries, are guilty of violating this prohibition, to a degree not in general known, or suspected.

V. 33, 34. The Israelites were commanded to encourage strangers to reside among them, that they might learn the knowledge of God, and of his truth, law, and worship. Remembering the kind usage which their fathers at first met with in Egypt, and how reasonable it appeared to them, they were required to imitate it; and remembering how cruel and hard they deemed their subsequent oppression, they were cautioned to avoid copying so bad an example.—The Jews most unreasonably expound this precept, as relating only to such strangers as had been fully proselyted to their religion; whereas the reason assigned for it demonstrates, that all strangers who dwelt among them were intended. By such traditionary glosses, they have, ever since as well as before the coming of Christ, explained away the holy commands of God; so that their comments should be read with peculiar caution, and constant reference to the New Testament.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Though "the LORD is rich in mercy and goodness," yet his perfect holiness renders it impossible that we should be happy in him, or that he should delight in us, unless we be made holy also; those therefore, whom he especially loves, he effectually sanctifies. To understand the nature of holiness, let us meditate on these moral precepts: for there we shall learn, that it consists in reverencing the majesty and authority of God, in loving his excellency, in gratefully remembering his mercies, in delighting in his worship and service, in keeping his sabbaths, and reverencing his sanctuary; in submitting to his will, and confiding in his power and love: and that it includes truth, integrity, equity, and universal benevolence, love to our brethren, compassion for the miserable, liberality to the poor, kindness to strangers and to enemies, with a suitable regard to all relative duties; and also purity, chastity, sobriety, and an habitual government of the appetites and passions, according to the commandments of God. Would we know in what manner this holiness is to be attained, we must consider the intention and meaning of the positive institutions of the Scripture; that by a believing attendance on those which the New Testament enjoins we may through them receive, from the Redeemer's fulness, the

CHAPTER XX.

The man who gave of his seed to Molech must be stoned; or the Lord would cut him off, with those who consorted with him, and those who consulted with wizards, 1-6. Holiness required, 7, 8. Capital punishments appointed for him who cursed his parents, or committed adultery, or some kinds of incest, or unnatural crimes; and vengeance denounced on such as violated the laws concerning marriage, 9-21. Exhortations to holy obedience, 22-26. Witches and wizards to be stoned, 27.

AND THE LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Again, thou shalt say to the children of Israel, "Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth any of his seed unto Molech; he shall surely be put to death: 'the people of the land shall stone him with stones.

3 And 'I will set my face against that man, and will cut him off from among his people: because he hath given of his seed unto Molech, to defile my sanctuary, and to 'profane my holy name.

4 And if the people of the land do any ways 'hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his seed unto Molech, 'and kill him not;

5 Then I will set my face against that man, and 'against his family, and will cut him off, and all that go a whoring after him, to commit whoredom with Molech, from among their people.

6 And the soul that turneth after such as have 'familiar spirits, and after wizards, to 'go a whoring after them, I will even set my face against that soul, and will 'cut him off from among his people.

7 'Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy: for I am the LORD your God.

8 And 'ye shall keep my statutes, and do them: I am the LORD which 'sanctify you.

9 For every one that 'curseth his father or his mother, shall be surely put to death: he hath cursed his father or his mother, 'his blood shall be upon him.

Jam. 1:22. Rev. 22.

sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit; remembering also, that the vanities of the world, and the superstitions of false religion, are as much the means of sin, as divine ordinances are means of grace; and therefore we must withdraw from them to the utmost distance, if we would be the holy people of a holy God.—As he is peculiarly attentive to the poor, if we are his people we shall be so too; and "while he gives us all things richly to enjoy," we must not think that our indigent brother is to be always put off with bare necessities, but should enable him to taste the comforts of life also; not deeming that wasted which he receives. All these duties must be performed from a regard to the Lord, who both avenges the injuries done, and recompenses the kindness shown to the, who cannot avenge themselves, or make return for the benefits they receive; and who especially blesses those who obey their parents, and give honour to whom honour is due.—And let it be well noticed, that the great Judge of the world not only observes and will certainly punish gross and scandalous instances of injustice, but also the petty dishonesty of false weights and measures: and our consciences ought to be no less exact and minute.—Alas! how prone to iniquity must man's heart be, when parents are capable of prostituting their own daughters; and when such shameful practices, instead of exciting abhorrence, are readily imitated till they overspread whole nations! But though some crimes are more enormous than others, none can be expiated save by the blood of Christ, or forgiven without repentance: nor should any precepts of the Lord be accounted small; but we must show our simplicity and godly sincerity, by giving every part of religion its due place and proportion, without neglecting or perverting any.—If sin is the greatest of all evils, what need have we to be thankful to those who tell us plainly of our faults, and will not suffer sin upon us! and how important is it that we learn to perform this duty in a proper manner! But all men should detest the conduct of those who backbite and slander others, and rob them of their characters, when they have no power to defend themselves.—Finally, the nearer our lives and tempers are to the precepts of God's law, the happier shall we be, and the happier shall we render all around us, and the better shall we adorn the gospel: let us then daily and earnestly pray, "Lord, have mercy upon us, and write all thy laws in our hearts, we beseech thee." (Ex. 20: P. O.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XX. V. 2-5 (Note, 18:21.) Molech

10 And the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, 'the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death.

11 And the man that 'lieth with his father's wife hath uncovered his father's nakedness: both of them shall surely be put to death; 'their blood shall be upon them.

12 And if a man 'lie with his daughter-in-law, both of them shall surely be put to death: they have wrought 'confusion; their blood shall be upon them.

13 If a man also 'lie with mankind, as he lieth with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them.

14 And if a man take 'a wife and her mother, it is wickedness: they shall be 'burnt with fire, both he and they; that there be no wickedness among you.

15 And if a man 'lie with a beast, he shall surely be put to death: and ye shall slay the beast.

16 And if a woman approach unto any beast, and lie down thereto, thou shalt kill the woman and 'the beast: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them.

17 And if a man shall take his 'sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, and see her nakedness, and she see his nakedness, it is a wicked thing; and they shall be cut off in the sight of their people: he hath uncovered his sister's nakedness; he shall bear his iniquity.

18 And if a man shall lie with a woman 'having her sickness, and shall uncover her nakedness, he hath 'discovered her fountain, and she hath uncovered the fountain of her blood: and both of them shall be cut off from among their people.

is supposed to have been an idol, worshipped by the Ammonites and neighbouring nations, to whom they sometimes offered their children as sacrifices; according to some authors in the following manner. An image of an enormous size, made of hollow iron, was heated with great fires beneath; and when it was sufficiently hot, they put the children into its arms, where they were burnt to death: mean time their cries were drowned in the noise of drums or trumpets, and of musical instruments played on for that purpose. At other times the children only passed through a fire, or between two fires, and were thus devoted to this demon. The former, however, is supposed to be here meant. Nothing can be conceived more horrible than such practices. Nothing can more demonstrate the madness and desperate wickedness of the human heart, and the power of Satan, than that there should be any need to enact such laws as this, and to prohibit parents from such cruelty to their own offspring on pain of death; except it be that, notwithstanding numbers of Israelites were, from age to age, so infatuated as to persist in this barbarity! (Marg. Ref. b.) Committed by them, it was the highest imaginable contempt of the Name, sanctuary, and worship of God; and a shameful violation of their national covenant! So that the very strangers who were allowed to sojourn among them, must pay such respect to the sanctuary of JEHOVAH, who dwelt among his people, and to his holy name, as to stand aloof from these abominations, on the same penalty as native Israelites; and if the criminal escaped the sword of the magistrate, through a wicked connivance, God determined to execute vengeance on him, on his family, and on all who abetted this spiritual whoredom.—Ten thousands of sacrifices equally horrible are offered in India annually, and connived at by British Rulers!

22 ¶ Ye shall therefore keep all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them; that the land whither I bring you to dwell therein spue you not out.

23 And ye shall not walk in the manners of the nations which I cast out before you: for they committed all these things, and therefore I abhorred them.

24 But I have said unto you, Ye shall inherit their land, and I will give it unto you to possess it, a land that floweth with milk and honey: I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people.

25 Ye shall therefore put difference between clean beasts and unclean: and between unclean fowls and clean: and ye shall not make your souls abominable by beast or by fowl, or by any manner of living thing that creepeth on the ground, which I have separated from you as unclean.

26 And ye shall be holy unto me: for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine.

was infected by strangling; in others stoning is expressly appointed; and in one instance burning with fire, though the reason of this latter sanction is not obvious. It is not said, that the criminals should be burnt alive: and when Achan, by the express direction of the Lord, was burnt with fire, he was first stoned: and it does not appear, why this might not be the case in the present instance, and on similar occasions. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When neither the fear and love of God, nor regard to a future and eternal recompense, nor any motives of reason, truth, decency, and the welfare of society, can deter men from enormous crimes; it is needful for the magistrate to use his sword, and by cutting off a mortified limb, to prevent further mischief to the body politic. Such examples of severity, when not needlessly multiplied, are wholesome lessons; and the lives of individuals, thus taken away, prevent the increase of wickedness, and the accumulation of national guilt. But if magistrates neglect their duty, and criminals evade human laws, God will set his face against them, and against those who suffer them to escape, and even against their families likewise. And so pleas of compassion, or of indulgence to relations, friends, or the female sex, will be noticed in excuse of this criminal lenity, which emboldens numbers to venture on crimes, till whole nations are corrupted, and desolating judgments prove the awful consequence.—Are we shocked at the unnatural cruelty of ancient idolaters, in sacrificing their children to the devil in the form of an idol? Alas! there are vast multitudes of parents, who, by their pernicious instructions and wicked examples, and by the mysteries of iniquity into which they early initiate their children, effectually devote them to Satan's service, and blindly forward their everlasting destruction, in a manner no less to be lamented. But what an account must they at last render to God! and what a meeting will they have with their children at the day of judgment! On the other hand let children remember, that "he who cursed father or mother was surely put to death," with "his blood upon his own head." Let adulterers hear the judgment of God respecting their crimes; and remember that the slackness of human justice, and the impunity which now emboldens us in sin, can give but an expiring joy, and will probably occasion their still deeper guilt and condemnation.—The secret and unnatural crimes, of which many are conscious who conceal them from men, will soon be brought to light, and into judgment, before a holy God: and criminals indulgences will surely issue in dreadful lamentations hereafter, if not mourned for with godly sorrow and bitter remorse in this world.—Such crimes caused God to abhor the Canaanites, and he will much more abhor them in his professing people. By his word and ordinances he hath severed us from others, and is known by the name of "THE LORD that sanctifieth us." Let us then separate ourselves from the company and practices of the ungodly; and let us attend on his ordinances, plead his promises, and seek his salvation: that we may be holy in reality, as well as in profession; that we may learn and observe the difference between clean and unclean in every thing; and that the Lord may indeed be our God and Portion, and we his people in time and to eternity.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXI. V. 1—5. The word rendered the dead, is far more commonly translated, the soul, or the life. When it signifies the dead, it means the body of some creature which lately had life. The paucity of words, in most languages, occasions phrases to prevail in a sense widely different from the primary meaning of the terms composing them; and consequently they must be understood according to the connexion.—The clause here implies, that the priests must not defile themselves for any person whatever, when dead, except the near relations particularly specified; and consequently that they must in no other case attend a funeral or enter the tent where a corpse lay. The wife is not here mentioned, and the marginal reading (4) seems to imply that she was excepted; yet this is not likely; and when Ezekiel, who was a priest, refrained by express command from signs of mourning for his wife, the people deemed it very strange. Being a distinguished person among his people, his example and ministrations were of great importance; and he must not "profane himself," or separate himself from his sacred employments on any ordinary occasion. (Notes, Ez. 24:16—24.)—By these restrictions, and the prohibition of expressing grief by any extravagant or superstitious tokens, the priests were taught to moderate their natural passions; and perhaps to avow their belief of a future state. (Note, 1 Thes. 4:13—18.)

V. 6. The office of the priests in offering sacrifices, (here called "the bread of their God," the provisions of God's house and altar, where he, as it were, came and feasted with his people,) would place them in a conspicuous light, and many would note their conduct: it behooved them, therefore, to be very circumspect, lest God and his worship should be disregarded, through their misconduct even in lighter matters.

V. 7. A priest must not marry a woman who had been a harlot, though penitent; or one of suspicious character, or ungodly; or one who had been divorced, as it might be presumed that it was for some misconduct. All the male children of the priests were priests by birth, 'and he that would seek a godly seed must first seek a godly wife.' Henry.

V. 8. This seems addressed to Moses, (and to all subsequent rulers in Israel,) as a command to exercise his authority and influence, that the priests might be preserved from unlawful marriages, and from every other thing inconsistent with their sacred character.

V. 9. Whoredom in a priest's daughter would be highly disgraceful to religion, and a reflection upon the parent's care of his family. The dreadful punishment denounced by God himself would not only be a restraint upon the children; (Note, 20:10-19,) but likewise a lesson to the parents to watch over them, to keep them out of the way of temptation, and to give them a proper education.

V. 10-15. The eldest son of the high-priest is supposed by many to have been anointed in his father's lifetime, if he came to a proper age, and to have acted as his deputy, in case of sickness or ceremonial uncleanness; and upon his death the office immediately devolved upon him; nor must he incapacitate himself for performing it, on any account whatever. It is therefore thought that he, or the apparent successor to the high-priesthood, was bound by these rules, as well as the high-priest actually in office.—The high-priest, however, as the immediate type of Christ, must show greater superiority over his natural affections, and be more circumspect in his whole conduct than the other priests. He must therefore marry none but a virgin; nor leave any stain on his posterity, either by his own improper marriage, or by allowing them to marry improperly. Many learned men indeed think, that all the priests were bound by the law of marrying none but virgins; but they can bring no proof of it from Scripture, except from Ezekiel's mystical vision, (Note, Ez. 44:22.) which certainly varies in many things from the law of Moses; and the context, in this chapter, evidently implies the contrary. It is more properly observed, that polygamy was virtually forbidden the high-priest; but not a second marriage, as some have imagined.

V. 17-24. These several blemishes in the body incapacitated the priests for some of their sacred work; yet did not exclude them from their maintenance, or from subordinate services, or even from instructing the people. They were external emblems of the scandals and reproaches of sin, resting on a man's character, which render even the penitent unfit for the ministry, until the impression, made by them on the minds of men, be done away by a continued course of good behaviour.—Learned men have copiously showed, that the pagans literally observed several of these rules respecting priests; probably they originally derived their usages from the law of Moses.—Some have argued from these laws that a deformed person, or one who wants a limb, or is otherwise materially blemished, should not be a minister of the gospel; but this is a groundless imagination, as these incapacitating blemishes were mere shadows of a wrong state of heart and mind.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As these priests were types of Christ, so all ministers especially must be followers of him; that their example may elucidate and corroborate their instructions, and teach the people in imitating them to imitate the Saviour. He was perfectly superior to all natural affections; and in the business of his heavenly Father, would not be interrupted or biassed, even by his regard to his earthly parent. Absolutely dead to the world, and filled with zeal for the glory of the Father and compassion to the souls of men, he was unwearied in his labours, and persevering in his sufferings till he could say, "It is finished." Without blemish, and separate from sinners, he executed his priestly office on earth; and being ascended into heaven, he is preparing his church of redeemed sinners, that "not having spot, or blemish, or any such thing," he may espouse it as a chaste virgin unto himself for ever; and he requires all his family to remember the relation in which they stand unto him, and to act consistently. What manner of persons then should his ministers be? Surely their characters should be free from scandal; and their hearts from the dominion of sin, and from the love of filthy lucre, worldly honour, and sensual indulgence! They should be unwearied and cheerful in their work, "giving themselves wholly to it," and letting nothing divert them from it. They should be patient in tribulations, superior to the power of their passions, circumspect in their walk, cautious in their connections, and exemplary in the government of their families. Nothing is of more importance to the interests of religion than the unblemished character, and the sober, decent, and respectable conduct and demeanour of the wives and children of ministers: for the people will always think themselves authorized to go further in conformity to the world, and its vain fashions and customs, and in pursuit of its interests and pleasures, than the minister and his family do; and will interpret his preaching by their practising; supposing him accountable for their misconduct, or as giving it the sanction of his approbation. (Notes, 1 Tim. 3:2-5.)—Our God is as holy now, as when he commanded the offending daughter of a priest to be burnt with fire; how then should the children of ministers tremble lest they disgrace the character of their parents, prevent the effects of their ministry, and expose themselves to the fierce wrath of God! Equally careful should this render ministers of their children; not aiming to give them a genteel education, in conformity with the customs and fashions of the world; but to train them up in useful knowledge, with sobriety, frugality, and industry, and in the fear of God; restraining and correcting every evil propensity, setting them a good example, and offering continual prayers for them: for the child's wickedness will be considered as the parent's reproach, as well as affliction; and frequently it is so, though not always.—But we are all, if Christians, spiritual priests: and the minister is called to set a good example, in order that the people may imitate it. They too must be dead to the world and separated from it: not sorrowing or rejoicing, desiring or pursuing, or possessing temporal things, in the same manner as others do; but taking the Lord for their Portion, rejoicing in him continually, delighting in his service, and using all to his glory. Our bodily infirmities, blessed be God, cannot exclude us from his heavenly glory. And they, who on many accounts may be disqualified for the work of the ministry, may serve God with comfort in other situations in his church. Finally, such as, without their own fault, are incapable of further service, must neither be despised, nor deprived of suitable maintenance.

they ^{separate} themselves from the holy things of the children of Israel, and that they ^{profane} not my holy name in those things which they ^{hallow} unto me: I am the LORD.

3 Say unto them, Whosoever he be of all your seed among your generations, that goeth unto the holy things, which the children of Israel hallow unto the LORD, ^{having} his uncleanness upon him, that soul shall be cut off ^{from} my presence: I am the LORD.

4 What man soever of the seed of Aaron is ^a leper, or hath ^a running issue; he shall not eat of the ^{holy} things, ^{until} he be clean. And whoso toucheth any thing that is ^{unclean by} the dead, or ^a man ^{whose} seed goeth from him;

5 Or ^{whosoever} toucheth any creeping thing, whereby he may be made unclean, ^{or} a man of whom he may take uncleanness, whatsoever uncleanness he hath:

6 The ^{soul} which hath touched any such shall ^{be} unclean until even, and shall not eat of the holy things, unless he wash his flesh with water.

7 And when the sun is down, he shall be clean, and shall afterward eat of the holy things; ^{because} it is his food.

8 That which ^{dieth} of itself, or is torn with ^{beasts}, he shall not eat to defile himself therewith: I am the LORD.

9 They shall therefore keep mine ordinance, lest they ^{bear} sin for it, and die therefore, if they ^{profane} it: I the LORD do sanctify them.

10 There shall ^{no} stranger eat of the holy thing: a sojourner of the priest, or an hired servant, shall not eat of the holy thing.

11 But if the priest buy any soul with ^{his} money, he shall eat of it, and he that is born in his house: they shall eat of his meat.

12 If the priest's daughter also be married unto ^a stranger, she may not eat of an offering of the holy things.

13 But if the priest's daughter be a widow or divorced, and have no child, and is ^{returned} unto her father's house, ^{as} in her youth, she shall eat of her father's meat; but there shall no stranger eat thereof.

14 And if a man ^{eat} of the holy thing unwittingly, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give it unto the priest, with the holy thing.

15 And they shall not ^{profane} the holy things of the children of Israel which they offer unto the LORD;

16 Or ^{suffer} them ^{to} bear the iniquity of trespass, when they eat their holy things; ^{for} I the LORD do sanctify them.

17 [¶] And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, ^{Whatsoever} he be of the house of Israel, or ^{of} the strangers in Israel, that will offer his oblation for all his ^{vows}, and for all his ^{free-will} offerings, which they will offer unto the LORD for a burnt-offering:

19 Ye shall offer at your own will ^a male without blemish of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats.

20 But whatsoever ^{hath} a blemish, that shall ye not offer: for it shall not be acceptable for you.

21 And whosoever offereth a sacrifice ^{of} peace-offerings unto the LORD, ^{to} accomplish ^{his} vow, or a free-will offering in beeves, or ^{of} sheep, it shall be perfect to be accepted; there shall be no blemish therein.

22 [¶] Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or scurvy, or scabbed, ye shall not offer these unto the LORD, nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto the LORD.

23 Either a bullock, or a [¶] lamb, that hath any thing superfluous or lacking in his parts, that mayest thou offer ^{for} a free-will-offering; but for a vow it shall not be accepted.

24 Ye shall not offer unto the LORD that which is bruised, or crushed, or ^{broken}, or cut; neither shall ye make ^{any} offering thereof in your land.

25 Neither from ^a stranger's hand shall ye offer ^{the} bread of your God of any of these; because their corruption is in them, and blemishes be in them: they shall not be accepted for you.

26 [¶] And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

27 When a bullock, or a sheep, or a goat, is brought forth, then it shall be ^{seven} days under the dam: and from the eighth day, and thence-

NOTES.—CHAP. XXII. V. 2. "Holy things" were the parts of the sacrifices given to the priests, the show-bread, and whatever was more immediately presented to the Lord. Some were most holy, to be eaten only by the priests in the sanctuary; others were holy, to be eaten by them and their families in their own houses. But the proportion of the tithes which belonged to the priests, and many other perquisites, might be disposed of at their will.

V. 3-9. The females, as well as the males, were bound by these laws.—Yet, as the holy things constituted a considerable part of the stated maintenance of the priests and their families, the uncleanness contracted in some of the specified cases, was speedily and easily removed. But if any persons presumptuously neglected the prescribed rules, they would ^{bear} sin for it, and might expect to be cut off by divine justice, after the example of Nadab and Abihu.

Cut off ^{from} my presence. (3) Some interpret this of the offender being excluded from officiating as a priest; others, of his being cut off by some immediate stroke from God.

V. 10-13. Boarders, lodgers, and hired labourers or servants, not being a regular part of the priest's family, were not allowed to eat of the holy things; but slaves, whether bought or born in the house, as a part of his stated family, were.—If his daughter married a priest, she might eat of them in right of her husband, as well as of her father; but if she married any other man she forfeited that right; and if left a widow with children, she and they formed a family distinct and separate from the priesthood; but if left a widow without children, or if being divorced she returned to her father's house to live with him as in her youth, she became again a part of his family, and might partake of the holy things.

V. 14-16. The presumptuous transgressor was left to the judgment of God; but he, who inadvertently ate any part of what belonged to the priest, was required, when he found out his mistake, to make restitution with a fifth part added to the value of it. This the priests must require, that the hallowed things might not be applied to common uses. For that would indeed be allowing the people to burden themselves with guilt, by violating the divine law in eating the holy things: while that very action typically implied a vain attempt to expiate their own guilt; instead of transferring it to the priests, who were in this respect the types of Christ' (Notes, 5:15, 16, 10:16-18.)

V. 18-24. The burnt-offerings typified Christ's unblemished sacrifice, and denoted the offerer's entire devotedness to God; and the peace-offering of a vow implied an indispensable duty: in these cases, therefore, no animal having any kind of blemish would be accepted.—But one that had a disproportion in its limbs, or something superfluous or wanting, might be accepted as a free-will-offering; when love for the courts and altar of God, and for his brethren, disposed a man, without any previous obligations, to offer a sacrifice, and make a sacred feast for his friends, for the priests, and for the poor. Yet even in this case such animals as were blemished, or diseased in other respects, must not be offered.—Without entering into the particulars of these defects and blemishes, it is obvious that the word translated bullock means a young bull; for the male, unless a bull, was blemished.—It is evident from the original of the twenty-third verse, that the words often translated at your own will, (29) should in most places be rendered for your acceptance. (Note, 1:3.)

V. 25. As an intimation of the Lord's purposes of mercy to the Gentiles, they were encouraged to offer sacrifices to him; but these were not allowed of, unless free from blemish.—Some are of opinion, that the Gentiles were not allowed to offer any sacrifices, except burnt-offerings: but the connexion of this verse seems unfavourable to that supposition.

V. 27. From the same time as the male children were forth, t shall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And whether it be cow or ewe, ye shall not kill it and her young both in one day.

29 And when ye will offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving unto the LORD, offer it at your own will.

30 On the same day it shall be eaten up; ye shall leave none of it until the morrow: I am the LORD.

31 Therefore shall ye keep my commandments, and do them: I am the LORD.

32 Neither shall ye profane my holy name; but I will be hallowed among the children of Israel: I am the LORD which hallow you, 33 That brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the LORD.

dedicated to the Lord by circumcision, the cattle were deemed meet for sacrifice: that is, say the Jewish writers, when one sabbath, which sanctifies all things, must have passed over them. (Note, 122-5.)

V. 28. The reason of this restriction is not very evident. The practice might seem cruel and unfeeling; yet it does not seem to have been forbidden thus to slay other cattle for food, besides these here mentioned. It might perhaps refer to some pagan superstition.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilst with gratitude we recollect, that our holy and glorious High-Priest is not liable to any incapacitating impediments to the discharge of his office, either habitual or incidental, but is perfectly such an one as became us; and that his unblemished sacrifice is of perpetual efficacy for "all who come to God through him;" let us also remember, that the Lord requires us likewise to reverence his Name, his truths, his ordinances, and his commandments. The man, who enters into the ministry, and who handles the word of God, or administers his sacraments, out of covetousness or ambition, whilst he indulges in known, habitual sin, either openly or in secret; and those professed Christians who make religion their pretence, but gain their object; or who approach the Lord's table as a step to preferment, or with a heart full of covetousness, malice, or lust;—such persons I say, presume to eat of the holy things with their uncleanness upon them, and must answer for it to God. Let us then beware of hypocrisy; and both examine ourselves, and seek to be purified from our sinful defilements, in the blood of Christ, and by his sanctifying Spirit: that we may not profane the Name of God in these hallowed things, but use them with acceptance, to his glory, and to our own benefit and comfort; and when, as his priests, we have feasted at his table, let us never more defile ourselves with the base pleasures of sin.—It is very proper, that we should carefully distinguish between those who ought, and those who ought not, to eat of these holy things; and we shall find, if we carefully consult the Scriptures, that the man who attempts to expiate his own sin, or to justify himself before God by his own supposed virtues, puts as great an affront on Christ, whose bleeding love to sinners he professes to commemorate, as he who comes to the Lord's table, from the indulgence of his passions by direct and gross immoralities. This is a sin which is often committed unwittingly; but must be repented of, if men would not bear their own iniquities, which "is a burden too heavy for them" to support. Nor can the minister, who loves the souls of the people, suffer them to continue in this dangerous delusion; but must call upon them, not only to repent and forsake their sins; but to put their whole trust in the atonement of Christ, for pardon and acceptance with God: for thus, and thus only, will the Lord sanctify them for his peculiar people.—We must serve the Lord with the best of all we have and are; yet if there be a willing mind, and an upright, humble, thankful heart, with a simple dependence on the unblemished sacrifice of Christ; our imperfect oblations will not be rejected of God, and will be useful to our fellow-creatures.—It is very desirable that strangers should be brought acquainted with the Saviour: but we should be careful, that our zeal for multiplying converts do not lead us to encourage hypocrites, "whose corruption is in them," and who will be a scandal to the cause.—Even when the reason of the Lord's appointments doth not appear, or when we meet with many repetitions in his word; we may profitably be reminded to exercise humility, faith in his wisdom, and submission to his authority, who deserves from us the most unreserved obedience and confidence in every thing.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIII. V. 2. The word (מקריים) rendered "feasts," properly means assemblies convened at an appointed time and place.—It is sometimes translated solemnities. (Is. 33:20.) The day of atonement was a great solemnity, but it was a fast.

V. 3. The weekly sabbath was the greatest of all these solemnities, as instituted in remembrance of the creation, to be observed through all generations.—It is called "a holy convocation;" and it may be supposed at least to have been the will of the Lawgiver, that assemblies for religious worship and instruction should be held in every place, as well as for sacrifices at the temple. This was done at length in the synagogues; but besides this, it was also to be observed as a sacred rest in all the dwellings of Israel.

V. 4. Ye shall proclaim, &c.] The priests were directed to give notice of the solemnities, and to call together the holy convocation by sound of trumpet. It would also devolve upon them to calculate the seasons of the annual feasts; and, in order that the computation by moons might coincide as nearly as could be with the revolutions of the sun, proper intercalations must be made from time to time. For twelve revolutions of the moon want about eleven days of one entire revolution of the sun; so that a month must have been intercalated sometimes in the third, and at others in the second year; in order that the fifteenth day of Nisan might never precede that season of the year, which the offering of the first-fruits required. (Note, 10-14.)—Many other observations would require the same. When the people were settled in Canaan, proclamation must, in some way, be made to all the tribes, that there might be no error or disunion among them.

V. 5-8. (Notes, and P. O. Ex. 12.) It is observable that in respect of all the solemnities, except the weekly sabbath and the day of atonement, the word servile is added, in the prohibition of the work to be done upon them. Hence it is reasonably concluded, that several things of a domestic nature might be performed on the other solemnities, which must not be done on the weekly sabbath, or the day of atonement. The Jewish writers are very particular on this distinction: but it is enough to state in general, that in one case any work, except such as respected commerce, manufactures, agriculture, or menial services, was allowable; but in the other none, unless strictly speaking necessary, or subservient to the exercise of piety, charity, and humanity, could accord to the strictness of the injunction.

V. 10-14. The word rendered sheaf in the text is in the original omer, as in the margin.—It is supposed, that some barley, (for that must be meant,) having been reaped, was dried by the fire, ground, and made into fine flour; enough of which to fill an omer, was annually presented in the name of the whole nation, when put in possession of Canaan, with a sacrifice, a meat-offering, and a drink-offering.—The sabbath here mentioned was the day of holy convocation, or the first day of unleavened bread, which might or might not be the weekly sabbath. According to the exact letter, (5-7, and 11 And he shall wave the sheaf before the LORD, and he shall accept for you: on the morrow after the sabbath the priest shall wave it.

12 And ye shall offer that day, when ye wave the sheaf, ^aone lamb without blemish of the first year for a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

13 And ^bthe meat-offering thereof shall be two tenth-deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the LORD for a sweet savour: and ^cthe drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, ^dthe fourth part of an hin.

14 And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the self-same day that ye have brought an offering unto your God: ^eit shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, in all your dwellings.

15 ¶ And ye shall count unto you ^ffrom the morrow after the sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering: seven sabbaths shall be complete.

16 Even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath, shall ye number ^gfifty days, and ye shall offer a new meat-offering unto the LORD.

17 Ye shall bring out of your habitations ^htwo wave-loaves of two tenth-deals: they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baked with ⁱleaven; ^jthey are ^kthe first-fruits unto the LORD.

18 And ye shall offer with the bread ^lseven lambs without blemish, of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams: they shall be for a burnt-offering unto the LORD, ^mwith their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, ⁿeven an offering made by fire of sweet savour unto the LORD.

19 Then ye shall sacrifice ^oone kid of the goats for a sin-offering, and ^ptwo lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace-offerings.

20 And the priest shall ^qwave them with the bread of the first-fruits for a wave-offering before the LORD, with the two lambs: they shall be ^rholiness unto the LORD for the priest.

21 And ye shall ^sproclaim on the self-same day ^tthat it may be an holy convocation unto you: ye shall do no servile work ^utherein: ^vit shall be ^wa statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations.

22 And when ye reap the harvest of your land, ^xthou shalt not make clean riddance of the corners of thy field when thou reapest, neither shalt thou gather any gleanings of thy harvest: thou shalt leave them unto the poor, and to the stranger: ^yI am the LORD your God. [Practical Observations.]

23 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

25 Ye shall do no servile work ^{aa}therein: but ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

26 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

27 Also on ^{ab}the tenth day of this seventh month ^{ac}there shall be a day of atonement, it shall be an holy convocation unto you: and ye shall afflict your souls, and ^{ad}offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

28 And ye shall do no work in that same day: for it is ^{ae}a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before the LORD your God.

Marg. Ref. d.) Christ was crucified on this day of holy convocation: yet whether the Jews calculated the days in another manner, or not, it seems not to have been thus observed; but the next being the sabbath was a high day, and probably was kept as the day of holy convocation. Thus the first day of the week was the day of offering the first-fruits, on which day Christ arose the first-fruits from the dead. The first-fruits, presented to God with a sacrifice, implied that the title of the Israelites to the fruits of the earth rested on the gift of a reconciled God, through the sacrifice of the promised Saviour; and that the comfortable and holy use of them arose from their devoting themselves and their substance to his service and glory.—They also prefigured Christ, not only as the first-fruits from the dead, and the earnest of the great harvest of the resurrection, but as the first-fruits of all the race of Adam; and who, having sanctified himself to be obedient to the precept, and to endure the penalty of the law of God, presented himself unto the Father as the earnest of an innumerable multitude of his brethren, being consecrated to God through him. For Christians also themselves are a kind of first-fruits of God's creatures: and while they partake of the sanctifying influences of the Spirit as the first-fruits of glory, their feeble worship and adoration are the first-fruits of their eternal hallelujahs. (Jam. 1:18.)

V. 15—21. (Note, Ex. 23:14—18.) By the time of "the feast of weeks," or the Pentecost, the barley-harvest, which was eared and nearly ripe at the feast of the passover, would be gathered in; and the wheat-harvest ripe, and in part reaped. Of this latter, therefore, the people must make another acknowledgment "out of their habitations," as the first-fruits were from the field; in fine flour made into bread, and leavened as for food, not for sacrifice. This was to be accompanied with burnt-offerings, a sin-offering, and peace-offerings: all denoting their unworthiness in themselves, their acceptance through Christ, devotedness to God, consequent comfortable use of their substance, and communion with God and with their brethren. Two bullocks and but one ram are mentioned in Numbers; but the reason of this difference is not evident: perhaps it was left to the option of the priests or rulers. (Num. 28:27.)—The feast is supposed to have been held in remembrance of the giving of the law, fifty days after the departure of the people out of Egypt; and to have looked forward to the pouring out of the Holy Spirit, fifty days after the resurrection of Christ. (Notes, Ex. 19:1, Acts 2:1.) Having finished and presented his perfect obedience and acceptable sacrifice, as the first-fruits unto the Father; he, through the gift of the Holy Ghost to the apostles, and by the conversion of three thousand souls at once, presented the other first-fruits of the Christian church, as an earnest of that harvest of innumerable multitudes, which hath been gathering, and shall yet be gathered, in all ages and nations to the end of time.

V. 22. Marg. Ref. f. Note, 19:9, 10. V. 24, 25. (Note, Num. 10:2—10.) This feast seems to have been instituted on the first day of the seventh month, both because the civil new year began at that time; and because of the other solemnities observed in that month, which were thus announced.—The blowing of trumpets especially represented the preaching of the gospel; by which men are called to repent of sin, and accept the salvation of Christ, which was signified by the day of atonement; and to rejoice in God, and become strangers and pilgrims upon earth, which was denoted by the feast of tabernacles, both of which were observed in this month.—Some think, that the feast of trumpets was appointed as a memorial of the creation, which they suppose to have been completed at this season of the year.

V. 26—32. (Notes, and P. O. 16.) The day of atonement was only five days before the feast of tabernacles: and though the Israelites were not required to attend at the tabernacle or temple, as on the three great feasts; yet it might be expected that many of them would come in time to be present at this solemnity also. But whether they did, or did not, they were required strictly to observe the day, as a most holy sabbath, and a season of peculiar mortification and self-denial, on pain of death by the immediate judgment of God.—All these meetings tended to increase their acquaintance and affectionate intercourse with each other.

33 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 34 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, ¶ The fifteenth day of this seventh month shall be the feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the LORD.

35 On the first day shall be an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein.

36 ¶ Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: on the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD: it is a solemn assembly, and ye shall do no servile work therein.

37 These are the feasts of the LORD, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, a burnt-offering, and a meat-offering, a sacrifice, and rink-offerings, every thing upon his day:

38 Beside the sabbaths of the LORD, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your free-will-offerings, which ye give unto the LORD.

39 Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the LORD seven days: on the first day shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a sabbath.

40 And ye shall take you on the first day the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God seven days.

nacles, strictly so called, is supposed to have continued only seven days, during which all the Israelites dwelt in booths, except sickness or some other hindrance prevented them. (Notes, 39–42. 1 Kings 8:63–65. Neh. 8:14–18.)—The eighth day is thought to have been an additional festival, observed in gratitude for the fruits of the earth which had just been gathered in; and which, it is said, they celebrated in their own houses. The sacrifices to be offered during this solemnity are elsewhere specified. (Notes, Num. 29:12–38.)

V. 37, 38. The weekly sabbaths, with the sacrifices, first-fruits, vows, and free-will-offerings, were strictly to be attended to; though these stated solemnities might sometimes appear to supersede them, or to interfere with them.

V. 39–43. This annual solemnity was especially a commemoration of Israel's dwelling in tents in the wilderness, as well as of their fathers having lived in tents in Canaan; to remind the nation both of the meanness of their origin, and also of the greatness of their deliverance. Christ, tabernacled in human nature, might also be prefigured: but especially the believer's life on earth, as a joyful stranger and pilgrim, whose home is in heaven, whither he is daily journeying, is very aptly represented. (Marg. Ref. d, e.)

V. 44. The feasts. All the solemnities, except that of the new moon, are here enumerated.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–22. We should not overlook the admonition of observing "the sabbath of the LORD," not only in public, "but in all our dwellings;" both ourselves, and in our families: allowing our domestics to cease from labour, and teaching them, by precept and example, to improve their leisure; in order that their souls may now find rest in Christ, and at length enjoy "the rest reserved for the people of God."—We should also learn to consider the time employed in the service of God as profitably spent; and to esteem his ordinances as holy feasts, relished more by the heaven-born soul than all other pleasures, which it willingly renounces for the sake of them. A day, thus set apart for the business of religion, will have so much and so important work belonging to it, that all other employment must be postponed to make way for it.—Let us never forget "to honour the LORD with our substance, and with the first-fruits of all our increase; so shall our barns be filled with plenty, and our presses burst out with new wine." And "when we give alms of such things as we have, behold all things are clean unto us." Nor will the husbandman ever have cause to complain, that he has less profit or comfort from his crop; because, by leaving good gleanings, he hath made a little harvest for the poor widow, and the labouring man with a large family, who have no land or crop of their own.—In all these solemnities we should look unto Jesus, as the great Sacrifice for sin, the true Paschal Lamb, the First-fruits unto God, our Forerunner to glory, seven days in the year: it shall be a statute for ever in your generations: ye shall celebrate it in the seventh month.

42 Ye shall dwell in booths seven days: all that are Israelites born shall dwell in booths.

43 That your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am the LORD your God.

44 And Moses declared unto the children of Israel the feasts of the LORD.

the provision for our souls, and the Fountain of grace; from whose fulness the Holy Spirit flows to all his people, as the Source of all joy, and heavenly hope, and victory over the world and every enemy.

V. 23–44. Viewing these solemnities together, we may consider them as an abstract of the life of faith, and the walk with God.—Being called from the service of Satan, and from a worldly, sensual life, the true penitent begins his course with the sprinkling of the Saviour's blood, by the exercise and upright profession of faith in him.—In godly sorrow, self-denial, and bearing the cross, he purges out the old leaven of malice and wickedness; feasts upon the Passover before God, with "the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth;" tastes the first-fruits of heavenly joy, and offers the first-fruits of heavenly adoration: yea, presents himself and all that he has, to be as the first-fruits unto God, and consecrated to his glory. That law, which was given from mount Sinai, written on tables of stone, and lodged in the ark of the covenant, (as an emblem of its being honoured in the Saviour's life and death,) he now desires to have written in his heart, by the Spirit which was given to the apostles and first Christians on the day of Pentecost; and he has his desire granted, and his prayer answered.—Still, however, the trumpet of the gospel, though a joyful sound, often reminds him to renew his repentance, to afflict his soul, and to apply to the atonement. And indeed they who do not thus "afflict their souls" for sin, "shall be cut off from among the people," notwithstanding the atonement and their professed belief of it. But mourning for sin makes way for heavenly joy; and from his depth of humiliation, the Christian soars nearer heaven, and leaves the world further and further beneath. A stranger and pilgrim here below, his home and heart are above; where his Saviour, who once tabernacled on earth, now in human nature dwells in glory: and as his assurance increases of having "a building not made with hands eternal in the heavens," he becomes desirous of "departing hence, and being with Christ, which is far better;" for though he has holy feasts from time to time on earth, yet they suffer many interruptions, and have much alloy; and he expects "the fulness of joy at God's right hand for evermore."—May the God of all grace preserve the heart of the writer and of every reader of these observations, for this self-same time, and give us the earnest of his Spirit, through Christ Jesus. Amen.

V. 5–9. These loaves of bread, one for each tribe, presented before the Lord every week, and afterwards eaten by the priests, might typify Christ, as the Bread of life and the continual Food of the souls of his people, having offered himself unto God for them. Or they may denote the services of believers presented before God through him, and accepted each row, that it may be on ^{the} bread for ^a memorial, even an offering made by fire unto the LORD.

8 Every ^{sabbath} he shall set it in order before the LORD continually, being taken from the children of Israel by an everlasting covenant.

9 And it shall be ^{Aaron's} and his sons', and they shall eat in the holy place; for it is most holy unto him, of the offerings of the LORD made by fire, by a perpetual statute. [Practical Observations.]

10 ¶ And the son of an Israelitish woman, whose father was an Egyptian, went out among the children of Israel; and this son of the Israelitish woman and a man of Israel strove together in the camp;

11 And the Israelitish woman's son ^{blasphemed} the name of the LORD, and cursed: and they brought him unto Moses; (and his mother's name was Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan:)

12 And they put him in ward, ^{that} the mind of the LORD might be showed them.

13 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

14 Bring forth him that hath cursed ^{without} the camp; and let ^{all} that heard him lay their hands upon his head, and ^{let} all the congregation stone him.

15 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Whosoever curseth his God shall ^{bear} his sin.

16 And he that blasphemeth the name of the LORD, he shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him: as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land, when he ^{blasphemeth} the name of the LORD, shall be put to death.

17 And ^{he} that ^{killeth} any man shall surely be put to death.

18 And ^{he} that ^{killeth} a beast shall make it good; ^{beast} for beast.

19 And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour; as he hath done, so shall it be done to him

20 ^{Breach} for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth: as he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again.

21 And he that ^{killeth} a beast, he shall restore it: and he that ^{killeth} a man, he shall be put to death.

22 Ye shall have ^{one} manner of law, as well for the stranger, as for one of your own country: for I am the LORD your God.

23 And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, ^{that} they should bring forth him that had cursed out of the camp, and stone him with stones: and the children of Israel did as the LORD commanded Moses.

for his sake. Or the whole may mean communion between our reconciled Father, and his adopted children in Christ Jesus; who, as it were, feast at the same table, whilst he delights in the fruits of his Spirit in their hearts, and they are ^{feasted} with his love. The frankincense placed upon each oaf for a memorial, and then burnt upon the altar, may denote either the advocacy of Christ, or the sweet influences of his Spirit, which are a memorial to the Lord, to ensure the acceptance of the believer's person and services. This would be a sweet savour unto God, whilst the bread would be serviceable to the priests; which applies both to the sacrifice of Christ, as honourable to God and beneficial to man, and also to the good works of his people. (Eph. 5:2—Phil. 4:18.)—The bread and the frankincense formed one offering; of which the frankincense, as the part required by the Lord, was burnt upon the altar, among the offerings made by fire unto him.

Tenth-deals. (עשרתים, tenth parts: generally supposed to mean of an ephah; being the same as the omer: about three quarts.—Pure table. (6) Note, Ex. 25:23-30.

V. 10-12. No doubt, this man was one of the mixed multitude who accompanied Israel out of Egypt; (Note, Ex. 12:37, 38.) but it is uncertain whether he had ever professed the religion of Israel. It is supposed that, by reason of the dispute between him and an Israelite, he was brought before the magistrates; and the cause being, according to the law of God, decided against him, he blasphemed, or cursed Him, before whose tremendous name all men adore, and all hell trembles! The words, ^{of} the LORD, are added in the translation; but with a sort of solemn reverence are omitted in the original, as if the sacred writer scrupled to mention whose name it was that the man blasphemed. (15, 16.) This blasphemer's name is not mentioned; for he, who thus treated the holy name of God, was not distinguished by having his name written in the sacred scriptures.

V. 13-16. By the express command of God himself, all who heard the blasphemy were required to lay their hands on the head of the blasphemer; as solemnly persevering in their testimony, and as devoting him to death, that the guilt of such a crime might not rest on Israel; and avowing that his blood was upon his own head, and that all the rest were clear. 'This was done after he had been brought without the camp, as in the case of the sin-offering, on which the guilt and merited curse of Israel was laid; and he was stoned to death, by the general act of the congregation. This event occasioned the giving of a law against speaking in a reviling and opprobrious manner of the God of Israel, or blaspheming his sacred name; in which all strangers dwelling in the land were included.—It is a vain imagination of the Jews, that the very mention of the word JEHOVAH was the crime intended; for it certainly is implied that the criminal mentioned it with contempt and enmity, nay, malignant execration.

V. 17-22. This event occasioned a third interruption in giving the law: and these precepts also are here repeated, on occasion of the contest with this son of a stranger. (Notes, Ex. 21:12-36.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. Jesus Christ is the Light of his church, yea, "the Light of the world;" in and through his word He shines; and his ministers, in opening and alleging, in reasoning and persuading from the Scriptures, tend and order the light, which, by the influences of his Spirit, illuminates the minds of men unto salvation. (Notes, Ps. 119:130.) But the people who enjoy and value this light, must defray the expenses of it; and contribute cheerfully towards its shining brighter and wider, and continuing to future generations; and they must be spoken to on this subject, if not ready of themselves.—By this light we shall discern the spiritual food prepared for our souls, first presented to the Father, and then distributed to us; and shall daily, but especially from sabbath to sabbath, ^{feed} on it in our hearts by faith with thanksgiving; and in consequence shall render worship well pleasing unto the Lord, and perform good works very profitable to his people, which will again ^{abound} in many thanksgivings unto God." Thus we shall have ^{fellowship} with the Father, with his Son Jesus Christ, and with the brethren by the communion of the Holy Ghost, and at last shall all ^{be} presented faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

V. 10-20. The marriages of professed believers with ungodly persons produce fatal effects even to posterity; and contentions between men often make way for blasphemies against God: yet profligate manners give rise to wholesome laws. But how wicked soever men are, nothing must be done against them unadvisedly, or without consulting the mind and will of God, as now completely made known to us in his holy word. And it is his will that strangers, or those of another religion, should neither be oppressed, nor allowed to commit wickedness with impunity; but in this respect be treated as other members of society.—Blasphemy against God, yea, contempt of him expressed in words or actions, is in its own nature not only more heinous than theft or robbery of any kind, but even than murder; and though it frequently escapes unpunished by man, yet it shall by no means escape the righteous vengeance of God.—The solemn and public execution of daring offenders, not only sets a salutary example, but purges away national guilt; and every member of society bound to concur in his place in bringing such criminals to justice; yet so that it be done with the utmost caution, and that none bear any testimony to which they cannot stand years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof;

4 But in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land, a sabbath for the Lord; thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard.

5 That which ^dgroweth of its own accord of thy harvest, thou shalt not reap, neither gather the grapes of thy vine undressed: for it is a year of rest unto the land.

6 And the sabbath of the land shall be meat for you; for thee, and for thy servant, and for thy maid, and for thy hired servant, and for the stranger that sojourneth with thee,

7 And for thy cattle, and for the beast that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be meat.

8 ¶ And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years, and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years.

9 Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month: in the day of atonement, shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land.

10 And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubilee unto you: and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family.

11 A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you: ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in of thy vine undressed.

12 For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy unto you: ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field.

13 In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession.

14 ¶ And if thou sell aught unto thy neighbour or buyest aught of thy neighbour's hand, ye shall not oppress one another.

15 According to the number of years after the jubilee thou shalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of the years he shall sell unto thee:

16 According to the multitude of years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of years thou shalt diminish the price of it: for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he sell unto thee.

17 Ye shall not therefore oppress one another, but thou shalt fear thy God; for I am the Lord your God.

18 ¶ Wherefore ye shall do my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land in safety.

19 And the land shall yield her fruit, and ye shall eat your fill, and dwell therein in safety.

20 And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase:

21 Then I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years.

What enmity against God must be in the heart of man, when curses and blasphemies against him proceed out of his mouth! And if "he that despised Moses's law died without mercy," of "what punishment will they be thought worthy," who despise and abuse the gospel of the Son of God! Let us learn then to watch against anger; to do no evil, but only good to all men, especially to the household of faith; to avoid all improper connexions with wicked people; and to reverence and honour habitually that worthy name which sinners blaspheme or despise.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXV. V. 1—7. (Notes, Ex. 23: 10—12.) The appointment of the sabbatical year might be intended, among other reasons, to impress the minds of the people more forcibly with the obligation of the weekly sabbath, and to afford them more leisure for the study of the law and the business of religion; as well as to give the poor some relaxation from their labours, and an acquisition to their enjoyments.—The Israelites were thus taught to live by faith in the providence of God, to receive their supply from his hand, and to be generous in the use of it: and the observance was a profession that they were the worshippers of JEHOVAH, and held their estates immediately of him by a special tenure. They were likewise reminded of the life of paradise, before sin had laid men under the sentence of "eating bread by the sweat of their brow;" and the institution might typify the believer's rest of soul in Christ by faith on earth, and the rest of heaven.—The Israelites did not get possession of Canaan, till seven years after they entered the land; and probably the seventh year afterwards, or the fourteenth after their entrance, was observed as a sabbatical year. It is supposed to have begun in autumn, after the harvest and vintage.

V. 8—13. After seven returns of the sabbatical year had been completed, notice was ordered to be given throughout the land, on the evening of the great day of atonement, for the observance of the year of Jubilee; and while the people were seeking forgiveness of their own sins from God, it might be hoped, that they would be more disposed to kindness to each other. Thus the proclamation of liberty and salvation by the gospel results from the atoning sacrifice of the Redeemer; and is intended to cheer the hearts of the humble and penitent.—This notice was given by a peculiarly sonorous and animated sound of trumpets; for this seems to be the meaning of the word rendered jubilee.—The language used by the sacred writer, absolutely decides that the year of jubilee was not the same as the seventh sabbatical year, but the year afterwards, that is, the fiftieth, and not the forty-ninth year; and similar language concerning the day of Pentecost is always thus explained. (23:15, 16. Deut. 16:9, 10.) The only objection of any weight, which can be urged against this opinion, namely, the difficulty of the nation subsisting for two years without sowing their ground, is afterwards expressly obviated. (Note, 20—22.)—This institution would form a suitable trial of the people's faith, and served to illustrate the power and faithfulness of God whenever they observed it; but we read scarcely any thing of the year of jubilee after its institution.

V. 14—17. Thus it was provided that the lands of Israel should not be alienated from the families, to which they were assigned by lot; for they could only be disposed of by leases, at a proportionable price, till the year of jubilee, and must then return, either to the seller, if living, or to his next heir. This tended to preserve the tribes and families of Israel, and consequently their genealogies, distinct, till the coming of the Messiah: it would also prevent the exorbitant wealth of some, and the extreme poverty of others; promote a brotherly equality among them; and remind them not to oppress their brethren.

V. 20—22. The sabbatical year commenced in the autumn of the sixth year; at the close of the eighth year, (or the year of jubilee,) according to the civil computation of time, when two full years had passed without sowing or reaping, the people were directed to make preparation for the harvest in the ninth year, and it was expressly promised, that the fruits of the sixth year should suffice, not only for the sabbatical year, (which the supposed inquiry more directly mentions,) but also for the year of jubilee, and till the crop was ripe in the following year. As the sixth year brought forth fruits for three years, and not merely for two; it is evident that both the sabbatical year, and the year of jubilee were distinctly provided for.—They would not sow, from the sixth to the eighth year, omitting two seed-times; nor reap from the sixth to the ninth year, omitting two harvests. Can any thing be more explicit? (Note, 8—13.)—No legislator, unless conscious of being divinely inspired, would have committed himself by enacting such a law as this: nor can any thing of the kind be found among the systems of jurisprudence of any other nations, ancient or modern.—It therefore stands as a proof that Moses acted, not according to the dictates of human policy, but by the express direction of the almighty God.—How incredible is it, that any legislator would have ventured to propose such a law as this: or any people have submitted to receive it, except in consequence of the fullest conviction on both sides, that a divine authority had dictated this law, and that a peculiar Providence would constantly facilitate its execution!... Nothing could have produced this conviction, but the experience or the belief of some such miraculous interposition as the history of the Pentateuch details. The very existence of this law is a standing monument, that when it was given the Mosaic miracles were fully believed. Now the law was coeval with the witnesses of the 22 And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye shall eat of the old store.

23 The land shall not be sold for ever: for the land is mine, for ye are strangers and sojourners with me.

24 And in all the land of your possession, ye shall grant a redemption for the land.

25 If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold away some of his possession, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold.

26 And if the man have none to redeem it, and himself be able to redeem it:

27 Then let him count the years of the sale thereof, and restore the overplus unto the man to whom he sold it, that he may return unto his possession.

28 But if he be not able to restore it to him, then that which is sold shall remain in the hand of him that hath bought it until the year of jubilee: and in the jubilee it shall go out, and he shall return unto his possession.

29 And if a man sell a dwelling-house in a walled city, then he may redeem it within a whole year after it is sold: within a full year may he redeem it.

30 And if it be not redeemed within the space of a full year, then the house, that is in the walled city, shall be established for ever to him that bought it, throughout his generations: it shall not go out in the jubilee.

31 But the houses of the villages which have no walls round about them, shall be counted as the fields of the country; they may be redeemed, and they shall go out in the jubilee.

32 Notwithstanding, the cities of the Levites, and the houses of the cities of their possession, may the Levites redeem at any time.

33 And if a man purchase of the Levites, then the house that was sold, and the city of his possession shall go out in the year of jubilee: for the houses of the cities of the Levites are their possession among the children of Israel.

miracles themselves.' Graves on the Pentateuch, Vol. i. p. 230.

V. 25-28. The nearest relation had a claim to the first refusal of the lands, which were to be sold: but if another had bought them, the kinsman had a right to redeem them at the same price, deducting for the time during which the purchaser had enjoyed them; and he was in that case appointed to keep them for the proprietor till the year of jubilee. Or the seller, if he afterwards were able, might redeem his estate: otherwise it continued till the year of jubilee, when it returned to him or his family freely.—The kinsman here evidently typified Christ, our Brother and Redeemer, who ransoms our lost inheritance, and will keep it for us till the day of judgment, when he will restore it unto us: whereas that of the wicked must be forfeited for ever, as they can never redeem it, and have none to redeem it for them.

V. 29, 30. The houses in cities and walled towns did not mark the distinction of families; they were built with labour and expense, and were not the inheritance of fathers: they would also want continual repairs, and undergo great alterations in a little time; and therefore they were under another law than the rest of the land. These houses were especially useful for commerce: and this allowance of acquiring them as permanent property, would induce strangers to come and settle among the Israelites; and be an encouragement to proselytes who might possess houses in full right, though they could not thus obtain lands.

V. 32-34. (Note, Num. 35:2-8.) The houses possessed by the Levites, in the cities afterwards allotted to them, and the gardens and pastures in the suburbs, were in fact their only permanent estate in Israel: and they were therefore under the same law as the lands of the other tribes; except that, (as some think,) any Levite might redeem the house which another had sold; though he was no otherwise 34 But the field of the suburbs of their cities may not be sold; for it is their perpetual possession.

35 ¶ And if thy brother be waxen poor, and shall fall in decay with thee; then thou shalt relieve him: yea, though he be a stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live with thee.

36 Take thou no usury of him, or increase; but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee.

37 Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

38 I am the Lord your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, to give you the land of Canaan, and to be your God.

39 ¶ And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee; thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant:

40 But as a hired servant, and as a sojourner, he shall be with thee, and shall serve thee unto the year of the jubilee.

41 And then shall he depart from thee, both he and his children with him, and shall return unto his own family, and unto the possession of his fathers shall he return.

42 For they are my servants, which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: they shall not be sold as bondmen.

43 Thou shalt not rule over him with rigour, but shalt fear thy God.

44 Both thy bondmen, and thy bondmaids, which thou shalt have, shall be of the heathen, that are round about you; of them shall ye buy bondmen and bondmaids.

45 Moreover, of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land: and they shall be your possession.

46 And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a possession; they shall be your bondmen for ever: but over your brethren, the children of Israel, ye shall not rule one over another with rigour.

related to him, than as one of the same tribe. For the clause, "And if a man purchase of the Levites," may be rendered, "And whoever of the Levites shall redeem, &c." (Marg.)

V. 35-37. (Note, Exod. 22:25-27.) When an Israelite was reduced to poverty, and lived among his brethren as a stranger and sojourner, without any possession or inheritance; they must remember to treat him as a brother, both giving to him liberally, and lending him what he wanted without usury. Indeed poor strangers also seem to be intended. (Marg. Ref. p.)

V. 39-43. When a man was sold for some debt, or fraud for which he could not make restitution, he was liberated at the end of seven years. (Notes, Exod. 21:1-6.) But if he voluntarily, through poverty, sold himself without limitation of time; or from love to his master, and his wife and children, had refused liberty at the end of seven years; and perhaps if he had been sold for some larger debt, or greater crime; he continued a servant for life, unless the year of jubilee intervened: but then he was set at liberty, and returned with his family to his inheritance. In the mean time, his master must not treat him with rigour as a slave, but with kindness as a hired servant.

V. 44-46. The Israelites were permitted to keep slaves of other nations; perhaps in order to typify, that none but the true Israel of God participate of that liberty with which Christ hath made his people free. But it was also allowed, in order that in this manner the Gentiles might become acquainted with true religion. (Gen. 17:10-13. 18:19.) and when the Israelites copied the example of their pious progenitors, there can be no reasonable doubt, that it was overruled to the eternal salvation of many souls. It does not, however, appear from the subsequent history, that the people availed themselves of this allowance to any great extent; for we read but little of slaves from among the Gentiles possessed by them.

47 ¶ And if 'a sojourner or stranger wax rich by thee, and thy brother that dwelleth by him wax poor, and sell himself unto the stranger or sojourner by thee, or to the stock of the stranger's family:

48 After that he is sold he may be redeemed again; 'none of his brethren may redeem him:

49 Either his uncle, or his uncle's son, may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him, of his family, may redeem him: or, 'if he be able, he may redeem himself.

50 And he shall reckon with him that bought him from the year that he was sold to him, unto the year of jubilee; and the price of his sale shall be according unto the number of years; 'according to the time of an hired servant shall it be with him.

51 If there be yet many years behind, according unto them he shall give again the price of his redemption, out of the money that he was bought for.

52 And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubilee, then he shall count with him, and according unto his years shall he give him again the price of his redemption.

V. 47—55. In case any of the strangers, who were allowed to sojourn in the land, (Notes, Ex. 12:48, 49. 22:21—24.) growing rich, should purchase a poor Israelite as a slave, the relations of the slave were allowed the privilege of redeeming him at any time: or if property came into his possession, he might redeem himself; deducting from the purchase-money, according to the proportion of years which had passed since his sale, to those which remained till the year of jubilee. And if he were not redeemed before that time, he was then entitled to liberty.—It is not said that his relations were bound to redeem him, but it seems to have been left to their discretion.—The father is not mentioned; for it could hardly be conceived he would let his son sell himself, if he likewise had not been impoverished. The magistrates also were to take care, that strangers did not oppress such Israelites as they kept for servants.—This law exhibited a type of Christ, as our Brother, redeeming us from the bondage of sin and Satan, to be his servants.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is a desirable privilege to have seasons of relaxation from worldly care and employments, that we may have more leisure for the study of the Scriptures, and the concerns of our souls. The poor labourer too should be allowed such intervals: and our hearts should rejoice to see him refreshed from his toil, and enjoying the fruits of our liberality. All these statutes teach us "to beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of his possessions;" to exercise willing dependence on Providence for our support: to be contented with food and raiment for the present, and to be thankful for them; and without hesitation to leave the future to that God whose blessing suffices abundantly, in various ways which we cannot imagine, to make up every supposed loss, which might be feared in consequence of simply obeying his commandments.—We should also consider ourselves as the Lord's tenants and stewards, if we have land or property; and use it accordingly: and not only be moderate and temperate in our enjoyments, but kind and gentle to our inferiors, "ready to distribute and willing to communicate" to our poor brethren, after his example, who, "though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich."—He is our Redeemer, and assumed our nature, that he might ransom our souls from Satan's bondage, into which we had been sold for the debts which we had contracted, and for the crimes that we had committed; nay, into which we had foolishly sold ourselves, through love of sinful pleasures: and that, together with our liberty, he might also redeem our forfeited and wasted inheritance, without which we must otherwise have been to all eternity in most miserable want. Having paid the ransom, and entered into possession of the inheritance in our behalf, and in virtue of his atonement; he, by the gospel's joyful sound, from age to age proclaims "liberty to the captive, and the opening of the prison to those that are bound" (Notes, Is. 61:1—3. Luke 4:16—19.) and accompanying this proclamation by his powerful grace, he sets his people at liberty; which they enjoy with rest for their souls, and the earnest of heaven through faith in him and obedience to him. When they die, their souls ascend to heavenly rest; and ere long the last trumpet shall sound the jubilee of the resurrection, "the redemption of the body," and they shall be then put in final 54 And if he be not redeemed in these years, then he shall go out in the year of jubilee, both he, and his children with him.

55 For unto me the children of Israel are servants; they are 'my servants whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God.

and eternal "possession of the purchased inheritance to the praise of his glory;" whilst the wicked must sink into "the blackness of darkness for ever." We cannot ransom our own souls, or our forfeited inheritance; but let us not "neglect so great salvation," thus freely proposed, and the fruit of such love and of such sufferings. We cannot ransom our fellow-sinners: but we may recommend Christ to them; and by his grace our holy lives may adorn his gospel, express our love and gratitude, and glorify his holy name.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVI. V. 1, 2. Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 20:4, 5, 8—10.

V. 3, 4. These promises to Israel, in case they were obedient, should be understood with a special reference to their national covenant. As long as they maintained a national regard to the worship, sabbaths, and sanctuary of God, and did not turn aside to idolatry, he engaged to continue to them various temporal mercies, and distinguishing religious advantages. Yet even among the Israelites, individuals were not uniformly prosperous or afflicted, according to their obedience or disobedience: nay, the contrary was so commonly the case, that the prophets and the Psalmist, in several places, speak of it as a peculiar temptation; (Marg. Ref. d. Notes, Ps. 73. Jer. 12:1—4.) and the royal preacher declares, "that all things come alike to all." (Note, Ec. 9:1—3.) But national prosperity was uniformly, and without one exception, the effect of national obedience, and national judgments the result of national wickedness. Israel indeed was under a peculiar covenant, and no other people is governed exactly according to the same rule: yet still God deals with nations as collective bodies; nothing but regard to religion and righteousness can ensure national prosperity; and wickedness will end in the ruin of any people, especially where the word of God and the light of the gospel are afforded. Individuals will exist, and be judged and recompensed in a future world; but bodies politic will have no future existence, and are therefore recompensed in this world.—Concerning individual Christians, it is enough to say, that the Lord will afford them as much temporal prosperity as his infinite wisdom sees good for them; that in one way or other, their comforts are proportioned to the simplicity and exactness of their obedience; and that they frequently experience the Lord's kindness to them in his providence, and in answer to their prayers, whether according to the letter of these temporal promises or not. Their obedience has a natural tendency to exempt them from a variety of miseries which others endure, and to secure them many comforts of body, mind, and circumstances, which others do not enjoy; all their trials and afflictions are needful and useful, sanctified to them, and counterbalanced by inward peace; and upon the whole, even in this world, including their heavenly hope, they have by far the largest proportion of true felicity, notwithstanding all the tribulation and persecution which they endure, the self-denial which they exercise, and the correction of their Father's love.—These promises may also be considered as typical of the spiritual prosperity, health, peace, and victory, with which the Lord favours his believing people when walking in his way, and of the blessings which his church enjoys. From the beginning of this chapter, and other passages of a similar nature, some learned men have undertaken to show, that the church, before time: and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely.

6 And I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid: and I will rid evil beasts out of the land, neither shall the sword go through your land.

7 And ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword.

8 And five of you shall chase an hundred, and an hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight; and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword.

9 For I will have respect unto you, and make you fruitful and multiply you, and establish my covenant with you.

10 And ye shall eat old store, and bring forth the old because of the new.

11 And I will set my tabernacle among you: and my soul shall not abhor you.

12 And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people.

13 I am the LORD your God which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, that ye should not be their bondmen; and I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you free upright.

[Practical Observations.]

14 ¶ But if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all these commandments;

15 And if ye shall despise my statutes, or if your soul abhor my judgments, so that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye break my covenant;

16 I also will do this unto you; I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, and the burning ague, that shall consume the eyes, and cause sorrow of heart: and ye shall sow your seed in vain; for your enemies shall eat it.

17 And I will set my face against you, and ye shall be slain before your enemies: they that hate you shall reign over you; and ye shall flee when none pursue you.

18 And if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will punish you seven times more for your sins.

19 And I will break the pride of your power; and I will make your heaven as iron, and your earth as brass.

20 And your strength shall be spent in vain: for your land shall not yield her increase, neither shall the trees of the land yield their fruits.

21 ¶ And if ye walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me; I will bring seven times more plagues upon you, according to your sins.

22 I will also send wild beasts among you, which shall rob you of your children, and destroy your cattle, and make you few in number, and your high-ways shall be desolate.

23 And if ye will not be reformed by me by these things, but will walk contrary unto me;

24 Then will I also walk contrary unto you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins.

25 And I will bring a sword upon you, that shall have the quarrel of my covenant: and when ye are gathered together within your cities, I will send the pestilence among you; and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy.

26 And when I have broken the staff of your

30 And I will destroy your high places, and cut down your images, and cast your carcasses upon the carcasses of your idols, and my soul shall abhor you.

31 And I will make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours.

32 And I will bring the land into desolation; and your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it.

33 And I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you; and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste.

34 Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land: even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths.

35 As long as it lieth desolate, it shall rest; disobedient Israelites, they would flock into the defenced cities for security; but the Lord declared, that in this case, he would commission the pestilence to pursue them, till they should be compelled to surrender themselves into the hands of the besiegers; or he would visit them with the most dreadful and desolating famines.—The reader who consults the marginal references, will in them find the most instructive comment on this chapter; and be more and more convinced, as he proceeds, that it is a kind of prophetic history of that nation, even to this present time; which could never have been written, except by inspiration of God, who seeth the events of the most remote futurity as if actually present.—It is thought that the expression, walk contrary to me, implies that the people would remain careless, imputing their calamities to chance or second causes; till the constant increase of them, and their long continuance, should convince them, that the dreadful vengeance of God was poured out upon them.

V. 29. Ent the flesh, &c. This was literally fulfilled in the siege of Samaria by Benhadad; in the siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans; and in the last siege of Jerusalem by the Romans, as is recorded by the Jewish historian Josephus. (Notes, Deut. 28:49-57. 2 Kings 6:28, 29. Lam. 4:10.)

V. 30. The several words used in this threatening, relate to different kinds of idolatry afterwards prevalent in Israel. We shall hereafter have frequent occasions of considering the high places, both for idolatry, and for the irregular worship of JEHOUAH. The images here mentioned are supposed to have been statues dedicated to the sun; and the word rendered idols (עֲצָבוֹת) is similar to that which signifies dung (רֵק), and is an expression of extreme contempt for their worthless, filthy objects of worship. The connexion of this verse with the preceding has been thought to imply, that the Israelites would be more attached to their idols than even to their children. But the order is more remarkable, if considered as a prophecy. Though the pious kings of Judah, especially Hezekiah and Josiah, were employed by the Lord to execute, in a measure, this sentence, and the latter burned the bones of the priests on the altars of their idols; and though Sennacherib cast many of their idols into the fire, when he invaded the land; yet the grand fulfilment of the prophecy was subsequent to the siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, in which the people had actually been reduced to eat their own children. The desolations, connected with that event, effectually swept away all their idols, and idol altars, and temples, so that they were never afterwards restored. Thus the Lord, abhorring the people for their wickedness, (11) cast their dead carcasses on their broken or degraded idols, and destroyed the idolaters and idolatry at once. (Marg. Ref. c.)

V. 31-35. These verses also contain a prophecy, both of Israel's sin and punishment; which the subsequent history sufficiently explains.—By the sanctuaries, some understand

"because it did not rest in your sabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it.

36 And upon them that are left alive of you, "I will send a faintness into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; and "the sound of a 'shaken leaf' shall chase them; and they shall flee as fleeing from a sword; and they shall fall when none pursueth.

37 And they shall fall, one upon another, as it were before a sword, when none pursueth: and ye shall have no power to stand before your enemies.

38 And ye shall perish among the heathen, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up.

39 And they that are left of you "shall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies' lands; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them.

40 ¶ If "they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass which they trespassed against me, and that also they have walked contrary unto me;

41 And that I also have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then, "their uncircumcised hearts be "humbled, and "they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity:

42 Then "will I remember my covenant with the temple, as divided into the holy place and the holy of holies, with its several courts: but others include the high places, both in Judah and Israel, in which God was worshipped: and some think synagogues also were meant: but the next clause, "I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours," seems to confine the expression to places where sacrifices and incense were offered.—After the Babylonish captivity, the temple-worship was restored, and doubtless the Lord accepted the oblations of his faithful people: but after the time of Christ, the whole degenerated into a mere form of godliness; and the destruction of the temple by the Romans finally abolished that kind of service, because a more simple and spiritual worship had been introduced.—Indeed the dispersed state of the Jews since that time, more fully answers the import of the subsequent predictions, than even the desolations of the Babylonish captivity: during that calamity, however, the land enjoyed its sabbaths; and the prophecy seems to intimate, that this part of the divine law was generally neglected during most of the intervening ages. (Note, 2 Chr. 36:21.)

V. 36, 37. Marg. Ref. Notes, Deut. 28:65-67. Is. 30:15-17.

V. 38, 39. The ten tribes never returned to their own land, as a collective body. The Jews, who rebelliously determined to go into Egypt, miserably perished there. (Jer. 42:—44.)—Great multitudes of the other Jews remained afterwards in the nations where they were dispersed; a large proportion of the whole multitude of Israelites have doubtless been lost, as it were, in the nations among whom they sojourned. The massacres made of them, in many countries and different ages, have been very great; and they have been more generally, durably, and cruelly oppressed, than perhaps any other people. For, continuing impenitent, formerly in idolatry and iniquity, and since the time of Christ, in obstinate unbelief; they lie under the load of national guilt, which has been accumulating for ages, and pine away in heartless, timid despondency, or stupid insensibility, without earnestly inquiring into the causes of their calamities, or using proper means of redress and deliverance. It is remarkable, how exactly this passage describes the general character of the Jews at this day.

Pine away. J. Marg. Ref. s. Notes, Ez. 24:19-24. 33:10.

V. 40. After all these threatenings to the nation of temporal calamities, most accumulated, aggravated, and long continued, which were a shadow of still more tremendous destruction to impenitent individuals in a future world; the prophet concluded with intimations of mercy in reserve for a remnant of the people, when at length brought to repentance. Thus, previously to the deliverance of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, Daniel (with whom doubtless numbers concurred) confessed his sins, and those of his fathers and people, in deep humiliation. (Notes, Dan. 9:—20.)—And afterwards, before their further establishment in Judea, Ezra

Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember: and I will remember the land.

43 The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy her sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them: and they shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity; because, even because they despised my judgments, and because their soul abhorred my statutes.

44 And yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the Lord their God.

45 But I will for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt in the sight of the heathen, that I might be their God: I am the Lord.

46 These are the statutes and judgments and laws, which the Lord made between him and the children of Israel in mount Sinai, by the hand of Moses.

and Nehemiah, and the people with them, did the same, and in language which seems evidently to refer to this chapter.—(Notes, Ezra 9: Neh. 9:)

V. 41, 42. Pride, impenitent love of sin, and enmity to JEHOWAH and his worship, proved the hearts of the people to be uncircumcised, that is, unrenewed by divine grace; for circumcision was the sacramental sign of regeneration: but when a change took place they would be humbled before God, acknowledge his hand, and submit to his justice in all their sufferings; they would seek forgiveness from his mercy, and return to their duty; and then would he remember and deal with them according to the covenant made with their fathers, respecting Canaan, the type of heaven. (Notes, Deut. 10: 16. 30: 1-10. Jer. 43: 4. 9: 25, 26. Rom. 2: 25-29.)

Covenant. (42) It is observable, that it is not said, the Lord would remember his covenant, ratified with Israel at mount Sinai; but the covenant made with their progenitors, the patriarchs, long before the Sinai covenant. The future restoration of Israel will be in fulfilment of the Abrahamic covenant. (Notes, Rom. 11: 25-32. Gal. 3: 15-18. Heb. 6: 13-20.)

V. 43-45. Notwithstanding these promises, the land would certainly be desolated; and the preceding calamities would rest on the people, till they should "accept of the punishment of their iniquity," and acquiesce in it, as just.—The subsequent verses imply a prediction that the people would thus repent, as well as an assurance of reconciliation to the penitent. The word (נָחַם), rendered "for their sakes," may more literally and justly be translated for them, or in their behalf.—A glorious accomplishment of this part of the prophecy may hereafter be expected, by the conversion of the Jews to Christ, and probably by their restoration to their own land: and indeed, after the fulfilment of the previous threatenings, in their present dispersion of above seventeen hundred years' duration, they are still most marvellously preserved a distinct people, evidently in order to this most desirable event. (Notes, Num. 23: 9. Jer. 30: 10, 11.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. Our true interest and happiness consists in worshipping the Lord, giving him our hearts, hallowing his sabbaths, reverencing his sanctuary, and doing every thing with a believing regard to that Saviour, "in whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." Our obedience indeed cannot justify us: but that obedience which takes its rise from "repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ," and which consists in an humble attendance on his ordinances, and an unreserved respect to all his commandments; both evinces that we are justified, and will induce peace and spiritual consolations into our hearts, with the hope of glory, and the blessing of God upon our families and possessions; so that the most afflicted state of a consistent Christian is more comfortable than any ungodly prosperity, however great. This frame of mind is the health of the soul, and the antepast of heaven; while God sets up his tabernacle in us, and dwells and walks with us, as the sure pledge of eternal glory. But wilful sin, even in a believer, will grieve the Spirit, cloud this bright prospect, and bring darkness and distress into the soul, as well as chastisements from his heavenly Father's rod.—Righteousness also exalteth a nation, and among other blessings, especially ensures the continuance of the gospel with it. But it is truly wonderful, that the Lord hath not long since so abhorred this our sinful land, as to deprive us of our other manifold mercies, and especially of the work of his salvation, which has been so greatly neglected, despised and perverted.

V. 14-46. Sooner or later, sin will be the ruin, as well as reproach, of every people; and our national violation of the sabbath, contempt of the ordinances of God, opposition to his truth, and abhorrence of his commandments, after our manifold rebukes, dangers, and deliverances, which were intended to bring us to repentance and upright obedience, have a very gloomy aspect on this yet favoured land. If we continue still to "walk contrary to God," we may expect that he will punish us seven times more than he has done; and that he will avenge the quarrel of his gospel upon us; and if He, who has all creatures in his hand as ministers of his vengeance, should set his face against us, who can conjecture where the contest will end? Oh that, being deeply humbled before God, and ingenuously confessing our sins, we might, by a general revival of religion and reformation of manners, with the harmonious concurrence of all ranks and orders of men, avert the rising storm before it burst upon us!—But though national judgments, such as desolating war, pestilence, and famine, be dreadful; yet they are but temporal evils, and personal judgments alone are eternal: let every sinner then tremble for himself, take warning and flee from the wrath to come.—The career of iniquity commences in contempt of God's statutes, and hatred of his service; and ingratitude and abuse of his mercies soon make way for the hardening of the heart under afflictions, and against convictions. Such persons, "walking contrary to God," will find that he walks contrary to them: and as they turn their face from him, he will set his face against them, will abhor them, pursue them with one misery after another, and at length utterly destroy them, if they continue impenitent; and the stoutest of them will find their hearts wax faint and tremble, and in black despair perceive that they have no power to resist or escape, when he arises to execute vengeance.—But if at length any sinner be deeply humbled, and confess his guilt, and cry for mercy through faith in Jesus Christ, and according to the covenant made with all believers in him; God will remember that covenant, and pardon that sinner "according to the multitude of his mercies;" so that none need despair, and "pine away in their iniquities." Whilst we joyfully avail ourselves of such a precious privilege, and are confirmed in our faith even by the desolate and dispersed condition of the disobedient Israelites; let us not abhor and despise them, but compassionate them, and pray that they may at length be remembered according to the covenant made with their fathers.—And let us take warning not to imitate their infidelity, and not to trust in external distinctions.—God grant that we may in this our day effectually consider the things which belong to our eternal peace.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVII. V. 2-8. The Israelites, from an extraordinary zeal and love to the worship of God, would sometimes, by a solemn vow, dedicate themselves, or their children, to the immediate service of the Lord in the sanctuary for life: but as the priests and Levites were set apart by God himself for that service, and none were allowed to interfere with their work, these persons could only be employed in the lowest and most laborious services; and if too great numbers thus devoted themselves, they would be an encumbrance, rather than an advantage, to the sanctuary.—The Gibeonites were afterwards employed "as hewers of wood and drawers of water;" and perhaps some others, who refused to redeem themselves, performed menial services to the priests and Levites. Probably these, as well as the Gibeonites, were called Nethinim, or dedicated persons, of whom we shall read hereafter. (Notes, Josh 9: 27. 1 Chr. 9: 2.) Samuel, who was a Levite, was thus dedicated by his

7 And if ^{it be} from sixty years old and above; if ^{it be} a male, then thy estimation shall be fifteen shekels, and for the female ten shekels.

8 But if he be poorer than thy estimation, then he shall present himself before the priest, and the priest shall value him: according to his ability that vowed shall the priest value him.

9 ¶ And if ^{it be} a beast, whereof men bring an offering unto the LORD; all that any man giveth of such unto the LORD shall be holy.

10 He shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good: and if he shall at all change beast for beast, then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy.

11 And if ^{it be} an unclean beast, of which they do not offer a sacrifice unto the LORD; then he shall present the beast before the priest:

12 And the priest shall value it, whether it be good or bad; as thou valueth it, who art the priest, so shall it be.

13 But if he will at all redeem it, ^{when} he shall add a fifth part thereof unto thy estimation.

14 ¶ And when a man shall sanctify his house to be holy unto the LORD; then the priest shall estimate it, whether it be good or bad: ^{as} the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand.

15 And if he that sanctified ^{it} will redeem his house, ^{when} he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be his.

16 And if a man shall sanctify unto the LORD some part of a field of his possession; then thy estimation shall be according to the seed thereof: an homer of barley-seed shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver.

17 If he sanctify his field from the year of jubilee, according to thy estimation it shall stand.

18 But if he sanctify his field ^{after} the jubilee; then the priest shall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, even unto the year of the jubilee, and it shall be abated from thy estimation.

19 And if he that sanctified the field will in any wise redeem it; ^{then} he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be assured to him.

20 And if he will not redeem the field, or if he have sold the field to another man, it shall not be redeemed any more.

21 But if the field, ^{when} it goeth out in the jubilee, shall be holy unto the LORD, as a field ^{devoted}: the possession thereof shall be the priest's.

22 And if a man sanctify unto the LORD a field which he hath bought, which is not of the fields of ^{his} possession;

23 Then the priest shall reckon unto him the worth of ^{thy} estimation, even unto the year of the jubilee, and he shall give ^{thine} estimation in that day, as a holy thing unto the LORD.

24 In the year of the jubilee the field shall ^{re}turn unto him of whom it was bought, even ^{to} him to whom the possession of the land did belong.

25 And ^{all} thy estimations shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary: ^{twenty} gerahs shall be the shekel.

26 Only the ^{firstling} of the beasts, ^{which} should be the LORD's ^{firstling}, no man shall sanctify it: whether it be ox or sheep, it is the LORD's.

27 And if ^{it be} of an unclean beast, then he shall redeem ^{it} according to ^{thine} estimation, and shall add a fifth part of it thereto: or if it be not redeemed, then it shall be sold according to thy estimation.

28 ¶ Notwithstanding, ^{no} devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the LORD, of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed: every devoted thing is most holy unto the LORD.

29 None devoted, which shall be devoted of mother; and, not being redeemed, he was employed about the sanctuary from his childhood, long before the age when the Levites entered upon their office.—Perhaps some others, who dedicated themselves or their children, were thus employed: yet in general they were allowed, or even ordered, to be redeemed, at the valuation here prescribed; which was equitable and moderate, and was reduced still lower in cases of poverty. Children might not thus devote themselves; but their parents might devote them. The women, if not redeemed, would find employment in spinning, weaving, and making the garments for the priests, or washing for them, and in various other ways; as we may suppose the Gibeonitish women, and the wives of the Nethinim did.

V. 9—13. If any particular animal were thus vowed unto the LORD, it was to be accounted holy, and must not be exchanged; but must be sacrificed, provided it were fit for sacrifice: otherwise it was to be valued and sold; but at a dearer rate to him who vowed it than to another person, as a rebuke for his rashness and inconstancy. Some suppose that the money was put into the treasury of the sanctuary, to defray the expenses of the worship there performed; others, that the priests had it for their own use.—The difference between this singular vow and ordinary vows, seems to have been this:—the ordinary vow was made, when in quest of some blessing, or when some special mercy was received; the person who vowed engaged to offer certain sacrifices of burnt-offerings or peace-offerings unto the LORD; and it included nothing else. But a singular vow was the solemn dedication of a man's person or child, or some part of his property, to the immediate use of the sanctuary, or of the priests; with special designation, whether fit for sacrifice or not.

V. 16. A man was not allowed to alienate in this manner his whole patrimony, but only some part of a field: he might express his good-will for the house of God, but he must not impoverish his own family.

An homer, &c. That is, as much land as required a homer of barley to sow it. An omer was only the tenth part of an ephah; a homer contained ten ephahs, or above eight bushels Winchester measure.

V. 17—19. Notes, 25:14—30.

V. 20—24. If the person who dedicated his land refused to redeem it, it became the perpetual inheritance of the priests, and could only be leased out till the year of jubilee. If he had sold his right in it to another man, after having made his vow; he forfeited that right, but the purchaser did not succeed to it. A man could not thus alienate such land, as by law returned at the year of jubilee to the family of which it had been bought; but if he had vowed it, he must redeem it at the estimation made of it. Houses and lands, if thus vowed, became the property of the priests at the year of jubilee; unless redeemed by him that vowed them. This was an additional reason, why the fifth part should in that case be added to the priest's estimation of them.

V. 26, 27. As these firstlings were the LORD's before, it would have been a solemn mockery to pretend to make them a matter of a singular vow; for they were already appointed, if clean, to be sacrificed. But if an unclean firstling were thus dedicated to God, the owner might redeem it, as another unclean firstling, though not with a lamb, but with its estimation in money, adding to it a fifth part; and if he refused to redeem it, it was killed, and sold for the benefit of the priests, or the support of the sanctuary.

V. 28, 29. The word (חֵטֵּא), here rendered a devoted thing, implies an anathema, or curse. Persons thus devoted, were by solemn vows consigned to utter destruction without redemption: but then this vow could not be valid, if contrary to any part of the divine law; and in that case the person making it needed repentance and forgiveness. In respect of things devoted, they were either utterly destroyed by fire, or wholly dedicated to religious uses. The LORD himself thus devoted the Amalekites, and the Canaanites in general, and the inhabitants of Jericho in particular; but he reserved the precious metals for the sacred treasury. And the Israelites thus devoted the cities of Arad. (Note, Num. 21:1—3.)—Probably Jephthah's vow, and his manner of performing it, arose from a misconception of this law; for whatever was thus devoted was surely to be put to death, if no divine law forbade; but the people rescued Jephthah, whom his father Saul had thus rashly and unwittingly devoted, and doubtless they acted properly. (Notes, Judg. 11:34—40, 1 Sam. 14:36—46.)

V. 30—34. The custom of dedicating the tenth part of any profit or increase to religious uses, was doubtless more ancient than the Mosaic law. (Notes, Gen. 14:18—20, 28:20—22.) and learned men have shown that (probably from tradition) it prevailed in many nations; though not so regularly as in Israel. From the law afterwards given concerning the division of these tithes, it is evident that they were intended to be a considerable part of the stated maintenance of the priests and Levites; (Num. 18:21—32.) and they must therefore be carefully distinguished from the second tithes, on which the people feasted before the LORD, with the Levites.

men, shall be redeemed: but shall surely be put to death.

30 ¶ And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the LORD's: it is holy unto the LORD.

(Note, Deut. 14:22-29.) The regulations here made would prevent the introduction of a modus in collecting the tithes, as well as impropriations, and various other methods, which have in many places reduced almost to beggary the clergy, for whose maintenance tithes were originally given. What-ever may be said in this case, where tithes are only a human institution; it would certainly have been wrong where they were an express divine appointment. Yet doubtless this law teaches, that they "who labour in the word and doctrine" have a right to a maintenance, and ought not to be defrauded of it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is good to be zealously affected, and liberally disposed, to the service and sanctuary of the Lord; but consideration should precede, and prudence should direct, the application of our liberality; otherwise rash vows, and inconstancy in performing them, will dishonour God and embarrass our own minds.—We should dedicate ourselves and our families to his service, according to the situation of life in which the providence of God has placed us. But may we not aptly accommodate these "singular vows of persons" to the case of those; who, perhaps with good intention, but great impropriety, are determined to leave their proper employments, and to enter into the ministry; or to those, who resolve to bring up their children to that sacred office, before they can know whether they will be properly qualified or disposed for such a service? Too many seem to forget, that there are other ways of glorifying God and serving his church, besides preaching the gospel: and though no general rules can be prescribed in such cases; yet much caution, deliberation, prayer, patient waiting, and submission to Providence, should precede every person's leaving another calling to enter into the ministry. Nor should 33 He shall not search whether it be good or bad, neither shall he change it: and if he change it at all, then both it and the change thereof shall be holy: it shall not be redeemed.

34 These are the commandments which the LORD commanded Moses, for the children of Israel in mount Sinai.

any resolutions or vows be considered binding, unless the Lord allows them, by giving proper qualifications and dispositions, and opening a regular door of admission in his providence. Otherwise such persons had better endeavour themselves, and bring up their children, to honour God by their example, influence, and substance in a private character: for to this day he will choose his own ministers, whom he employs in his sanctuary, without regarding our partial or selfish desires and intentions.—Our houses, lands, cattle, and substance should be possessed and used to his glory; and a portion dedicated immediately to the support of his worship, and to promote his cause, is acceptable to him, if done with a constant and willing mind, and in prudence and equity. But he neither approves of those who grudge his servants their support, nor of those who injure their families, and perhaps their creditors, by an imprudent or ostentatious profusion in these respects; nor yet of those who rashly engage, and inconstantly retract their engagements. But let us not forget that we sinners were devoted to utter destruction, as under the curse of a broken law; and that Jesus willingly devoted himself to be "made a curse for us," and tasted the bitterness of death, yea, the wrath of the Father, for our redemption. The doom of those who neglect this great salvation will be irreversible; and it will by the omnipotent Judge be said to them, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Let us then flee to him as a Saviour for refuge; and, receiving the reconciliation, let us yield ourselves to him, without wishing or desiring a change, to be unto him a holy people, that "his name may be glorified in us," living and dying, and for ever; "and we glorified in him, according to the grace of our God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ." THE FOURTH BOOK OF MOSES,

This book takes its name from the repeated numberings of the people and of the Levites, which it records. It derives this name (as the preceding books do theirs) from the Septuagint; but the names of the others stand in the original Greek, while this is translated into English. It is called in the original, (בְּמִדְבָּר) In the wilderness, from the account which it contains of the Israelites in the wilderness. It opens with an account of the arrangement of the twelve tribes into regular encampments, in four divisions under their several leaders, around the tabernacle; the care of which, and of all its furniture, was committed to the Levites, in three divisions, according to their families. The history of Israel afterwards proceeds: and the sacred writer having recorded that instance of rebellion which provoked God "to swear in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest," gives an account of the continuance of the Israelites in the wilderness for above thirty-eight years: and the whole is intermixed with many laws, moral and ceremonial.—In confirmation of the united testimony of antiquity, that Moses wrote the books ascribed to him, which is uniformly sanctioned by all the sacred writers, and in an especial manner by our Lord and his apostles; it may be useful to the studious reader to notice, how constantly the laws and facts of this book are referred to in all the subsequent parts of Scripture, as things of established credit and notoriety; which never could have been the case, had not the book been well known among the Israelites. In general, the marginal references, if carefully consulted, will most fully establish this point: In particular, the ministrations severally allotted to the priests and Levites; the unbelief and rebellion which excluded this generation of Israel from the Canaan; their subsequent wanderings for almost forty years in the wilderness; the conquest of the countries possessed by Sihon and Og; and the settlement of two tribes and a half east of Jordan, are pre-supposed as notorious facts in every subsequent part of the sacred Volume. But the prophecies delivered by Balaam, which have already received a most signal accomplishment, not only prove the narrative to be genuine, and that Balaam spake by the Spirit of prophecy; but as introduced in close connexion with the history, long before any of the predictions were fulfilled, or in human probability likely to be so; they form a collateral argument, that the book itself was divinely inspired: for in this manner the Lord has seen good to set his seal to most, if not all, of the several books of holy writ.

4 ¶ And with you there shall be a man of every tribe, every one head of the house of his fathers.

5 And these are the names of the men that shall stand with you: Of the tribe of Reuben; *Eliuz, the son of Shedeur.

6 Of Simeon; *Shelumiel, the son of Zurishaddai.

7 Of Judah; *Nahshon, the son of Amminadab.

8 Of Issachar; *Nethaneel, the son of Zuar.

9 Of Zebulun; *Eliab, the son of Helon.

10 Of the children of Joseph: of Ephraim; *Elishama, the son of Ammihud: of Manasseh; *Gamaliel, the son of Pedahzur.

11 Of Benjamin; *Abidan, the son of Gideoni.

12 Of Dan; *Ahiezer, the son of Ammishaddai.

13 Of Asher; *Pagiel, the son of Ocran.

14 Of Gad; *Eliasaph, the son of Deuel.

15 Of Naphtali; *Ahira, the son of Enan.

16 These were the renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribes of their fathers, heads of thousands in Israel.

17 ¶ And Moses and Aaron took these men which are expressed by their names:

18 And they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month; and they declared their pedigrees after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, by their polls.

19 ¶ As the Lord commanded Moses, so he numbered them in the wilderness of Sinai.

20 And the children of Reuben, Israel's eldest son, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

21 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Reuben, were forty and six thousand and five hundred.

22 ¶ Of the children of Simeon, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, those that were numbered of them, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

23 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Simeon, were fifty and nine thousand and three hundred.

24 ¶ Of the children of Gad, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

25 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Gad, were forty and five thousand six hundred and fifty.

26 ¶ Of the children of Judah, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

27 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Judah, were threescore and fourteen thousand and six hundred.

28 ¶ Of the children of Issachar, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

29 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Issachar, were fifty and four thousand and four hundred.

30 ¶ Of the children of Zebulun, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

31 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Zebulun, were fifty and seven thousand and four hundred.

32 ¶ Of the children of Joseph, namely, of the children of Ephraim, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

33 Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Ephraim, were forty thousand and five hundred.

the first day of the second month. (Ex. 38:25-23. 40:2.)

—The Levites were exempted both from the tribute and from war, and consequently were not included in either account. None seem to have been numbered who were unserviceable, whether through age or infirmities; but as "there was not one feeble person among their tribes" when they left Egypt, we may suppose there were very few at this time. (Note, Ex. 13:17, 18, latter part.) Yet all the women, the minors, and probably the old men, were omitted; as well as the mixed multitude which came up with them out of Egypt. Each tribe was reckoned in even numbers; no less sum than fifty being mentioned, and that but in one instance; (25) as they were ranked under rulers of thousands, of hundreds, and of fifties, yet according to their tribes, families, and households; it is probable they were registered accordingly, with the omission of the odd numbers; and the alterations had been so few since the former account was taken, that it made no difference in the round sum. Some indeed infer from this circumstance, that not one had died in the intervening space; but if this were allowed, it must also be supposed, that no individual had attained the age of twenty years in that time; which is totally improbable! They were numbered in order to illustrate the divine faithfulness in thus increasing the seed of Jacob; to prepare the way for their regular march and encampments, as now about to depart from Sinai; and in order to their being trained up for the wars and conquests of Canaan; as well as to ascertain their genealogies, in order to the division of the land by lot.—The Israelites had now continued almost a year at mount Sinai. (Note, Ex. 19:1.)

V. 5-16. (Marg. Ref.) The heads of the tribes are here arranged, according to the mothers of Jacob's sons. Those of Leah are first placed in the order of their birth, and then those of Rachel; but Ephraim, the younger son of Joseph, is placed first. Afterwards the sons of the handmaids are mentioned; but it is observable, that Bilhah's eldest son is first named, and the two sons of Zilpah next, yet the youngest first; and at last Naphtali, the other son of Bilhah. This arrangement is not easily accounted for: nor is it adhered to in the subsequent part of the chapter.—Elishama, the son of Ammihud, (10) was Joshua's grandfather. (1 Chr. 7:26, 27.)

V. 26, 27. Jacob had given Judah the pre-eminence in his prophetic blessing; and that tribe was to have the precedence in the encampments of Israel: accordingly God had increased them more than any of their brethren; indeed, to more than double the number of some of the tribes.—Ephraim and Manasseh, according to the same prophecy, were numbered as distinct tribes, Ephraim having the superiority as it had been foretold; and Joseph indeed appears "a fruitful bough;" yet the tribe of Judah was more numerous, by one thousand nine hundred men, than these two tribes united.—(32-35, 26:22. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

From noting the faithfulness of God to his promises, however large, and however improbable the performance might appear in the case of Israel; we may take courage in expecting, and praying for, the accomplishment of those which yet remain to be fulfilled, to ourselves, and to the church of God. And again, by considering the astonishing manner in which this immense multitude of men, besides women, children, and strangers, were fed, watered, and provided for in the wilderness; we may learn to trust the Lord for such things as are needful for us and our families. Yet when we recollect how soon, and in what manner, their carcases fell in the wilderness; we may also be reminded to revere the awful justice of God, to prepare for death, which is continually making such ravages; and to repent and depart from sin which produces such fatal effects.—We here also see, as in a glass, the true Israel of God; “a number which no man can number,” yet all known by name, and written in the book of life, by the Captain of our salvation. They are his willing subjects, and do not “despise dominion,” whether of magistrates or ministers, as acting by commission from him; they are indeed men of peace, yet marshalled, armed, and prepared for battle; and they are daily assaulted, whilst on earth, by many enemies: but under the command and protection of their Captain, they shall all finally, one after another, be crowned conquerors.—Nor are ministers discharged from this war; but must be careful “not to entangle themselves with the affairs of this life, that they may please him, who hath chosen them to six hundred thousand, and three thousand, and five hundred and fifty.

47 ¶ But the Levites, after the tribe of their fathers, were not numbered among them.

48 For the Lord had spoken unto Moses, saying,

49 Only thou shalt not number the tribe of Levi, neither take the sum of them among the children of Israel;

50 But thou shalt appoint the Levites over the tabernacle of testimony, and over all the vessels thereof, and over all things that belong to it: they shall bear the tabernacle, and all the vessels thereof, and they shall minister unto it, and shall encamp round about the tabernacle.

51 And when the tabernacle setteth forward, the Levites shall take it down; and when the tabernacle is to be pitched, the Levites shall set it up: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

52 And the children of Israel shall pitch their tents, every man by his own camp, and every man by his own standard, throughout their hosts.

53 But the Levites shall pitch round about the tabernacle of testimony, that there be no wrath upon the congregation of the children of Israel: and the Levites shall keep the charge of the tabernacle of testimony.

54 And the children of Israel did according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so did they.

to be soldiers,” yea, officers in his army; and they must learn “to endure hardship as good soldiers.” (Note, 2 Tim. 2:3-7.) If exempted from secular concerns, it is in order that they may be the more given up to the study and preaching of the word of God, and to prayer, which are the chief weapons of their warfare; for by these means they may endeavour to avert the wrath of God from the people. As Christians are separated from the world, so ministers should be still more detached from its pursuits and employments, and examples to the flock; “not,” says Mr. Henry, “affecting to seem greater, but aiming to be really better, every way better, than others.”

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 2. The Israelites encamped in four grand divisions, with the tabernacle in the centre; yet at some distance from it, as a token of awe and reverence.—The sanctuary and the ark, as pledges of JEHOVAH's special favour, were in reality the glory and defence of the people; yet the people were stationed, as if they had been the guardians of the sanctuary, and no enemy could approach it without forcing the way through their hosts. Religion is indeed our protection; yet it is our duty to support its cause and interest with our whole power and ability.—This encampment is computed to have formed a moveable city of twelve miles square; and many think that the door of every tent faced the tabernacle, that thence the people might worship towards this token of God's presence upon a mercy-seat. We know nothing certain concerning the standards of the several tribes: but it is highly improbable that they should have been the figures of any animals, as the Jewish writers assert; for this might have proved an occasion to idolatry, and indeed it was deemed unlawful in after ages.

V. 3. The tribe of Judah, from which Christ sprang, was appointed to the highest station, and under it were ranked the tribes of Issachar and Zebulun, Judah's younger brethren by the same mother.—The tribe of Reuben, Jacob's eldest 30 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of the Kohathites, shall be Elizaphan the son of Uzziel.

31 And their charge shall be "the ark, and the table, and the candlestick, and "the altars, and the vessels of the sanctuary wherewith they minister, and "the hanging, and all the service thereof.

32 And Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall be chief over the chief of the Levites, and have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the sanctuary.

33 ¶ Of Merari was "the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Mushites: these are the families of Merari.

34 And those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were "six thousand and two hundred.

35 And the chief of the house of the father of the families of Merari was Zuriel, the son of Abihail: "these shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle northward.

36 And "under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari, shall be "the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and the sockets thereof, and all the vessels thereof, and all that serveth thereto, 37 And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords.

38 ¶ But those that encamp before the tabernacle "toward the east, even before the tabernacle of the congregation eastward, shall be Moses and Aaron, and his sons, "keeping the charge of the sanctuary, "for the charge of the children of Israel: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

39 All that were numbered of the Levites, which Moses and Aaron numbered at the commandment of the LORD, throughout their families, all the males from a month old and upward were "twenty and two thousand.

V. 32. Eleazar, who was next in succession to the high-priesthood, was appointed to rule those who were placed over all the Levites, in respect of their different services, and to allot those of each family their own work. The special charge, in the constituent parts of the sanctuary, allotted to each division, may be clearly seen by examining the marginal references.

V. 36. Marg. Ref. 4:29-33. 7:8.

V. 38. The three divisions of the Levites being stationed on the west, the south, and the north, of the sanctuary; the east, or fore-front, which was the most important station, was guarded by Moses and the priests, who thus were at hand to exclude all improper persons.

V. 39. The sum total of the Levites was 22,300; "of Gershon 7,500; (22) "of Kohath 8,600; (28) "of Merari 6,200." (34) But the 300 of the Levites are supposed to be the first-born of their several families, after the departure out of Egypt, who were already devoted to the Lord: and we must acknowledge a peculiar interposition of Providence in this near coincidence in the number of the Levites, and that of the first-born. (43)

V. 41-43. The first-born, in any company, must in general at least amount to one in eight or ten; whereas the number here mentioned, was scarcely one in fifty of all the males young and old: for there were above 600,000 adults, and perhaps almost as many under age. It is therefore evident, that none were numbered, but those who had been born after the destruction of the first-born of Egypt. This indeed seems the meaning of the law, which referred to the future, and not to the past; (Ex. 13:2.) and it is evident that the firstlings of the cattle were thus reckoned. Indeed 45,000 of both sexes, which is rather more than double the first-born males, seems a vast number of first-born children within the space of one year: but upon reflection, we shall find it by no means improbable, that among 1,200,000 persons of both sexes, who were above twenty years of age, (and many might marry much younger than that age,) there should be within that time 50,000 marriages: that is, about the twelfth part of the company of marriageable persons of each sex. Especially if we consider that multitudes might be inclined to marry, when they found they were about to enjoy liberty: and when 40 ¶ And the LORD said unto Moses, "Number all the first-born of the males of the children of Israel, from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names.

41 And thou shalt take the Levites for me, (I am the LORD,) instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel; and the cattle of the Levites, instead of all the firstlings among the cattle of the children of Israel.

42 And Moses numbered, as the LORD commanded him, all the first-born among the children of Israel.

43 And all the first-born males, by the number of names, from a month old and upward, of those that were numbered of them, were twenty and two thousand two hundred and threescore and thirteen.

44 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

45 Take "the Levites instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle, and the Levites shall be mine: I am the LORD.

46 And for those that are to be "redeemed, of the two hundred and threescore and thirteen of the first-born of the children of Israel, "which are more than the Levites;

47 Thou shalt even take "five shekels apiece by the poll; after "the shekel of the sanctuary shalt thou take them: (the shekel is twenty gerahs:)

48 And thou shalt give the money, wherewith the odd number of them is to be redeemed, unto Aaron and to his sons.

49 And Moses took the redemption money of them, that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites.

50 Of the first-born of the children of Israel took he the money; "a thousand three hundred and threescore and five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary.

51 And Moses "gave the money of them that were redeemed, unto Aaron and to his sons, according to the word of the LORD, as the LORD commanded Moses.

they recollected, that the promises made to Israel peculiarly respected a very rapid increase, and that there would doubtless be a very great blessing upon them in this respect.—The first-born Israelites were therefore all unfit for service on this emergency: and as they were the heirs of their several families, they probably would not have been very willing when of age to become servants to the priests; and consequently the change would be as acceptable to the relations of those who were set aside, as to those who were substituted in their stead.—It seems, however, that the Levites and their posterity were thus dedicated to God, only in lieu of the first-born at that time; for the law concerning the presentation and redemption of the first-born was in force through all succeeding generations, until the days of Christ. (Luke, 2:22, 23.)

V. 44-51. Either it was determined by lot, who should pay the redemption money, and for whom the Levites should be accepted; or it was paid by a common tax: or, as some think, they began with the eldest; and so the youngest, not being changed, were redeemed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

• Whilst we consider Jesus, our great High-Priest, appointed of the Father, and intrusted with the charge of the sanctuary and of the whole congregation, and keeping that charge with unremitting attention, and entire faithfulness, love, and power; we should recollect, that his ministers, as presented unto him and ministering before him, have a solemn charge committed to them also. They are called upon to wait in their office; to serve the Lord with reverence; to offer no strange fire; to do nothing of their own mind, or in their own spirit; and with all diligence and fidelity to follow the instructions and copy the example of their Lord. But it is of the utmost importance that each should know his own post and duty; that no part of the work may be neglected; and that there may be no interference, and no occasion given for envy, ambition, or discontent. No service required by such a Master can be either mean or hard; for he will put honour upon the faithful in the lowest situation, and will provide assistance where the work is too laborious. Christians also, though not engaged in the ministry, have a work to do, and a charge to keep; and must remember, that as all men are the Lord's by creation, believers are his by redemption; and that, as the ministry

The service and burden of the sons of Gershon, from thirty to fifty, 21-28; and of the Merarites, 29-33. The number of the Kohathites, 34-37; of the Gershonites, 38-41; and of the Merarites, 42-44. The sum total, 45-48.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron, saying,
2 Take the sum of the sons of ^aKohath from among the sons of Levi, after their families, by the house of their fathers,

3 From ^bthirty years old and upward, even until fifty years old, all that ^center into the host, to ^ddo the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 This shall be ^ethe service of the sons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation ^fabout the most holy things.

5 And ^gwhen the camp setteth forward, ^hAaron shall come, and his sons, and they shall take down the covering veil, and cover the ark of testimony with it;

6 And shall put thereon the covering of badgers' skins, and shall spread over it ⁱa cloth wholly of blue, and shall put in ^jthe staves thereof.

7 And upon ^kthe table of show-bread they shall spread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the dishes, and the spoons, and the bowls, and covers to ^lcover withal: and the continual bread shall be thereon.

8 And they shall spread upon them ^ma cloth of scarlet, and cover the same with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put in the staves thereof.

9 And they shall take a cloth of blue, and cover ⁿthe candlestick of the light, and his lamps, and his tongs, and his snuff-dishes, and all the oil-vessels thereof, wherewith they minister unto it.

10 And they shall put it, and all the vessels thereof, ^owithin a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put it upon a bar.

11 And upon ^pthe golden altar they shall spread a cloth of blue, and cover it with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put to the staves thereof.

12 And they shall take all ^qthe instruments of ministry, wherewith they minister in the sanctuary, and put ^rthem in a cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put ^sthem on a bar.

13 And they shall take away ^tthe ashes from the altar, and spread ^ua purple cloth thereon:

14 And they shall put upon it ^vall the vessels thereof, wherewith they minister about it, ^weven the censers, the flesh-hooks, and the shovels, and the basins, all the vessels of the altar; and they shall spread upon it a covering of badgers' skins, and put to the staves of it.

15 And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the sanctuary, and all the vessels of the sanctuary, as the camp is to set forward; ^xafter that, the sons of Kohath shall come to bear it: but ^ythey shall not touch ^zany holy thing, lest they die. ^{aa}These things are the burden of the sons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation.

16 ^{ab}And to ^{ac}the office of Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest ^{ad}pertaineth ^{ae}the oil for the light, and ^{af}the sweet incense, and ^{ag}the daily meat-offering, and ^{ah}the anointing oil, ^{ai}and the oversight of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, in the sanctuary, and in the vessels thereof.

17 ^{aj}And the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

18 ^{ak}But ye not off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites:

19 But thus do unto them, that they may live and not die, when they approach unto the most holy things; Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service, and to his burden.

20 But ^{al}they shall not go in to see when the holy things are covered, lest they die.

21 ^{am}And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

22 Take also ^{an}the sum of the sons of Gershon, throughout the houses of their fathers, by their families:

was appointed for their benefit, they are required to strengthen the hands and to encourage the hearts of those, who minister before the Lord in their behalf.—Blessed be God, we may all at present enter even into the holiest, without danger of death, nay, with assurance of acceptance and life eternal, if we come by faith in Jesus Christ. Still however we must regret, that the Lord's people form a very small proportion of the whole multitude of mankind; and we should be reminded to pray for the sending forth of more faithful ministers: for when they are increased, it is a hopeful sign that the Lord is about to accomplish great things in increasing his church. Nor let us forget, that children, though unfit for service, were numbered as part of this holy tribe; "for of such is the kingdom of God." But whilst we desire that our offspring should be numbered among the Lord's peculiar people, and that they should excel in holiness; let us, after the example of Moses, be indifferent about every other distinction and interest, either for them or for ourselves.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 3. The people were numbered for war from twenty years of age; but the Levites were not numbered for the service of the sanctuary till thirty. This, however, had special reference to the charge and burden of removing the tabernacle: for they entered as probationers at twenty-five; (Notes, 8:24-26.) and in David's time, when the work was more extensive, but not so heavy, they were admitted at twenty years old. (Note, 1 Chr. 23:24-28.)—Jesus Christ deferred entering on his public work till he was thirty years of age: John the Baptist seems to have begun his ministry rather earlier in life.—The Levites also had an honourable discharge from the most laborious parts of their employment, after twenty years service, though they were still to be occupied in one way or other.—These laws are not binding in the letter of them upon the ministers of the gospel; but they may afford them much useful practical instruction.

V. 5. The law prohibiting any person except the high-priest on one day in the year, to enter into the most holy place, must have admitted of an exception, while the Israelites were continually removing in the wilderness: that exception was expressly made; and the directions given relating to it must be religiously observed, or the service could not be safely performed.—While the cloud rested on the tabernacle, the general rule was in force; but when it was removed, then the priests might enter to prepare the sacred vessels for removal.

V. 6. These coverings were intended not so much for security and decent respect, as for concealment; and they marked not only the reverence due to holy things, but the mysteriousness of the things signified by those types, and the darkness of that dispensation.—Some suppose that the cloth of blue represented the azure firmament, which interposes between us and the majesty of heaven.—The covering of badgers' skins, made for the tabernacle, was carried by the Gershonites; (24:25.) but this was one made to conceal and shelter the ark, when it was to be carried.

V. 7. Continual bread.] The Israelites might be able to procure corn enough from the adjacent countries, even when in the wilderness, to make the show-bread, and to present the daily meat-offerings.

V. 13, 14. The embers of the sacred fire seem to have been removed in the grate, which was carried apart from the brazen altar; (Note, Ex. 27:1-8.) both being covered from view by purple cloths.

V. 15. Marg. Ref. z.

V. 16. Eleazar himself, perhaps with the other priests, was required to carry the oil for the light, the incense, and the flour for the daily meat-offering, and the holy ointment; besides superintending the Levites.—It may be supposed, that he himself carried no more of the oil than for present use. (Note, Ex. 30:22-33.)

V. 18. Eleazar and the priests would be chargeable with the death of the Kohathites, if they failed to give them proper cautions and directions; or permitted them to gaze irreverently or curiously upon the holy things, which they might carry, but must not see. (20)

V. 22-26. Marg. Ref.

V. 27, 28. The Levites were under the command of the priests. Eleazar exercised this authority in general, as next in succession to Aaron; and he in particular was placed over 23 From thirty years old and upward until fifty years old shalt thou number them; all that enter in to perform the service, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

24 This is the service of the families of the Gershonites, to serve, and for burdens.

25 And they shall bear the curtains of the tabernacle, and the tabernacle of the congregation, his covering, and the covering of the badgers' skins that is above upon it, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

26 And the hangings of the court, and the hanging for the door of the gate of the court, which is by the tabernacle and by the altar round about, and their cords, and all the instruments of their service, and all that is made for them; so shall they serve.

27 At the appointment of Aaron and his sons shall be all the service of the sons of the Gershonites, in all their burdens, and in all their service: and ye shall appoint unto them in charge all their burdens.

28 This is the service of the families of the sons of Gershon, in the tabernacle of the congregation: and their charge shall be under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

29 ¶ As for the sons of Merari, thou shalt number them after their families, by the house of their fathers:

30 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old shalt thou number them, every one that entereth into the service, to do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation.

31 And this is the charge of their burden, according to all their service in the tabernacle of the congregation; the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and sockets thereof,

32 And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords, with all their instruments, and with all their service: and by name ye shall reckon the instruments of the charge of their burden.

33 This is the service of the families of the sons of Merari, according to all their service in the tabernacle of the congregation, under the hand of Ithamar the son of Aaron the priest.

34 ¶ And Moses and Aaron, and the chief of the congregation, numbered the sons of the Kohathites, after their families, and after the house of their fathers;

35 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation.

36 And those that were numbered of them, by their families, were two thousand seven hundred and fifty.

37 These were they that were numbered of the families of the Kohathites, all that might do service in the tabernacle of the congregation, which Moses and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

38 And those that were numbered of the sons of Gershon, throughout their families, and by the house of their fathers;

39 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation;

40 Even those that were numbered of them throughout their families, by the house of their fathers, were two thousand and six hundred and thirty.

41 These are they that were numbered of the families of the sons of Gershon, of all that might do service in the tabernacle of the congregation, whom Moses and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the LORD.

42 And those that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, throughout their families, by the house of their fathers,

43 From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation;

44 Even those that were numbered of them, after their families, were three thousand and two hundred.

45 These be those that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, whom Moses and Aaron numbered, according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

46 All those that were numbered of the Levites, whom Moses and Aaron and the chief of Israel numbered, after their families, and after the house of their fathers;

47 From thirty years old and upward even unto fifty years old, every one that came to do the service of the ministry, and the service of the burden in the tabernacle of the congregation;

48 Even those that were numbered of them, were eight thousand and five hundred and fourscore.

49 According to the commandment of the LORD they were numbered by the hand of Moses, every one according to his service, and according to his burden: thus were they numbered of him, as the LORD commanded Moses.

the Kohathites; while Ithamar, his younger brother, commanded the Gershonites and Merarites. (33)

V. 32. Reckon the instruments.] An inventory seems to have been taken of every particular, even to the pins belonging to each part; that nothing might be wanting, when the tabernacle was to be set up.

V. 44. Three thousand and two hundred.] The family of Merari was smaller than either of the other families of Levi; yet there was in it a greater number of able men; and they were charged with the heaviest part of the sanctuary: and though wagons were afterwards provided for them, yet the loading and unloading of the sockets, and other things of great weight, would require much strength. (Comp. 36:40, with 32:28, 34.) The sum total of effective Levites was very small, compared with that of the other tribes: (48) yet there would be more by far than could at once be employed in this service. But they might carry by turns and ease one another, and thus do the whole expeditiously and cheerfully. They would also have their own tents to remove, and their own families to take care of.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-3. The minister of Christ ought not on any account to strive or war with carnal weapons, yet he must "enter into the host of the LORD;" and both in his personal conflict against sin and Satan, and in the duties of his important calling, he must boldly "fight the good fight of faith," with the appointed weapons of his warfare, sound doctrine, fervent prayer, and a holy example. Peculiar gravity, prudence, humility, ripeness of judgment, experience, meekness, and patience, are necessary, in order to a due performance of the work of the ministry, to the glory of God, the edification of the church, and the silencing of gainsayers; and ministers are exposed to many temptations from the smiles and frowns of men, from popularity and opposition. It is therefore far more advisable for those, who are intended for this sacred service, to spend much previous time in retirement, study, meditation, and communion with God, that they may come forth well prepared and furnished for usefulness, when a proper occasion is afforded; than that they should, by an indiscreet and hurtful zeal, be allowed or encouraged to violate the apostle's rule, by prematurely entering on public services. (Note, 1 Tim. 3:6.) From the neglect of this caution, many mischiefs have arisen, both to individuals and to the cause of God. When, however, men are engaged, and have health and strength, and work assigned them, they should lose no time, and miss no opportunities of usefulness; for these may be regretted, but cannot be recalled.—As the faithful servants of God grow in years, and their natural vigour abates, they must not be censured, if they in some respects moderate their labours, especially in those services which require great exertion. And if it please God to lay them quite aside by sickness and infirmity, they may still serve the church of God by their prayers, and an example of faith, patience, and obedience; and they are still entitled to respect and maintenance. They ought not indeed, and will not desire, to cease from labour whilst capable of it: but they must not murmur, if they are thus discharged, or if they see others "increase whilst they decrease." For the Lord will

The lepers and unclean to be excluded from the camp, 1-4. The law of restitution enforced, 5-10. The trial to be made of a woman suspected by her husband of adultery, 11-31.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Command the children of Israel, that they put out of the camp every leper, and every one that hath an issue, and whosoever is defiled by the dead:

3 Both male and female shall ye put out, and put them out without the camp: as the LORD spake unto Moses, so did the children of Israel.

4 And the children of Israel did so, and put them out without the camp: as the LORD spake unto Moses, so did the children of Israel.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 6 Speak unto the children of Israel, When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit, to do a trespass against the LORD, and that person be guilty:

7 Then they shall confess their sin which they have done; and he shall recompense his trespass with the principal thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him against whom he hath trespassed.

do his work by a succession of servants: and he will let them all see, that he can do without them; that the work is in his hand; that when he employs them, he does not need them; and that he can easily send out others in their stead, when they are no longer serviceable.

V. 4-49. Though we are not under the comparative obscurity and severity of the Mosaic dispensation; yet we should remember that heavenly things must be treated with reverence, and not curiously, contemptuously, or presumptuously inquired into. It is very dangerous to attempt being "wise above what is written," in respect of those great mysteries which relate to the infinite God, and his works and ways; or to intrude into those things over which he hath purposely thrown a veil. And the ministers of God, and those who have attained to a superior degree of influence or authority, should caution and deter their juniors, and the people, from such intrusion. Indeed, the rule holds good in all things: we ought to prevent others from committing sin to the utmost of our ability, as far as consists with other relative duties; and we are accessory to the guilt and the ruin of those, who perish through our neglect. (Note, 1 Tim. 5:21, 22.)—But though the Lord is great and holy, and vengeance belongeth unto him; and we are mean, polluted, and guilty creatures; we may yet approach him with safety, comfort, and confidence, in the way which he hath opened, provided we use the appointed means, and observe the directions which he has given.—In this moveable world changes await us: but, to whatever place we remove, we must be sure to take our religion with us, to prefer the house and worship of God to our temporal interests, and to serve him with the prime of our health and strength. Ere long this earthly house of our tabernacle will be taken down; but if it hath been "a habitation of God through the Spirit," this great and solemn removal will be all under the hand of Jesus, our merciful High Priest: he will give his angels a charge to convey our souls invisibly to glory; and all the constituent parts of the tabernacle shall, by his power, be brought together to heaven, and there raised up again incorruptible, immortal, and glorious; "and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Let us therefore quicken and comfort ourselves and each other with these words. (Notes, Rom. 8:10, 11. 1 Thes. 5:13-18.)

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1-4. The camps of Israel being now formed, with the sanctuary of God in the centre; orders were given, that, in honour of him who thus condescended to dwell among them, the lepers and unclean persons should be excluded from the camp, according to laws at different times given on these subjects. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 12:14, 15. Lev. 13:45, 46, 15:5.)

V. 6. That men commit. These words seem to intimate, that Adam's children are very prone to acts of fraud and dishonesty; though each of them is "a trespass against the Lord."—The expression, "and that person be guilty," does not merely refer to his actual criminality, but to his consciousness of guilt respecting it: for this case must be distinguished from that of a person detected in dishonesty, which is attempted to conceal.

V. 7, 8. If the person injured were dead, restitution would of course be made to his heir; but if he had no

[Practical Observations.]

11 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 12 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him,

13 And a man lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her husband, and be kept close, and she be defiled, and there be no witness against her, neither she be taken with the manner;

14 And the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be defiled; or if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be not defiled;

15 Then shall the man bring his wife unto the priest, and he shall bring her offering for her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley-meal: he shall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincense thereon: for it is an offering of jealousy, an offering of memorial, bringing iniquity to remembrance.

16 And the priest shall bring her near, and set her before the LORD.

near relation, to whom the restitution might properly be made, the priest was appointed to receive it, when the criminal offered the trespass-offering.—Doubtless real poverty would excuse a man: yet this exception is not made; for men are ready enough to find out excuses for themselves, where their own interest is concerned. They therefore, who establish general scriptural rules of duty, should not be censured, though they do not mention every particular exception.—This law conclusively shows the absolute necessity of restitution, in one form or other, where actual poverty does not hinder, either to the injured person, to his relations, to the poor, or to pious uses; for, as Mr. Henry observes, "it is certain, while that which is got by injustice, is knowingly retained in the hands, the guilt of the injustice remains upon the conscience, and is not purged by sacrifice or offering, prayers or tears: for it is one and the same continued act of sin persisted in." Some say, that this doctrine tends to embarrass tender consciences; but it is the doctrine of right reason, and of the word of God; and it is rather calculated to detect hypocrites, and to direct such as have tender consciences to a proper conduct, which, springing from faith in Christ, will make way for inward peace.

V. 9, 10. This law tended to encourage the priests in constant attendance on their work: for what any priest received of the people, in private sacrifices or oblations, belonged to him, and was not divided with his brethren.

V. 12. The remarkable law which follows, was no doubt intended to fortify the minds of the Israelitish women in the hour of temptation, when opportunity, importunity, and secrecy were combined; and to render them watchful against all occasions of exciting suspicion in the breasts of their husbands. On the other hand, it was calculated to prevent the cruel treatment from husbands, which such suspicions might produce, "through the hardness of their hearts," when the crime could not be proved, or the rage of jealousy allayed; and it would also lessen the number of hasty divorces. If properly regarded, the guilty could hardly escape, or the innocent remain under injurious suspicions; and in many ways it would subserve the interests of purity and of domestic peace, both by constantly holding out a salutary warning, and by the alarm which would be raised whenever it was carried into execution.

V. 13, 14. God had commanded that the adulterer and adulteress should be put to death, if detected and the fact proved: (Lev. 20:10.) but when the husband entertained suspicions on some probable grounds, and could not bring proof; he was allowed to make this solemn appeal to a heart-searching God, and to put his wife on the awful trial. If grossly criminal, it must be supposed she had been too regardless of appearances. (2 Cor. 8:21. 1 Thes. 5:22.)

V. 15. This coarse offering, without oil or frankincense implied the baseness of the crime of which the woman was suspected, and the mournful state of the family. It was not an atoning sacrifice, but an oblation for a memorial, as solemnly referring the decision to the Lord, and calling upon him to bring the iniquity to remembrance, and to punish it in case the accused was guilty. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 16, 17. As this process could not be carried on, except at the sanctuary; the trouble and expense attending it would 17 And the priest shall take holy water in an earthen vessel; and of the dust that is in the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take, and put it into the water.

18 And the priest shall set the woman before the Lord, and uncover the woman's head, and put the offering of memorial in her hands, which is the jealousy-offering: and the priest shall have in his hand the bitter water that causeth the curse.

19 And the priest shall charge her by an oath, and say unto the woman, If no man have lain with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness with another instead of thy husband, be thou free from this bitter water that causeth the curse:

20 But if thou hast gone aside to another instead of thy husband, and if thou be defiled, and some man hath lain with thee beside thine husband;

22 And this water that causeth the curse shall go into thy bowels, to make thy belly to swell, and thy thigh to rot. And the woman shall say, Amen, amen.

23 And the priest shall write these curses in a book, and he shall blot them out with the bitter water; render men cautious how they instituted it without some urgent reason. It is generally supposed, that the water of the laver in the court of the tabernacle is meant; being called holy because of its separation from ordinary uses. This was put into a mean and brittle vessel, and dust from the floor of the tabernacle was cast into it for the women to drink: all this implied the disgrace which she lay under, the shame to which she would be exposed if guilty, and the punishment that she would justly endure; in which every thing relating to the worship of a holy God, would, as it were, combine together for her destruction.—This water was called the bitter water, from the bitter effects which would follow, when drunk by a guilty person. (18,19. Note, 27.)

V. 19. Instead of thy husband. Or, “being under the power of thy husband;” that is, a married woman, which was marked as the grand aggravation of the crime charged on her. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 22. Amen, Amen. This two-fold solemn consent of the woman to the awful appeal to God, referring to both parts of it, implied a hearty desire to be dealt with according to her innocence or guilt; and an acknowledgment of the justice of God, in inflicting his dreadful vengeance upon such as were guilty. This appeal could not be made by a person who was consciously guilty, without the most entire hardness of heart and presumptuous defiance of God, and even atheistical unbelief: and every circumstance was suited to warn and alarm the woman, that, if guilty, she might rather confess her crime, than venture the terrible consequences. The Jewish writers say, that if she refused this oath, and confessed her guilt, she was not put to death, but only divorced without a dowry.

V. 23. The words of the oath or curse were written on a piece of parchment, which was called a book at that time; and the writing was washed off into the water, as if the curse had been infused in it, that the woman might drink it.

V. 27. The water, by its natural efficacy, could not harm an innocent person. But if any woman added to the crime of adultery, the awful guilt of such a deliberate perjury, God would supernaturally thus punish her.—The Jews have a tradition that the adulterer also would die of a similar disease at the same time; which probably was not altogether unlike that loathsome distemper, with which God has in these latter ages shown his abhorrence of lewdness; yet it was far more immediate in its effects.

V. 31. Even when the husband's jealousy was groundless, he would not be accounted guilty, if he took this method of clearing up the matter: but otherwise it would lead him to do those things which would bring guilt upon him. This law is a singular proof of the divine legation of Moses. No mere politician would have thought of such a law, which at first sight generally appears harsh and strange: yet the effect, when carried into execution, must have been in all respects most salutary, and worthy of the divine wisdom. Again, it could not be carried into execution, without a miracle: and 24 And he shall cause the woman to drink the bitter water that causeth the curse: and the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter.

25 Then the priest shall take the jealousy-offering out of the woman's hand, and shall wave the offering before the Lord, and offer it upon the altar.

26 And the priest shall take an handful of the offering, even the memorial thereof, and burn it upon the altar; and afterward shall cause the woman to drink the water.

27 And when he hath made her to drink the water, then it shall come to pass, that if she be defiled, and have done trespass against her husband, that the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter, and her belly shall swell, and her thigh shall rot: and the woman shall be a curse among her people.

28 And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean; then she shall be free, and shall conceive seed.

29 This is the law of jealousies, when a wife goeth aside to another instead of her husband, and is defiled;

30 Or when the spirit of jealousy cometh upon him, and he be jealous over his wife, and shall set the woman before the Lord, and the priest shall execute upon her all this law:

31 Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity.

no legislator, pretending to be sent by God, would have committed himself by an institution which might at any time disprove his claim.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The people of God should separate from such as are unclean by impenitent iniquity, and exclude them as far as they are able from their fellowship: and then if, under the mask of hypocrisy, they affront the Lord and profane his holy ordinances by an unallowed intrusion, they do it at their peril. But assuredly such shall never . . . “that holy city, where the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and he will dwell with them;” but will be left without, “where is weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth.” In this miserable company, will most certainly be found those unrighteous persons who have unjustly obtained, and as unjustly keep possession of, their neighbour's property: and he who pretends to piety, and thus encourages himself in dishonesty by a professed dependance on the atonement of Christ, as grossly affronts him, as that man does, who substitutes his own honesty or morality in the stead of His merits and sacrifice, at the price of his acceptance with God! Indeed the confession, the restitution, and the trespass-offering must always go together.—It is the will of God, not only that his ministers should be provided for, but that the most diligent and zealous should receive the greatest encouragement; though alas! this is seldom attended to, as far as these concerns fall under the management of men.

V. 11-31. The Lord's abhorrence of adultery, and his vengeance against it, appear conspicuous in this chapter: and though we have neither a law of jealousy, offering to detect adulterers, and adulteresses, nor any method of bringing them to condign punishment; so that they may either conceal or glory in their shame, and the impunity with which they transgress; yet assuredly their sin will at last find them out; for God himself will detect the most secret offenders, and confound the most daring. Indeed, his providence often stamps infamy upon sinners of this description, by those dreadful diseases with which he visits them, and with which they infect, plague, and curse one another in this world; and his word denounces the severest vengeance against them in the world to come. But all approaches to this horrid crime must be studiously avoided; and married persons especially should act in such a manner as to inspire mutual confidence in each other; and each of them should avoid every intimacy, and every word and look, which may excite uneasiness in the other's breast. For conjugal affection is prone to jealousy, and Satan delights in exciting “a spirit of jealousy” in the hearts of husbands and wives; knowing that it is all tormenting to suspect and to be suspected. He knows also that such suspicions subvert domestic peace, set aside family religion and the pious education of children, and expose both parties to manifold temptations: so that what began with heedless imprudence and groundless jealousy often terminates in

CHAPTER VI.

The Nazarite's vow, 1-8. His rule, in case he unavoidably contracted uncleanness, 9-12. His sacrifices and observances at the expiration of his vow, 13-21. The blessing which the priests were to pronounce on the people, 22-27.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, "When either man or woman shall separate themselves to vow a vow of a Nazarite, to separate themselves unto the LORD;

3 He shall separate himself from wine, and strong drink, and shall drink no vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink: neither shall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat moist grapes, or dried.

4 All the days of his separation shall he eat nothing that is made of the vine-tree, from the kernels even to the husk.

5 All the days of the vow of his separation, there shall no razor come upon his head; until the days be fulfilled, in the which he separateth himself unto the LORD, he shall be holy, and shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow.

6 All the days that he separateth himself unto the LORD, he shall come at no dead body.

deep criminality and the most fatal consequences. We should "abstain from all appearance of evil," and watch and pray continually, that we may neither excite nor indulge such dangerous suspicions. If, however, we have a clear conscience and a true faith, we may be calm under the most injurious aspersions; and God in due time will clear up our characters, and convert our affliction into a blessing.—But how should men tremble at the thoughts of appealing to God, when their own hearts condemn them! "for God is greater than their hearts, and knoweth all things," and he will be sure at length tremendously to revenge such a daring affront.—Sensual lusts will certainly end in bitterness; and they who delight in cursing shall be filled with it.—Finally, such as allow iniquity in their hearts, under a profession of faith, will find that all the doctrines of God's word, (by which the true believer becomes joyful and fruitful in the works of righteousness;) all the ordinances of his house, and all the dispensations of his providence, concur to increase their guilt, obduracy, and condemnation.

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 2. The word "Nazarite" signifies one who is separated. The Lord himself set apart Samson and John the Baptist before their birth, to be Nazarites all their days: Samuel was devoted by his mother to be a perpetual Nazarite, when he was "asked of the Lord;" and the family of the Rachabites were a sort of Nazarites from one generation to another, by the injunction of Jonadab their progenitor. (Notes, Jer. 35:) But in general the Nazarites became such by a voluntary vow, which any person might make, of peculiar separation from the world and devotedness to the exercises of religion, for a limited time, and under certain regulations. (Notes, 30:)—Among the distinguishing favours which God conferred on Israel, it is stated that "he raised up of their young men for Nazarites;" whence we may infer, that their prayers, examples, and instructions, were considered as a public blessing. (Am. 2:11, 12.) The Jews say, that this vow could not be made for less than thirty days, but St. Paul seems to have taken it for no more than seven days. (Acts 21:24-27.)

To separate themselves. נָזַר, niph. from נָזַר, to be separate: whence נָזִיר, a Nazarite. Hence the word is rendered in the margin, "to make themselves Nazarites." The word (נָזַר) rendered "separate themselves," in the first clause, is the same as is used concerning the making of a singular vow; (Lev. 27:2.) and seems to convey the idea of a person's acting from an extraordinary zeal for God and religion.—This use of the two distinct words seems to imply, that the singular vow, and the vow of the Nazarite, were in some things of a similar nature. (Note, Lev. 27:2-8.)

V. 3, 4. "Drinking wine," or strong drink of any sort, is an emblem, both in its nature and effects, of the intoxicating pleasures of sin and sense; and from this, in every form, and from all approaches to it, the Nazarites were commanded most scrupulously to abstain.—There is nothing in Scripture which bears the most remote affinity to the religious orders of the church of Rome, except these Nazarites: but mark the difference, or rather the opposition! The religious in that church are forbidden to marry; but no such restriction was laid upon the Nazarites. They are commanded to abstain from meats; but the Nazarites might eat any food

8 All the days of his separation he is holy unto the Lord.

9 And if any man die very suddenly by him, and he hath defiled the head of his consecration, then he shall shave his head in the day of his cleansing, on the seventh day shall he shave it.

10 And on the eighth day he shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons, to the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

11 And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, and make an atonement for him, for that he sinned by the dead, and shall hallow his head that same day.

12 And he shall consecrate unto the Lord the days of his separation, and shall bring a lamb of the first year for a trespass-offering: but the days that were before shall be lost, because his separation was defiled.

13 ¶ And this is the law of the Nazarite: when the days of his separation are fulfilled, he shall be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation;

14 And he shall offer his offering unto the Lord, one he-lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt-offering, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish for a sin-offering, and one ram without blemish for peace-offerings.

allowed to other Israelites. They are not generally prohibited wine, even on fasting days; but the Nazarites might not drink it at any time. Their vow is perpetual to the end of their lives; but the Nazarite's vow was only for a limited time, at his own discretion; and in certain cases not unless allowed by husbands or parents. A similar contrast may often be discerned, between the rules of men's invention, for fasting and for extraordinary sanctity, and the precepts of Scripture.

V. 5. This inattention to the hair, by which it was left to grow and to hang neglected, would give the Nazarites a singular appearance of mortification to the world, and disregard to the body. It might also denote their peculiar subjection to the Lord; (Note, 1 Cor. 11:2-16.) and it served to distinguish them from other men, as they passed through the streets.

V. 6, 7. The Nazarites were not allowed to attend the funerals of their nearest relations; by which they were represented as more "holy to the Lord" than the ordinary priests, and in this particular ranked with the high priests. (Notes, Lev. 21:1-5, 10-15.)

V. 9-12. No penalty was appointed for those who willfully violated their vow of being Nazarites, nor any sacrifice required of them; they must answer for such profane trifling with the Lord another day. But if, by the very sudden death of any person near them, they contracted uncleanness they would not only be unclean seven days, and require purifying as other Israelites did; but they must offer sacrifices of atonement at the tabernacle or temple, lose all the past time, and begin over again to consecrate their appointed season of separation to the Lord. And how often soever this might take place, in every renewed instance, the whole time which had been vowed, must be entered upon again.—Though the pollution contracted was involuntary, yet it was a transgression of the ceremonial law, and as such required expiation; and in some instances, due care might not be taken. In one way or another, however, a degree of sin would doubtless be committed; and therefore the Nazarite must appear before God as a sinner, with the offerings required of a man who had been unclean by a running issue and was healed, and with a trespass-offering. (Lev. 15:13-15.) This was suited to render the Nazarites very circumspect in their whole conduct. No ceremonial uncleanness caused this interruption, except the touch of the dead body of man; for death came in by sin, and was thus accounted unclean, till the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, as it were, sanctified death and the grave to his people. But the soul dead in sin, and in the dead works attending that state, are still as polluted and polluting as ever.

V. 13-20. By these sacrifices and ceremonies, at the expiration of his term, the Nazarite was taught to confess, that his performance of the vow needed atonement and forgiveness, being mixed with sin; to acknowledge that the honour of all which was done well belonged to the Lord; and that, though he was no longer a Nazarite, he was still by duty and choice the devoted servant of the Lord, and considered communion with a reconciled God as the delight of his soul. The hair was shaven off, as a token that the vow was accomplished; and was burnt, not on the altar, as if it could

CHAPTER VII.

The princes of Israel present, at the dedication of the sanctuary, six covered wagons and twelve oxen, which the Lord directs to be given to the Levites, 1-9. Each of the twelve princes, on twelve succeeding days, brings oblations and sacrifices, 10-88. The Lord speaks to Moses from the mercy-seat, 89.

AND it came to pass on the day that Moses had fully set up the tabernacle, and had anointed it, and sanctified it, and all the instruments thereof, both the altar, and all the vessels thereof; and had anointed them, and sanctified them;

2 That the princes of Israel, heads of the house of their fathers (who were the princes of the tribes, and were over them that were numbered,) offered:

3 And they brought their offering before the Lord, six covered wagons, and twelve oxen; a wagon for two of the princes, and for each one an ox: and they brought them before the tabernacle.

4 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

5 Take it of them, that they may be to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou shalt give them unto the Levites, to every man according to his service.

6 And Moses took the wagons and the oxen, and gave them unto the Levites.

7 Two wagons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their service.

8 And four wagons and eight oxen he gave unto the sons of Merari, according unto their service, under the hand of Ithamar, the son of Aaron, the priest.

9 But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none; because the service of the sanctuary belonging unto them was that they should bear upon their shoulders.

10 And the princes offered for dedicating of the altar, in the day that it was anointed, even the princes offered their offering before the altar.

11 And the Lord said unto Moses, They shall offer their offering each prince on his day, for the dedicating of the altar.

12 And he that offered his offering the first day, was Nahshon the son of Amminadab, of the tribe of Judah.

13 And his offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them were full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

14 One spoon of ten shekels of gold, full of incense:

15 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

16 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

17 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

18 On the second day Nathaneel the son of Zuar, prince of Issachar, did offer.

19 He offered for his offering one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

20 One spoon of gold of ten shekels, full of incense:

21 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

22 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

23 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Nathaneel the son of Zuar.

24 On the third day Eliab the son of Helon, prince of the children of Zebulun, did offer.

25 His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering:

26 One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense:

27 One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:

28 One kid of the goats for a sin-offering:

29 And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Eliab the son of Helon.

30 On the fourth day Elizur the son of She-deur, prince of the children of Reuben, did offer.

31 His offering was one silver charger, of the weight of an hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the this supposes that more time had elapsed. Moses had begun to set up the tabernacle, than was employed in anointing and dedicating it, and in consecrating the priests: but perhaps the language used was intended to take in likewise the arrangements made concerning the encampment of the tribes around the sanctuary, and the charge of it assigned to the priests and Levites. As, however, the princes are the same as presided over the numbering of the people; and as they afterwards offered in the order of their encampments, not in that of the seniority; (which is shown by comparing this chapter with the second;) we must conclude that these regulations had previously been made.—The wagons are supposed to have been neat carriages, such as were then used to ride in; yet made very strong; and some think they were richly decorated, as well as covered to keep out the wet or dust.

V. 4-9. It seems that Moses hesitated on the propriety of receiving this oblation, and about the disposal of it, till he had consulted the Lord. The sockets of silver and brass alone are computed to have weighed more than eight tons, which would be fully sufficient to load four strong wagons: so that the sons of Merari would still have much to carry upon their shoulders; as probably the sons of Gershon also had. The Kohathites had in all only a moderate weight; and in reverence to the sacred things, they were expressly ordered to carry them at all times upon their shoulders. As the priests were of this family, they often assisted in this service. The neglect of this rule was David's first and chief mistake, when Uzzah was smitten. (Notes, 2 Sam. 6:3, 12, 13.)

V. 10. It is probable that there was some difference of rank and possessions among the Israelites even in Egypt: and consequently at their departure, the chief men would obtain a larger portion of the spoil; by which means they were enabled to present these oblations. Yet some persons conjecture, that the princes offered not only in the behalf, but at the expense, of their several tribes.

V. 11. As the princes were preparing to bring their oblations all at once, the Lord ordered, that they should present them separately; both to prevent confusion, to increase the solemnity, that the priests might not be overburdened with work, and that they might have leisure to grow more expert by daily practice. And, as a large proportion of the sacrifices was feasted upon, both by the priests and people, it would also prevent excess or waste, and promote hospitality, to have only one oblation at a time. Though one tribe was more numerous and wealthy than another, they all presented exactly the same oblations and sacrifices; for they were all equally interested in the sanctuary and worship of God, and were all willing to express an equal affection for them. Every one's offering is nevertheless particularly mentioned; for the Lord takes pleasure in recording the willing services of his people.

V. 12. Nahshon is the only one, who is not called a prince, in the history of this transaction. Some suppose that this was a humiliating circumstance, intended to counterbalance his pre-eminence; others conjecture, that this title was omitted, because it was reserved for Christ, who was to descend from this tribe: but perhaps it was considered as needless, seeing he was the principal person in the whole company.

V. 13, 14. The silver chargers, or dishes, might be useful for the meat-offerings, and to contain the flesh of the sacrifices when the priests feasted upon it. The silver bowls would be useful for the drink-offerings, and to receive the blood for sprinkling; and the golden spoons were suited to the service of the altar of incense. (Note, Ex. 25:23-30,

CHAPTER VIII.

The lamps of the candlestick lighted, 1-4. The Levites consecrated, 5-22. Their age and time of service, 23-26.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Speak unto Aaron, and say unto him, When thou lightest the lamps, the seven lamps shall give light over against the candlestick.

3 And Aaron did so: he lighted the lamps thereof over against the candlestick; as the LORD commanded Moses.

4 And this work of the candlestick was of beaten gold; unto the shaft thereof, unto the flowers thereof, was beaten work: according unto the pattern which the LORD had showed Moses, so he made the candlestick.

5 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

6 Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and cleanse them.

7 And thus shalt thou do unto them, to cleanse them: 'Sprinkle water of purifying upon them, and let them shave all their flesh, and let them wash their clothes, and so make themselves clean.

8 Then let them take a young bullock with this meat-offering, even fine flour mingled with oil, and another young bullock shalt thou take for a sin offering.

9 And thou shalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt gather the whole assembly of the children of Israel together.

10 And thou shalt bring the Levites before the LORD, and the children of Israel shall put their hands upon the Levites:

11 And Aaron shall offer the Levites before the LORD, for an offering of the children of Israel, that they may execute the service of the LORD.

12 And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks: and thou shalt offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, unto the LORD, to make an atonement for the Levites.

13 And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, and offer them for an offering unto the LORD.

14 Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel; and the Levites shall be mine.

15 And after that shall the Levites go in to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt cleanse them, and offer them for an offering.

16 For they are wholly given unto me from among the children of Israel; 'instead of such as open every womb, even instead of the first-born of all the children of Israel, have I taken them unto me.

this occasion, as he had often before done; and as he probably spake to the high-priests afterwards, when they inquired of him by Urim and Thummim. (Notes, Ex. 28:30.)—This audible articulate voice from God, which was perceived by human ears, represented God as if he were incorporate, and may well be looked upon as an earnest of that great Mystery, "God manifest in the flesh," who in the fulness of time became a man, and spake to the Jews familiarly in their own language. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They whom Providence distinguishes as princes, nobles, or wealthy persons, should take the lead and set the example in every good work, with liberal hearts devising "liberal things;" for this is the proper improvement of their talents. But a liberal mind should be under the direction of prudence and discretion: and the circumstances of the times, the state of the church and its ministers, and the necessities of those around them should be considered; that nothing may be wasted in useless expense, but all wisely directed to the substantial benefit of those who need it.—The servants of God have no occasion to be discouraged in the prospect either of heavy services, or of fiery trials: for he can send them seasonable and unexpected relief whenever he pleases; and will be sure to proportion his assistance to their necessities.—Every thing in the worship of God should be "done decently and in order," and as may best promote edification. On some occasions it may be proper to employ a great deal of time, and to expend much money in his immediate worship: and the growing Christian will not be weary or complain of this; but will account it his gain, his pleasure, and his honour. All our works of piety and charity must be accompanied with an humble acknowledgment of our sinfulness, and a believing dependence on the sacrifice of Christ: they must spring from love to God, gratitude to him for the blessings of redemption, an unreserved surrender of ourselves to his service, and a disposition to delight in doing his will, and in rendering him all the praise. Such good works are "spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." The Lord delights to honour those who thus honour him. He remembers and records their expressions of faith and love. In this world he communicates with his disciples from his mercy-seat, by answering their prayers, and counselling and comforting their hearts: and he will at the day of judgment, publish to the assembled universe, distinctly and particularly, the fruits of holiness, which by his grace they produced on earth: as evincing them to be the heirs of the "kingdom prepared for his people, from before the foundation of the world." (Notes, and P. O. Matt. 25:31—46.)

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 2—4. The shaft of the candlestick was all in one piece: but the seven lamps were formed separate, and might be taken off, or fixed upon it, as occasion required. (Note, Ex. 25:31—39.)—It is a tradition of the Jews, that the middle lamp was lighted from the altar of burnt-offering, and the other lamps from it, which being done, each lamp gave light to the part of the sanctuary "over against it."—Pattern. (4) Notes, Ex. 25:9, 40.

V. 6—8. The Levites were not distinguished from the other Israelites, by any prescribed garments; nor were they washed or anointed, after the manner in which the priests had been; but though they were set apart with less solemnity, to mark the inferiority of their office, and because they were not so expressly typical of Christ as the priests were; (Notes, Lev. 8:9;) yet there was equally a remembrance of sin, both in its guilt and defilement, and of the need of atonement and sanctification, in the separation of them to their office. Their clothes were washed; they were sprinkled with the water of purifying; (Notes, 19:) a sin-offering and a burnt-offering were sacrificed in their behalf; and they shaved all their flesh, according to the ceremony of the leper's purification. (Note, Lev. 14:8, 9.) This might denote "the laying apart all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness;" the mortification of natural depravity, and the renouncing of unnecessary worldly avocations and employments, that they might more entirely devote their time and attention to the services assigned them.

V. 9—11. The words translated "the whole assembly," often signify, the elders or principal persons in the several tribes; who, as the representatives of the whole congregation, laid their hands on the heads of the Levites; thus expressing their ready consent to the substitution of them in the stead of the first-born, and their surrender of them to the Lord for the purpose of serving at the sanctuary: and then Aaron, by some significant action, offered them as a wave-offering to the Lord. (11. marg.)

V. 19. When Aaron had offered the Levites as an offer

17 For ball the first-born of the children of Israel are mine, both man and beast: on the day that I smote every first-born in the land of Egypt, and sanctified them for myself.

18 And I have taken the Levites for all the first-born of the children of Israel.

19 And I have given the Levites as a gift to Aaron, and to his sons, from among the children of Israel; to do the service of the children of Israel in the tabernacle of the congregation, and to make an atonement for the children of Israel: that there be no plague among the children of Israel, when the children of Israel come nigh unto the sanctuary.

20 And Moses, and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Israel, did to the Levites according unto all that the Lord commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did the children of Israel unto them.

21 And the Levites were purified, and they washed their clothes; and Aaron offered them as an offering before the Lord; and Aaron made an atonement for them to cleanse them.

22 And after that went the Levites in, to do their service in the tabernacle of the congregation before Aaron, and before his sons: as the Lord had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they unto them.

23 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

24 This is it that belongeth unto the Levites; from twenty and five years old and upward they shall go in to wait upon the service of the tabernacle of the congregation:

ing unto the Lord, the Lord gave them back to Aaron, who might now with comfort make use of their assistance, "in, or at, the tabernacle;" that is, in the court; or "about the tabernacle," when it was removed. They likewise assisted in offering those sacrifices, by which atonement was made. This and the other services allotted them being duly performed, without any unallowed intrusion of the other tribes, would preserve the people from those terrible effects of the divine displeasure which they might otherwise apprehend.

V. 24. At the age of twenty-five the Levites began to attend upon the ordinary services of the tabernacle: but they were neither required, nor allowed, to assist in its removal, till they were thirty years old. Probably, at the age of twenty-five the Levites were, in after ages, solemnly admitted to their office, according to the prescribed order of this chapter.

V. 25, 26. The Levites, above fifty years of age, might superintend and assist their junior brethren in the ordinary offices; and give them and the people counsel and instruction; but they were exempted from carrying the tabernacle, and from other laborious services. (Note, 4:3.)—It is remarkable, that no law was made concerning the age at which the priests should begin to officiate; and though various blemishes disqualified them for the service of the sanctuary, yet they continued their ministrations till death, if capable. On the other hand, nothing is said concerning any bodily defects or blemishes disqualifying the Levites; but the time of their service is expressly settled. Their work was far more laborious than that of the priests; it is probable that, without necessity, the priests would not begin very early to officiate; and the wisdom and experience of age would increase, rather than diminish, their fitness for the sacred duties of their office.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Jesus Christ is the only Light of this dark world; in virtue of his atonement he diffuses, by his holy word and Holy Spirit, divine light around; and all that is called illumination, but is not derived from that source, is but the greater and more dangerous darkness. (Notes, Is. 8:20. Matt. 6:22, 23.)—Faithful and able ministers in searching the Scriptures, comparing one part with another, and with what they observe and experience; and imparting knowledge by preaching the gospel, and by various other methods, are, in their several places, "burning and shining lights," communicating the light received from Christ to those over against them, in their congregations and neighbourhoods; and private Christians do the same in their several connexions, when their knowledge and profession of the truth are accompanied with the ornament of a holy and exemplary conversation. In this way, one is enlightened from another, and truth and righteousness will be diffused ere long through all the nations of the earth.—But so polluted is every one born of Adam's fallen race, that

25 And from the age of fifty years they shall cease waiting upon the service thereof, and shall serve no more;

26 But shall minister with their brethren in the tabernacle of the congregation, to keep the charge, and shall do no service. Thus shalt thou do unto the Levites touching their charge.

The observance of the passover enforced, 1—5. The case of some who were unclean, 6—8. The passover to be observed in the second month by such as could not keep it in its season, 9—14. The cloud directs the removals and encampments of Israel, 15—23.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying,

2 Let the children of Israel also keep the passover at this appointed season.

3 In the fourteenth day of this month at even ye shall keep it in his appointed season: according to all the rites of it, and according to all the ceremonies thereof, shall ye keep it.

none can approach or serve God, except as an humble penitent he plead guilty, depend upon the Saviour's atoning blood, and be sanctified by his Holy Spirit. And if the heart be cleansed by divine grace, the outward conduct and conversation will be clean likewise.—The Lord himself hath provided and appointed the method and means of our cleansing, and giving us "exceeding great and precious promises" for our encouragement: but, "having these promises," we are exhorted to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God;" (Note, 2 Cor. 7:1.) and to lay aside and put off our sinful pursuits and indulgences, that we may glorify God "with our bodies and our spirits, which are his," as "bought with a price." Every real Christian is thus cleansed from sin, separated from the world, and presented to the Lord, "as a living sacrifice holy and acceptable to him;" but the ministers of Christ especially. When these are regularly appointed to the sacred office, with the approbation of their brethren and of the church of God; and when faithful and diligent in their work; so far from being considered as a useless part of the community, (as they are often profanely represented,) they may fairly be shown to be the most useful members of society, by their examples, labours, and prayers, in repressing sin which ruineth, and in promoting righteousness which exalteth any people; and in making known that great atonement by which the wrath of God is averted from our guilty souls, and from guilty nations. Let persons of another stamp, called ministers, plead for themselves as they can: but those who act up to this character should never be deserted by men, and will never be forsaken by the Lord, in their old age; they may still be useful by their counsel and influence; and "when the chief Shepherd shall appear, they shall receive a crown of glory which fadeth not away." (Notes, 1 Pet. 5:1—4.)

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1—5. This passage is dated before any other of the events recorded in this book; namely, in the first month of the second year, or the next year after Israel left Egypt. (1:1. Note, Ex. 40:2.)—It is generally thought, that the Passover was no more celebrated after this time, till the people arrived in Canaan. (Notes, Josh. 5:2—10.) The difficulty of procuring flour, during their frequent removals, might be one reason, that the observance was no more required in the desert; and this renewed command would make way for the more regular celebration of it in Canaan. This interruption however intimated, that these ordinances were only a shadow of good things to come, and not intended for perpetuity in the church. (Notes, and P. O. Ex. 12.)

V. 6—8. The laws respecting ceremonial defilement had not at this time been explicitly given; yet several intimations had been made, which created scruples in the consciences of these persons, who probably had been under the necessity of kept back, *th*a "we may not offer an offering of the Lord in his appointed season among the children of Israel?"

8 And Moses said unto them, "Stand still, and I will hear what the Lord will command concerning you."

9 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

10 Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If any man of you, or of your posterity, shall be unclean by reason of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he shall keep the passover unto the Lord.

11 The "fourteenth day of the second month at even they shall keep it, and eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs."

12 They shall leave none of it unto the morning, nor break any bone of it: according to all the ordinances of the passover they shall keep it.

13 But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to keep the passover, even the same soul shall be cut off from among his people; because he brought not the offering of the Lord in his appointed season, that man shall bear his sin.

14 And if a stranger shall sojourn among you, and will keep the passover unto the Lord; according to the ordinance of the passover, and according to the manner thereof, so shall he do: ye shall have one ordinance, both for the stranger, and for him that was born in the land.

15 ¶ And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up, the cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the testimony: and at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire until the morning.

attending the funeral of some relation. They counted it their duty and privilege to eat the passover, but feared to eat it with their uncleanness upon them; they therefore desired to know what they ought to do, and very properly referred the case to the decision of Moses, who applied for direction to the Lord. This seems to have occurred at the time, when the rest of the congregation were about to celebrate the passover.—The passover is here called "the offering of the Lord," being a solemn sacrifice, though no part of it was burnt on the altar.

V. 10-14. The appointment of a passover in the second month, for those who were defiled at the regular season, implied a prohibition of its being eaten by any person ceremonially unclean. It must be supposed, that they who were at a great distance on a journey, had a good reason for being from home at that season, and could not reach the place of the tabernacle in due time. The feast of unleavened bread might be observed at a distance from the sanctuary, and even by the ceremonially unclean: it is therefore thought by many, that it was not kept after the passover in the second month: yet Hezekiah, when he celebrated the passover in the second month, observed the feast of unleavened bread, and that during fourteen days. (Notes, 2 Chr. 30:2-4, 21-25.) Women and children, and such as were not required to go up to the sanctuary at the three great feasts, were not particularly concerned in the law; at least not in the annexed denunciation against such as wilfully neglected the passover, and who might expect to be visited by some divine judgment.—They, who were unclean or at a distance in the second month, were not allowed to keep the passover in any subsequent month.—Strangers, renouncing idolatry, might live among the Israelites: but if they desire to keep the passover, they and the males of their households must be circumcised; and in all things they must conform to the law concerning it; and then they would be, in that respect, partakers of the privileges enjoyed by those who were Israelites by birth. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. 12:48, 49.)

V. 15. "The tent of the testimony" was the west end of the tabernacle over the most holy place, where the ark of the covenant with the tables of the law was placed, which testified Israel to be the Lord's people, and him to be their God. (Notes, Ex. 25:10-22.)

V. 16-23. (Notes, Ex. 13:21, 22, 40:36-38.) The moving or abiding of the cloud, as the signal of Israel's marching, or continuing in their encampments, would doubtless often try the patience of the people, and be very inconvenient to them: yet we do not find, amidst all their rebellions, that they ventured to act in direct opposition to these intimations of the divine will, except in one instance. (14:40-45.)—Onkelos, an old Jewish commentator, in many places para-

16 So it was "always: the cloud covered it by day, and the appearance of fire by night."

17 And "when the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, then after that the children of Israel journeyed: and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Israel pitched their tents."

18 At the commandment of the Lord the children of Israel journeyed: and at the commandment of the Lord they pitched: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle they rested in their tents.

19 And when the cloud tarried long upon the tabernacle many days, then the children of Israel kept the charge of the Lord, and journeyed not.

20 And so it was when the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle: according to the commandment of the Lord they abode in their tents, and according to the commandment of the Lord they journeyed.

21 And so it was when the cloud tabode from even unto the morning, and that the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they journeyed: whether it was by day or by night that the cloud was taken up, they journeyed.

22 Or whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, remaining thereon, the children of Israel abode in their tents, and journeyed not: but when it was taken up they journeyed.

23 At the commandment of the Lord they rested in their tents, and at the commandment of the Lord they journeyed: they kept the charge of the Lord, at the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

phrases the words rendered, "at the commandment of the Lord," at the mouth of the Word of the Lord. This shows that the ancient Jews had some knowledge of the doctrine with which the apostle John sublimely opens his gospel.—The case of two or three millions of people, shut up in a dreary wilderness, for almost forty years, without ever seeing house, or garden, or corn-field; and that as completely as if the highest walls, garrisoned by the most valiant troops, had surrounded them; when compared with their rebellions in other things, and their submission in this respect, most strikingly shows, that they were convinced beyond the possibility of doubt, that resistance must be unavailing; yet nothing short of having witnessed the miracles recorded in these books, could have induced this strong conviction.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are so immersed in the things of time and sense, that the most pure minds have need to be repeatedly "stirred up, by way of remembrance," to such duties as they have before been instructed in. (Notes, 2 Pet. 1:12-15, 3:1-4.)—Alas! in what a sad dilemma are multitudes of professed Christians! They are habitually unclean, through indulged lusts and unrepented sins, and cannot approach the Lord's table without a presumptuous profanation: yet in staying away they neglect "their bounden duty and service;" and virtually confess that they have no part in Christ, but are liable to bear the heavy load of their own iniquity, and to be cut off by the righteous judgment of God; not so much for disregarding this outward sign, as for neglecting the great salvation itself. When, however, this becomes their burden, and they sincerely inquire what they must do, considering the ordinances of God as their duty and privilege, and every impediment as their affliction; their case then becomes hopeful. For they are directed to the "Fountain open for sin and for uncleanness;" and having been "washed and sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God," they may approach with comfort to partake of that sacred feast. But men should reflect, that if they are not prepared for the Lord's table, they are not fit for death and judgment; and that it is very ungrateful for Christians to neglect the command of him who loved us, and gave himself for our sins, and as with his dying lips, said to his disciples, "Do this in remembrance of me." Under difficulties and distress of conscience it is proper to consult pious and faithful ministers, and plainly to state the case unto them. And it becomes them to be accessible to such inquirers; and not only to offer them the best counsel they can, but in doubtful cases to take time for deliberation, and consulting the word of God, and prayer, in order to give them a satisfactory solution: and as the Lord makes a difference between occasional defilements and presumptuous disobedience, they should do the same. (Note, 2 Chr. 30:16)

CHAPTER X.

Directions for making and using the silver trumpets, 1-10. The Israelites journey from Sinai to Paran, 11-13; and he or her in which they marched, 14-28. Moses enters Holab to continue with them, 29-32. His prayer at the resting, and the resting of the ark, 33-36.

AND THE LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Make thee two trumpets of silver; of a whole piece shalt thou make them, that thou mayest use them for the calling of the assembly, and for the journeying of the camps.

3 And when they shall blow with them, all the assembly shall assemble themselves to thee, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

4 And if they blow but with one trumpet, then the princes, which are heads of the thousands of Israel, shall gather themselves unto thee.

5 When ye blow an alarm, then the camps that lie on the east parts shall go forward.

6 When ye blow an alarm the second time, then the camps that lie on the south side shall take their journey: they shall blow an alarm for their journeys.

7 But when the congregation is to be gathered together, ye shall blow, but ye shall not sound an alarm.

8 And the sons of Aaron the priests shall blow with the trumpets: and they shall be to you for an ordinance for ever throughout your generations.

9 And if ye go to war in your land against the enemy that oppresseth you, then ye shall blow an alarm with the trumpets: and ye shall be remembered before the Lord your God, and ye shall be saved from your enemies.

10 Also in the day of your gladness, and in your solemn days, and in the beginnings of your months, ye shall blow with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace-offerings; that they may be to you for a memorial before your God: I am the Lord your God.

—20.)—We may often, without our own fault, be deprived of the opportunity of attending on divine ordinances; but in that case we shall not lose the blessing: and when thus kept away at one time, we should be doubly careful to improve the next opportunity.—Blessed be God, that we strangers of the Gentiles are admitted to participate in the blessings of "Christ our Passover, who was sacrificed for us;" but let us be careful to celebrate the sacred feast after the prescribed manner; as true penitents and spiritual pilgrims, with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. (Note, 1 Cor. 5:6-8.)—Though we are not under the miraculous direction of the cloud; yet the providence of God appoints the bounds of our habitation, and his word is the perfect and sufficient rule of our conduct. Wherever our lot is cast, let us study contentment. Whenever called upon to remove, let us be careful that we act according to the commandment of our God, and in dependence on his promises, in the patience of hope, and quietly waiting for his salvation: and when we pass through temptation and tribulation, or the gloomy vale of death, if his presence go with us, we must be safe and shall be happy. Let us beg of him, therefore, to choose for us our places of abode in this world, our time of removal out of it, and our everlasting inheritance; for he never chose to the final disadvantage of those, who were enabled to refer all their concerns to his direction.

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 2-10. These silver trumpets were evidently intended to typify the preaching of the gospel. (Notes, Lev. 23:24, 25. Ps. 89:15-18. Is. 27:12, 13.) The priests alone were allowed to blow them; and as there were at that time but two priests, the sons of Aaron the high-priest, only two trumpets were made: but we read afterwards "of one hundred and twenty priests sounding with trumpets." (2 Chr. 5:12.) In allusion to the uses assigned to them, in this place, and in others referred to in the margin, and which do not seem to require explanation; (Marg. Ref. e-p:) we may observe that the gospel sounds the alarm to sinners; calls them to repentance; proclaims liberty to captives and slaves; collects the spiritual worshippers of God, in all ages and nations, to keep their solemn feasts of godly sorrow, and feasts of holy joy; summons them to become of the second month, in the second year, that the cloud was taken up from off the tabernacle of the testimony.

12 And the children of Israel took their journeys out of the wilderness of Sinai; and the cloud rested in the wilderness of Paran.

13 And they first took their journey, according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

14 ¶ In the first place went the standard of the camp of the children of Judah, according to their armies: and over his hosts was Nahshon the son of Amminadab.

15 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Issachar, was Nethaneel the son of Zuar.

16 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Zebulun, was Eliab the son of Helon.

17 And the tabernacle was taken down: and the sons of Gershon and the sons of Merari set forward, bearing the tabernacle.

18 ¶ And the standard of the camp of Reuben set forward, according to their armies: and over his hosts was Elizur the son of Shedeur.

19 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Simeon, was Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai.

20 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Gad, was Eliasaph the son of Deuel.

21 And the Kohathites set forward, bearing the sanctuary; and the other did set up the tabernacle against they came.

22 ¶ And the standard of the camp of the children of Ephraim set forward, according to their armies: and over his host was Elishama the son of Ammihud.

23 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Manasseh, was Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur.

24 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, was Abidan the son of Gideon.

25 ¶ And the standard of the camp of the children of Dan set forward, which was the rearward of all the camps throughout their hosts: and strangers and pilgrims upon earth; directs and encourages their heavenly journey; excites them to combat against Satan, the world, and sin; animates them with the assurance of victory; calls their attention to the sacrifice of Christ; explains it, and tends suitably to affect them with it; and is a constant memorial of the Lord's gracious presence with them, for their encouragement and protection, and for a terror and dismay to all their enemies. (2 Chr. 13:12.)—The distinct ways of sounding the trumpets were doubtless well understood both by priests and people: and this might imply, that the word of God should be rendered as plain as possible to every description of those who hear it. (Note, 1 Cor. 14:8-12.)

V. 11-13. After the Israelites had continued nearly a year at mount Sinai, (Ex. 19:1.) to settle every thing respecting their future worship, they began their march to Canaan; whither they might speedily have arrived, had they not renewed their rebellions. This may typically teach us, that though true religion begins with the knowledge of the holy law, and humiliation for sin; yet we should also press forward, and "go on towards perfection," in an acquaintance with Christ and his gospel, and those effectual encouragements, motives, and assistances to holiness, which it proposes.—Previously to the removal of the cloud, the people seem to have had an express command to set out on their journey. (Note, Deut. 1:6-8.) In consequence of this we may suppose, that they had got all ready for their march, when the removing of the cloud gave the signal for their actually setting off; and that, in general, they had time allowed for these purposes.

V. 21. The Gershonites and Merarites, who marched before the Kohathites for that purpose, (1 Chr. 15:20) set up the tabernacle, to receive the sacred things when the Kohathites arrived with them.

V. 25. This division not only brought up the rear of Israel, but also gathered under it such as were left behind through weariness, and the mixed multitude which followed them, and those who, being unclean, were excluded from the camp.

V. 29. It is most probable, that Jethro was the same person as Reuel, or Raguel; and that Hobab was his son, and Moses's brother-in-law, who had remained with Moses and over his host was ^aAhiezzer the son of Ammishadai.

26 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Asher, was ^aPagiel the son of Ocran.

27 And over the host of the tribe of the children of Naphtali, was ^aAhira the son of Enan.

28 ^aThus were the journeyings of the children of Israel, according to their armies, when they set forward.

29 ¶ And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of ^aRaguel the Midianite, Moses's father-in-law, We are journeying unto the place of which ^athe Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good; for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel.

30 And he said unto him, I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred.

31 And he said, Leave us not, I pray thee: forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes.

32 And it shall be, if thou go with us, yea, it shall be, that ^awhat goodness the Lord shall do unto us, the same will we do unto thee.

33 ¶ And they departed from ^athe mount of the Lord three days' journey: and ^athe ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them in the three days' journey, to search out ^aa resting-place for them.

34 And ^bthe cloud of the Lord was upon them by day, when they went out of the camp.

35 And it came to pass, when the ark set forward, that Moses said, Rise up, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered; and let them that hate thee flee before thee.

36 And when it rested, he said, Return, O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel.

CHAPTER XI.

The people complain, and the fire of the Lord burns among them, but is quenched through Moses's prayer, 1-3; the place is called Taberah, 3. They grow weary of manna, and lust for flesh, 4-9. Moses complains, 10-15. God promises to give him seventy assistants; and pleads to the people for a month, 16-29. Moses's faith is staggered, 21-23. God gives of his Spirit to seventy elders, 24, 25. Two prophecies in the camp: Joshua would forbid them; but Moses reproves him, 26-30. The quails are sent in vast abundance, but in wrath, 31-35.

AND ^awhen the people complained, it displeased the Lord: and the Lord heard it; and his anger was kindled: and ^bthe fire of the Lord burnt among them, and consumed them that were in the uttermost parts of the camp.

2 And the people ^dcried unto Moses; and when Israel when his father departed from them; or had come to them afterwards.

V. 31, 32. Though the people were under the immediate direction of God in their march; yet, in respect of the conveniences or inconveniences of the places through which they passed, they might receive profitable cautions and instructions from a person acquainted with the desert.—Some however translate the words rendered "thou mayest be unto us instead of eyes," in the past tense, and interpret it as a thankful acknowledgment of the advantages which Israel had derived from Hobab's counsel and direction; for which they could make him no amends, except he would go with them, and share the kindness which the Lord had in reserve for them in the promised land, whither they reasonably expected soon to arrive. But others interpret the words to signify, that (like his father Jethro) he might be very useful to Moses by his advice, and should be admitted among his select counsellors, if he would continue in the camp. We may suppose, that Hobab was withdrawn from his first purpose, and accompanied them. We shall hereafter read of his posterity: and it is probable, that an inheritance was assigned them in Canaan. The whole passage implies that Hobab, like his father, was a wise and pious man, a devoted worshipper of the God of Israel; and that, on the supposition that he "returned to his kindred," (30) he did not return to idolatry. (Notes, Ruth 1:11-17.)

V. 33, 34. It is doubtful, whether on this occasion the ark was carried separately before the camp, or with the other sacred things in the midst of it. The cloud, however, (which above was diffused as a canopy over the heads of the people in the day, and afforded light to them by night,) rested beneath upon the ark in such a manner, that in directing their march, the ark on which it rested might very properly be said to go before them, to single out the particular spot on which they were to halt for refreshment; and after three days, the spot on which they were to encamp.

V. 35, 36. Moses, as the leader, though Aaron was the high-priest, solemnly addressed the Lord in this emphatical prayer, the former part of which David used, probably on a similar occasion. (Note, Ps. 68:1-3.) The expression, "the many thousands of Israel," is in the original, the ten thousand thousands of Israel, among whom Moses thus besought the Lord again to manifest his presence, and to take up his residence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The trumpet of the gospel, being God's appointed ordinance, demands the serious attention of all to whom it is sent. Let our character, situation, trials, or duty, be what they may, this trumpet, when skillfully used by the ministers of Christ, will give such a distinct sound, as at one time or another exactly to suit our case; and to afford us that warning, direction, encouragement, or exhortation, of which we stand in need: and in this manner we should expect to be counselled and comforted by the Lord. But they who sound this trumpet ought to be very skilful, faithful, and affectionate, and observant both of the word of God, of their own hearts, and of the situations of the people; lest they give false alarms, or neglect to give the alarm when necessary; lest by an uncertain sound they encourage such as need reproof, or discourage the hearts of such as should be comforted; or in any other way defeat those ends for which the preaching of the word is intended.—"Blessed is the people who know the joyful sound," and clearly understand its meaning, whether it call them to watch and pray, to weep or rejoice, to attack their enemies or to resist their assaults, to march forward with alacrity, or to endure the labours of the way with patient perseverance; and who so understand its sound, as to pay it that prompt obedience, which the disciplined soldier pays to the sound of the trumpet. Such persons will never be left destitute of encouragement, instruction, or counsel, through the whole of their journey. Though they "have here no continuing city," but are always removing from one wilderness to another: yet, by hearkening to the word of God, they will follow the ark in all their removals, and be taught habitually to depend on the promises and perfections of God and the mediation of his Son, to obey his commands, and imitate his example, in their proper place and station; and ever to abide under the care of his providence, enjoy the comforts of his Spirit, and have fellowship with him in his ordinances.

V. 11-36. The Lord himself goes before his believing people, to find them out resting-places from time to time by the way: he will give them rest to their souls on earth, until he bring them to his heavenly felicity; he will arise to scatter his and their enemies, and "all that hate him shall flee before him;" and he will abide with every individual, and with all the thousands and millions of Israel, "always even unto the end of the world;" for he has promised, that he will "never leave them nor forsake them," and this is the substance of all their prayers and desires.—While we are thus journeying to the place of which the Lord hath spoken to us, and hath engaged to give us; we should endeavour, by our general good behaviour and tranquil cheerfulness, by special acts of kindness, and by pressing exhortations and persuasions, to induce our relatives, friends, and neighbours to attend us: aiming to convince them, that the Lord is with us, that he hath spoken good concerning us; that he hath good in reserve for us, and that it is for their true advantage to accompany us; frankly proposing to them a participation in all our privileges and comforts, and assuring them of all the kindness which God shall enable us to do unto them. (Note, 1 John 1:3, 4.) By persevering attempts of this kind, and by fervent prayers, we may frequently overcome the reluctance of those, who at first were disposed to renounce the pleasures of sin, or the interests of the world, or who were loth to encounter the hardships of the journey, or who valued not the promised inheritance.—Though in every thing our dependence must be ultimately placed upon the Lord, yet we may use the services of men as instruments of good to us, and should in our turn aim to do them good; and thus we may be as eyes and ears and hands to each other, for our mutual comfort, and to the glory of our common Lord. We should also be careful, that we begin every undertaking, especially those in which the church of God is concerned, with earnest prayer for direction, assistance, and success: and not only ministers, but magistrates and princes also, should be men of prayer, as well as of activity, integrity, and ability; for whatever talents and instruments are employed, the Lord alone sends prosperity. Finally, in all our supplications at the throne of grace, the many thousands of Israel should without fail be remembered by us.

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 1-3. "The people were as

4 ¶ And ^{the} mixed multitude that ^{was} among them ^{tell} a lusting; and ^{the} children of Israel also ^{swept} again, and said, ^{'Who} shall give us flesh to eat?

9 And when ^{the} dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it.

10 ¶ Then Moses heard the people ^{'weep} throughout their families, every man in the door of his tent: and the anger of the LORD was kindled greatly; ^{'Moses} also was displeased.

it were complainers;” (margin.) that is, they murmured against Moses, and against the Lord.—When we consider the wonderful works wrought for Israel before their eyes; the excellent laws which they had received; the mild government under which they lived; the manner in which their camp was victualled, watered, guarded, and guided; and the tokens which they enjoyed of the Lord’s special presence and favour; we are apt to inquire, what grounds of complaint they could have. But some would be dissatisfied, that they and their friends were excluded from the government, and from the priesthood; some would murmur at being kept so long in the wilderness; others would be weary with marching three days together without resting, except merely to take present refreshment; and various occasions of discontent would be found among so large a multitude. Since the sin committed in respect of the golden calf, the people had appeared obedient and tractable, and the rulers liberal and cheerful in affording assistance; but their evil dispositions, though overawed, were not slain: they therefore speedily revived, and produced more fatal effects than ever. The Lord being thus provoked, made them sensible of the power of his fiery indignation. Probably, some of them were destroyed, as Nadab and Abihu had been, by fire from the Lord, or by flashes of lightning, perhaps from the fiery pillar. Though they had several times before murmured, they had not been thus punished; for, not having known so much of the Lord’s will, nor seen so much of his glory, nor experienced so much of his kindness, they were before more excusable than at this time.—Yet even now the fire seems only to have consumed some of those, who resorted to the uttermost parts of the camp, to associate with the mixed multitude: (4) and when Moses, at the request of the people, prayed, it was at once quenched.—The place, however, acquired a new name from this fire that consumed the criminals.—Taberah.] A burning. (margin.)

V. 4-9. This lusting for other food than manna began among the mixed multitude; but it seems to have rapidly spread among the Israelites, and to have anew excited their impatient lamentations and murmurings. They were not, on this occasion, merely guilty of discontent, and an inordinate desire of flesh to eat; but they limited the power of God, as if it were impossible for him to give them it in their present circumstances. The subsequent particulars are mentioned concerning the manna, in order to illustrate the goodness of the Lord to Israel, in giving them, without trouble or expense, so suitable, nourishing, and palatable a food; and which afforded them variety also, by the different ways in which it might be prepared. (Notes, Ex. 16:22-27, 31.) Thus the ingratitude and unreasonableness of the people in their lusting were strongly marked.—It is nowhere intimated that they were sickly or feeble, in consequence of feeding continually upon manna; though the greediness of their appetite for other food drank up their spirits, and caused “their soul to dry away.”—It would not indeed have been proper for them to have slain all their numerous flocks and herds, nor would the whole have satisfied their lustings; yet, had they not been too covetous, or too desirous of dainty meats, they might from time to time have feasted upon flesh, by presenting peace-offerings to the Lord. But to their dissatisfied mind every thing appeared worthless, in comparison of the Egyptian diet, which they speak of particularly, and with great regret; though probably it was nothing better than the most ordinary food of the very poorest of the people! (Note, Ex. 16:1-3.)

V. 10. The former complaining seems to have been only a secret discontent; but this broke out into an open and general dissatisfaction, and portended a revolt. It was therefore extremely provoking to God; “it was evil also in the eyes of Moses.” (Heb.)

V. 11-15. Moses had indeed a very difficult and burdensome service; and the expressive similitude which he used would be better understood by the Israelites, than it is by us; being taken from the circumstance of the fathers carrying the young children, during their long marches in the wilderness, for which the mothers were generally unable. (Margin. Ref. y, z.) He cannot however be excused in imitating the people, by murmuring against the Lord; in complaining of the honours and favours bestowed upon him; in expostulating with God as if he dealt unkindly and unjustly with him; in magnifying his own services, and speaking as if he were required to supply the people with flesh; and above all, in begging for immediate death, as his only possible relief, and as the greatest instance of favour which the Lord could show him. (Margin. Ref. d. Note, Jer. 20:14-18.)

V. 16. Whom thou knowest, &c.] Moses had said, that “he was not able to bear all the people alone.” (11) the Lord therefore graciously condescended to assign him helpers, whom he might choose for himself, out of such persons as he knew to be elders, not only in respect of years, but in wisdom and ability; and in the influence and authority, which they possessed in their several tribes and divisions. It is most probable, that in consequence of Jethro’s advice, (Notes, Ex. 18:17-26.) Moses before this had assistants in the administration of justice, and in the affairs of civil government; but it had been reserved to him “to be for the people to Godward.” In this department the Lord, on this occasion, appointed him coadjutors, endued with special wisdom and grace for that service; whose assistance, counsel, and authority he might use, in allaying the tumults, quieting the minds, or opposing the violence of the people. The Sanhedrim, or council of seventy persons, in the after-ages of the Jewish nation, seems to have been a continuance, or imitation, of this council assigned to Moses. The number is supposed to have been taken from the number of persons who went down into Egypt. (Margin. Ref. f.)

V. 17. Moses would not on this account have less of the influences of the Spirit of truth, wisdom, boldness, power, and holiness; but the elders would be endued with a measure of the same Spirit, that they might be enabled and disposed cordially to concur with him in salutary measures, for the people’s good: as lamps are lighted one from another without any diminution of the light of the lamps from which they are lighted. (Notes, 25. 2 Kings 2:9, 10. Is. 59, 40, 21.)

V. 18. The people were about to witness an extra-ordinary thee, and will put it upon them: and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone. [Practical Observations.]

18 And say thou unto the people, "Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh: for ye have wept in the ears of the Lord, saying, Who shall give us flesh to eat? for it was well with us in Egypt: therefore the Lord will give you flesh, and ye shall eat."

19 Ye shall not eat one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, nor twenty days;

20 But even a whole month, until it come out at your nostrils, and it be loathsome unto you: because that ye have despised the Lord which is among you, and have wept before him, saying, Why came we forth out of Egypt?

21 And Moses said, the people among whom I am, are six hundred thousand footmen; and thou hast said, I will give them flesh, that they may eat a whole month.

22 Shall the flocks and the herds be slain for them to suffice them? or shall all the fish of the sea be gathered together for them to suffice them?

23 And the Lord said unto Moses, "Is the Lord's hand waxed short? thou shalt see now whether my word shall come to pass unto thee, or not."

24 ¶ And Moses went out, and told the people the words of the Lord, and gathered the seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them round about the tabernacle.

25 And the Lord came down in a cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the Spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass that, when the Spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, and did not cease.

26 But there remained two of the men in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad: and the Spirit rested upon them, (and they were of them that were written, but went not out unto the tabernacle,) and they prophesied in the camp.

27 And there ran a young man, and told Moses and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp.

28 And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of Moses, one of his young men, answered, and said, "My lord Moses, forbid them."

29 And Moses said unto him, "Enviest thou for my sake? Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them."

30 And Moses gat him into the camp, he and the elders of Israel.

31 ¶ And there went forth a wind from the Lord, and brought quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp, as it were a day's journey on this side, and as it were a day's journey on the other side, round about the camp, and as it were two cubits high upon the face of the earth.

32 And the people stood up all that day, and all that night, and all the next day, and they gathered the quails: he that gathered least gathered ten homers; and they spread them all abroad for themselves round about the camp.

33 And while the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the people; and the Lord smote the people with a very great plague.

34 And he called the name of that place Kibroth-hattaavah: because there they buried the people that lusted, 35 And the people journeyed from Kibroth-hattaavah unto Hazeroth; and abode at Hazeroth.

nary manifestation of the divine power, in sending them flesh to eat; but as they had greatly displeased the Lord, by lusting for it, with bitter complaints against him and contempt of him, they might expect likewise a display of his righteous indignation; except they humbled themselves, sought forgiveness, and were found in a better frame of spirit; and thus unlaboured to avert the impending storm.

V. 19, 20. About a year before this, the people had for one day been thus feasted: (Ex. 16:13.) but now such plenty was about to be afforded them, for a whole month, and they would use it so greedily, that at last they would entirely loathe the food, which they had so inordinately craved.

V. 21-23. Some suppose that Moses only expressed his admiration; or inquired into the method how this wonderful provision was to be furnished. (Note, Luke 1:34-38.) But the Lord's answer implies that there was also a measure of unbelief; which was the more criminal, after he had seen such effects of the divine power in Egypt and at the Red Sea: nor could he suppose that the Lord's hand was shortened. Moses seems however to have been fully satisfied with the further assurance given him, without any other information.

V. 25. The persons selected on this occasion, being endued with the Holy Spirit, either praised God with such fervency and in such exalted strains; or they spake in so fluent and edifying a manner, in exhorting the people, and were so raised above themselves in wisdom and utterance, that all around them were sensible they spake by a divine influence: perhaps they likewise foretold future events. (Marg. Ref. a.) These gifts were a divine sanction to their appointment, as assistants to Moses in governing the nation.—The words (עָבְדוּ) rendered "did not cease," may be translated aided no further. They prophesied on that occasion, but not afterwards; for they were designed to be magistrates, not prophets; or they prophesied only when "the Spirit rested upon them." It is evident that the Lord continued to them the Spirit of wisdom and knowledge, to fit them for the office, to which he thus sealed their commission by the gift of prophecy. (Note, 17.)

V. 26. Some suppose, that these two persons were ceremonially unclean; but others think that they humbly declined so arduous an office, or were reluctant to engage in it, and therefore did not go forth to Moses at the tabernacle. The Spirit of God however, singled them out in the camp, and there they prophesied.

V. 28, 29. Joshua would have had Eldad and Medad silenced, lest they should occasion a schism, or rival Moses; but Moses was not in the least afraid of such effects from that Spirit which God had put upon him and them; and he did not in the least seek his own glory, but the glory of God, and the advantage of his people. (Note, Mark 9:38-40, John 3:25, 26.)—The gift of prophecy was a distinct thing from the gift of government; for he did not wish they might all be made rulers; than which nothing could have been more absurd. Bp. Patrick.

V. 31, 32. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. 16:13.) By a most astonishing miracle, an immense multitude of quails (some kind of wild fowl) was collected, and driven on with a vehement wind, till wearied out with their flight, they settled round the camp of Israel; and for about twenty miles on every side they lay above a yard deep on the ground, incapable of flying away; so that the Israelites in general spent thirty-six hours in taking them, without much intermission. And afterwards what they did not eat at this time, they dried, by spreading them round the camp, so that they were able to keep them during the remainder of the month.—A homer was an ass's load, or almost eight bushels. Ten homers was an immense quantity for every individual, or even for every head of a family; but the whole was evidently intended to illustrate the power of God, and the eagerness with which the people seized upon this provision.

V. 33, 34. The sin of the people did not consist in desiring suitable food, or in eating such as the Lord sent them; but in eagerly craving unnecessary indulgence, and intemperately gratifying their appetites. The Lord therefore, having shown his power by sending this immense supply, punished their discontent, ingratitude, and lusting, and by a pestilence executed immediate vengeance on the ringleaders of the rebellion. (Ps. 78:26-31.)—What multitudes are there in all places, who shorten their lives by excess of one kind or other; and whose sepulchres might justly be called, "Kibroth-hattaavah, because there they buried the people that lusted!"

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-17. Fallen man is a discontented creature; for having forsaken his proper rest, he feels himself uneasy and wretched how much soever he is prospered or distinguished. Ambition, sensuality, covetousness, and malice, are diseases of the soul, which are not abated, but increased by indulgence.

and they who are under the power of them, like persons in a fever, are continually desirous of changing their place or posture; as if that were the cause of the disquietude, which indeed springs merely from distemper! While this is the case, every appointment of God must excite secret or open complaint: and though discontent has its abatements and paroxysms; yet there is no cure till the soul return to its rest, in the knowledge, love, and favour of God, and in a cordial reliance on his wisdom, truth, and power, and in acquiescence in his will. But the Lord sees and hears, and is displeased at our murmurs, though concealed from men: the greater kindness we have received from him, the severer correction we may expect when we thus offend: and they who escape his chastening rod, will at length experience the dreadful effects of his fiery indignation.—It should be well considered, that sinners are far more indebted to their pious friends than they are aware of; and many will cry to them to advise them and pray for them in their distresses and dangers, who despised and hated them before: nor should they ever on any account refuse such requests. But it is especially happy for us, that Jesus ever liveth to make intercession for us; when in our troubles we cry unto him to help us, and to quench the fire of divine wrath which our sins have kindled. Yet alas! how soon do we forget the smart and terror of our chastisements, and relapse into our former offences with still deeper aggravation! nay, when we are surrounded with mercies, we are capable of overlooking them all, and of deeming one slight inconvenience an intolerable grievance! On the other hand, forgetting the anguish under which we have groaned in some former situation, from which we are now delivered, (Ex. 1:14. 2:23, 24. 3:7-9.) we can murmur and fret at the absence of one imaginary or worthless advantage, which we then possessed: and scarcely any of our repinings arise from the want of what is really needful and proper for us; but relate to such things, as are in one way or other, fuel to our lusts. Nay, the choicest blessing which God can bestow, even the very gospel of salvation, is slighted and despised by us, if we have not every thing exactly to our mind, when we are under the influence of this evil disease! We can readily blame and express our astonishment at the perverseness of the Israelites: but their conduct is only a picture of our hearts, a fair specimen of human nature; and we have every one of us murmured and complained before now, with as little reason, and with as much folly and ingratitude, as they did. Let us then watch our own hearts: let us repress the first emotions of discontent and inordinate desire; let us consider frequently how many unmerited mercies we worthless sinners enjoy: let us pray earnestly for grace, “to be satisfied with such things as we have”; and to refer to the wisdom, love and faithfulness of God, the choice of what kind our temporal supplies shall be, with the measure of them, and the time and manner of receiving them. This is the more requisite, because we are constantly reminded, that the most eminent saints were sometimes evidently defective, in the very graces by which they were most distinguished: so that Moses himself expressed a distrust, an impatience, and a peevishness, which cannot be excused, and must not be imitated. We have therefore nothing to trust in but the mercy of God and the merits of Christ; and we are taught to watch and pray continually lest we enter into temptation.—It is also worth noting, that we seldom wish for death, but when we are fretful and impatient, and consequently unfit to meet it comfortably and properly.—As eminent stations are confessedly attended with weighty cares and burdens, to all those especially who study to fill them in such a manner as to be nursing-fathers to the people; (and they who do not must have an awful account to render of their abused talents;) we may learn to be contented with a more obscure situation, and cheerfully to bear our lighter afflictions.—But the Lord is very gracious to his servants; he considers their trials and weakness; and both forgives their sins, sends them help in difficulties, affords them comfort in communion with him, and exceeds their largest expectations. He can also easily multiply either good magistrates or ministers, or improve the qualifications of those already raised up, by “the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ.” and this should excite us to pray earnestly to him for these important blessings.

V. 18-35. In general, the Lord sees it best for those whom he loves, to be poor, to fare hardly, and to receive their supply from day to day. And whatever the world may think, an inheritance in heaven, and a provision by the way, though mean and scanty, if sought by daily prayer, and received with gratitude from our heavenly Father's love, is “better than the riches of many wicked,” and has in it more sweetness, and less vexation and temptation. (Note, Ps. 37:16, 17.) But if he sometimes surrounds his people with plenty, it is not for an occasion of excess, but for a trial of their temperance and moderation, and that they may have a sufficiency for every good work: and to abuse abundance shows a sensual mind, and will expose a man to the heavy wrath of God. (Notes, Luke 16:19-26.) Against such luxury and excess every true Christian should, by his example at least, enter a protest: but alas! too many are more apt to catch the infection of lustful and self-indulgence from the world, or from the more worthless kind of professed believers, than to manifest a decided disapprobation of it: and numbers who would be thought Christians, though surrounded with far greater variety than the Israelites were, are ready to complain, that they are outdone in wealth, splendour, and the pride of life, by their neighbours: and perhaps at some times are ready even to grow weary of their religion; to think that it was well with them in Egypt; to allow a hankering after forsaken pleasures, almost to covet their former bondage, and to inquire why they came forth thence. If we are conscious that this hath been the secret thought of our heart, let us repent without delay, and entreat God that it may be forgiven; lest he send us the things which we have inordinately desired, and by his heavy indignation render them a curse to us. For it is not from want of power or love, that he doth not at all times indulge the desires of his people; but because his wisdom sees that those things, which they desire as a blessing, would be injurious to them; and if they do not acquiesce in his appointments, he will perhaps be induced to convince them by bitter experience.—Even while the Lord is evidently giving helpers to his faithful servants, by answering our prayers for the pouring out of his Spirit from on high; “the spirit, which naturally” “is in us, lusteth to envy,” in behalf of our friends and our party, or ourselves; and disposes us to wish to silence those who follow not with us. Yet the Lord gives more grace, and they who are wisely zealous for his glory, and truly love the souls of men, will rejoice in the increase of useful instruments, though they should rival and eclipse them, or their beloved and revered pastors. Indeed, if all the present number of the Lord's people were rendered real, able, authorized ministers of Christ, the world is wide enough; and there might be work enough for them, in calling sinners to “repentance towards God and faith towards the Lord Jesus,” and in feeding and edifying his church.

NOTES.—CHAP. XII. V. 1, 2. Moses had at this time been so long married to Zipporah, that there is some difficulty in understanding, how his conduct in that respect should at length give occasion to Miriam and Aaron to oppose him: yet there is no intimation that Zipporah was dead or divorced, or that he had married another woman; and it is utterly incredible, that after the giving of so great a part of the law, he should himself take to wife a stranger, or one of another nation; or that the Lord should unreservedly sanction what he had done. (Ex. 34:16.) No intimation is any where given, that Moses ever had any other wife than Zipporah; or that he acted at all improperly in this respect. The word rendered “an Ethiopian woman,” signifies a Cushite, which properly means a descendant of Cush; (Gen. 10:6-8.) but it is used with some latitude; and it is generally supposed to include other tribes, besides the posterity of Cush, either in Asia, or Africa. It is probable, that Zipporah was a descendant of Abraham by Keturah; (Note, Ex. 2:16.) now the different tribes, which sprang from Abraham by her, inhabited some parts of Arabia, and were greatly blended with the Ishmaelites, and perhaps also with some of the race of Cush. (Note, Gen. 25:1-4.) In this large sense, Zipporah might be called a Cushite: and though this was said of her at first contemptuously; yet not being altogether erroneous, according to the common way of speaking, Moses did not contradict it.—Miriam seems to be mentioned first, as the leader in this opposition. It appears that the Lord had on some occasions spoken, not only by Aaron, but also by her: and probably it was thought that Zipporah and her relations had too much influence with Moses. The name of Aaron had not been mentioned in the appointment of the seventy elders; and this might give umbrage to him and Miriam. Perhaps there had been some private jar between Miriam and Zipporah; though no blame at all is laid on the latter in the narrative. But probably it was a general opinion, that Moses's wife, being a foreigner, was a disgrace to him and the people; and that he ought to put her away, and marry an Israelitish woman.

V. 3. Moses, writing as moved by the Holy Spirit, impartially records his own faults, and unreservedly speaks of the grace of God bestowed upon him. Meekness is here three, unto the tabernacle of the congregation. And they three came out.

5 And the LORD came down in the pillar of the cloud, and stood in the door of the tabernacle, and called Aaron and Miriam: and they both came forth.

6 And he said, Hear now my words: If there be a prophet among you, I the LORD will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream.

7 My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all mine house.

8 With him will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches; and the similitude of the LORD shall he behold: wherefore then were ye not afraid to speak against my servant Moses?

9 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against them, and he departed.

10 And the cloud departed from off the tabernacle; and, behold, Miriam became leprous, white as snow: and Aaron looked upon Miriam, and behold, she was leprous.

11 And Aaron said unto Moses, Alas! my lord, I beseech thee, lay not the sin upon us, wherein we have done foolishly, and wherein we have sinned.

contrasted with pride, wrath, and resentment. Moses, notwithstanding the extraordinary honours put upon him, was exceedingly humble, modest, unassuming, patient of contradiction, forbearing, and ready to forgive: and the whole history, especially that in this chapter, proves this testimony to be true.—Several of the sacred writers have spoken of themselves, as enabled by divine grace to act with great integrity and holiness in most trying circumstances, yet without any vainglory or ostentation; and our Lord says of himself, "I am meek and lowly in heart." It is therefore a senseless cavil to adduce this declaration, as a proof that Moses was not the author of this book, in opposition to the unanimous tradition of antiquity, and the testimony of Christ and his apostles in the New Testament.—As Moses was so meek, he took no notice of the affair, to resent it, or to punish any persons for their misconduct; and it was therefore the more necessary that the Lord himself should plead his cause.

V. 4-8. Aaron and Miriam, with Moses, were summoned to the tabernacle, probably by an audible voice from the cloud; where the Lord expostulated with them. He made himself known in dreams and visions to other prophets, when their bodily senses were locked up, (Marg. Ref. m, n.) or by dark signs and obscure parables, which they often did not well understand. But to his faithful servant Moses he spoke openly: when he was fully awake; in the clearest and most intelligible language imaginable; and constantly, almost from day to day, as a man converses with his friend. He also was admitted to "behold the similitude of the LORD;" the "express image of his person," even his eternal Son appearing in visible glory. This, Aaron and Miriam knew, and could not deny; and seeing Moses had been honoured and favoured so far above them, they should have been afraid of opposing him; as Aaron had feared to approach him, when his face shone, on his descending from Sinai. (Ex. 34:30.)

V. 9, 10. The removal of the cloud, which seems to have entirely disappeared till after Miriam was readmitted into the camp, expressed the Lord's displeasure; and Miriam, as the ringleader, directly became leprous. Aaron was spared in honour of the priesthood: yet he was severely rebuked in the punishment of Miriam, and in being the priest appointed to examine her, and pronounce her unclean; which is implied when it is said, "Aaron looked upon Miriam." (Lev. 13:2, 12.)

V. 11-13. Aaron submitted to God and to Moses: yet his confession was by no means so ingenuous and unreserved, as might have been expected. The doleful condition of Miriam, and the disgusting appearance which she made, are very strongly marked in the similitudes here used; which also may help us to conceive something of the loathsomeness of that disease, which is the special emblem of our sinfulness.

V. 14, 15. If Miriam had provoked her father to disgrace her by some marked expression of anger, she would have shown her sorrow and shame by a temporary solitude, and not at once come again before him. A similar conduct under the divine rebuke was therefore prescribed her. When she honoured God in leading the praises of Israel, (Note, Ex. 15:20, 21.) she was honoured as one of the chief ornaments of the nation: but now for her contempt of God, 12 Let her not be 'as one dead,' of whom the flesh is half consumed, when he cometh out of his mother's womb.

13 And Moses cried unto the LORD, saying, Heal her now, O God, I beseech thee.

14 And the LORD said unto Moses, If he father had but spit in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days? Let her be shut out from the camp seven days, and after that let her be received in again.

15 And Miriam was shut out from the camp seven days: and the people journeyed not, till Miriam was brought in again.

16 And afterward the people removed from Hazeroth, and pitched in the wilderness of Paran.

CHAPTER XIII.

Moses sends twelve men to search the land, 1-16. He instructs them, 17-20. They return after forty days; and ten of them bring a discouraging report, from which Caleb and Joshua dissent, 21-33.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 "Send thou men, that they may search the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel: of every tribe of their fathers shall ye send a man, every one a ruler among them.

she was highly esteemed, and expelled the camp as if she were a disgrace to it!—Her leprosy seems to have been cleansed directly, in answer to the prayer of Moses: and after seven days' purification, we may suppose the legal sacrifices were offered. In the mean time the people waited for her; both as a rebuke to them, who were disposed to join in opposition to Moses and to the Lord; and as a decent respect to her.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who are especially honoured of God must expect the severest and most repeated trials from men; and even from those whom they most love, and to whom they have been most useful.—The contentions among brethren, and among believers, are not only the effects of remaining pride, ambition, envy, and selfishness; but should be traced back to the malicious policy of Satan, who thus devises to disgrace the gospel, and weaken the hands and discourage the hearts of its best friends: and when the mind is disposed for contests, the most frivolous and groundless pretences will suffice to excite or to vindicate them. They who are exposed to such provocations need much meekness, and, waiting simply upon the Lord, will from him receive it: while the less anxious we are to justify or revenge ourselves, the more certainly will he plead our cause, and clear our character from every unjust aspersion.—If it was so criminal and dangerous to oppose the faithful and honoured servant of the Lord; how dreadful will be their doom, who dishonour, despise, or oppose "his beloved Son, in whom he is well pleased!" (Note, Heb. 3:1-4.)—They who exalt themselves will be abased, and fall into disgrace, if not into destruction; and they who speak against the Lord's servants may soon be constrained to make the most humiliating submission and supplications to them, and to confer on them the most honourable titles and commendations. (Note, Rev. 3:8, 9.) But it is well when rebukes produce penitent confessions: for those offenders with whom this is the case, though corrected and disgraced, shall be pardoned; their brethren, even though they have been deeply affronted or injured by their misconduct, will earnestly pray for them; Jesus himself will intercede for them; and they shall in due time be restored to comfortable fellowship with God and his church, and with renewed strength pursue their heavenly pilgrimage. But it was happy for Aaron, and it is well for us, that the church of God has "such a High Priest as became us, who is holy, harmless, and undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens." (Notes, Heb. 7:26-28. 8:1, 2.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XIII. V. 2. The Israelites had now by several stages arrived at the southern border of Canaan; and they might have gone up and taken immediate possession, had no breach intervened. We find elsewhere, that the people first proposed to Moses this design of searching the land; who, not suspecting the distrust and unbelief which had suggested it, approved the proposal, and asked counsel of the Lord. He, having been provoked by their former rebellions, permitted it, and gave directions accordingly; in order to a further discovery of their wickedness, the display of his own glory, and for the instruction of his church in all ages. (Note, Deut. 1:22-28.) There was indeed no urgent need

22 And they ascended by the south, and came unto Hebron, where ^aAhiman, Sheshai, and Talmai, the children of Anak, were. (Now ^aHebron was built seven years before ^aZoan in Egypt.)

23 And they came unto the ^abrook of Eshcol, and cut down from thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bare it between two upon a staff: and they brought of the pomegranates, and of the figs.

24 The place was called the ^abrook ^aEshcol, because of the cluster of grapes which the children of Israel cut down from thence.

25 And they returned from searching of the land after ^aforty days.

26 ^a¶ And they went and came to Moses, and to Aaron, and to all the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the wilderness of Paran, to ^aKadesh; and brought back word unto them, and unto all the congregation, and showed them the fruit of the land.

sity to search a land which the Lord had chosen for them, and into which he had undertaken to lead them; but there was no evil in the thing itself: and had it not been for the unbelief and rebellion of most of the persons concerned, the consequent report might have served greatly to encourage their faith and hope. The number and rank of the spies, had they all been like Caleb and Joshua, might have had very good effect on the people.

V. 16. Oshea may signify Save thou, being a prayer for salvation; Jehoshua may signify, He will save, being an assurance of salvation in answer to prayer. But very able critics seem conclusively to support the opinion, that the former name denotes salvation: the latter, (with the addition of part of the name JEHOVAH), signifies the LORD Salvation. The change of Joshua's name on this occasion, (for the mention of him before by this name, may be considered as an anticipation of the historian, for the sake of perspicuity,) seems to have been intended as an encouragement to him and his associates, confidently to expect protection and safety from the Lord. It is well known that Jesus is the same name, formed to a Greek termination; and he is the LORD our Salvation, of whom Joshua was an eminent type. (Marg. Ref. Note, Matt. 1:20, 21.)

V. 20. Good courage.] The service in which the spies were employed, required great courage; for they could expect no favour from the Canaanites, in case they were detected and apprehended, and they must therefore go forth at the hazard of their lives. It would likewise be necessary for them, in order that by their example and report they might encourage the people. This courage, in their circumstances, could only spring from strong faith, which Caleb and Joshua possessed, but the rest did not.

V. 21, 22. Entering at the southern border, the spies surveyed the whole land, even to the northern extremities; and returned back by Hebron, which was then called Kirjath-arba, and was possessed by a family of gigantic stature.—The decided and explicit manner in which Moses declares exactly how long Hebron was built before Zoan, (though probably no other author gives the least account when either of them was founded,) shows a consciousness of authentic information, and a freedom from all fear of being contradicted, even by the Egyptians, who were proud of their antiquity, and may well be considered as an internal evidence that the history is genuine.

V. 23, 24. In some spot near the borders of the land, the spies met with an extraordinary bunch of grapes, which they cut off, with the branch on which it grew, and carried to their brethren; this was an apt emblem of the earnestness of the Holy Spirit. (Notes, 2 Cor. 1:21, 22. Eph. 1:13, 14.) Some suppose that Caleb and Joshua alone brought this cluster; the others not being so favourably disposed towards Canaan, or willing to labour in order to recommend it. From this event, the place was afterwards called "The Brook," or the valley, "of Eshcol;" Eshcol signifying a cluster.

V. 26-29. The spies could not deny that the land was rich and fruitful; but it is evident they meant to insinuate, that this was of no consequence, as the inhabitants were exceedingly powerful. The Amalekites would assault them, if they attempted to pass them in entering the country; and the situation, wealth, or gigantic stature of the other nations, rendered them invincible.

V. 30. Caleb may signify all heart: and he was evidently a man of true courage, steadfastly facing danger in the path of duty, in the exercise of vigorous faith, and entire dependence on God. When the report of the other spies, by a misrepresentation of the truth, had excited a tumult among the people against Moses, Caleb stood forth to still them, doubtless with the concurrence of Joshua. He did not say, "Let us go and attack the Canaanites;" but, "Let us go up at once, and possess the land;" as if he thought the forty days spent in searching the land had been too long a delay, and was impatient to take possession of the country which God had given them. (Note, Josh. 14:6-15.)

V. 31. These persons were deficient in courage, in thus fearing the Canaanites, when such a multitude were all engaged to fight for themselves and their families: but when we be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we.

32 And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had searched, unto the children of Israel, saying, The land, through which we have gone to search it, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we saw in it are men of a great stature.

33 And there we saw the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants: and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight.

CHAPTER XIV.

The people murmur, and propose returning to Egypt; and threaten to stone Caleb and Joshua, while they in vain attempt to pacify them, 1-10. God threatens to destroy them at once, but Moses intercedes, and prevails for their rescue; yet that generation is doomed to fall in the wilderness, Caleb and Joshua excepted, 11-35. The men who raised the evil report, die by the plague, 36-38. The people attempt to march to Canaan; but are warned by Moses, and smitten by their enemies, 39-45.

AND all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night.

2 And all the children of Israel murmured against Moses, and against Aaron: and the whole congregation said unto them, Would God that we consider the mighty works of the Lord, which they had witnessed in Egypt, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderness, even to that present day, their unbelief appears the more surprising. Had the Canaanites been a thousand times stronger than Israel, they could not be stronger than Israel's God, as Pharaoh had found to his cost.

V. 32. Some suppose that there was a great mortality in the land just at the time, by which the Lord was weakening his enemies, and fighting for Israel; but which the spies perversely ascribed to an unwholesome climate. At the same time that they represented the country fruitful and populous, and all the people of great stature, and powerful and prosperous; they inconsistently speak of the land as eating up its inhabitants!

V. 33. [As grasshoppers.] That is, 'They despised us as puny creatures; and we, conscious of our insignificance and feebleness, trembled before them.'—It seems they passed as travellers, and were not suspected by the inhabitants.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The righteous Lord frequently gives up to their own devices, such persons as confide in their own wisdom and policy in preference, or in opposition, to his express word of promise; and even obedience to his commandments, if formal and hypocritical, may prove an occasion of men's falling into delusion, sin, and misery. (Notes, 2 Chr. 25:10,13.) We should, therefore, take heed both what we do, and in what manner and with what spirit we do it; as the same action may spring from contrary motives, and will certainly be productive of contrary effects to ourselves, according to the intention and disposition of our hearts.—Of the numbers whose names crowd the page of history, nay, even of those whose names are written in the Scriptures, the greater part are recorded to their perpetual disgrace! Happy they, and they only, whose names are written in the book of life, in the registers of eternity, as the people of the "LORD OUR SALVATION."—In the exercise of faith and hope, and by careful investigation of the sacred word, we may profitably search out the heavenly country, and hear a good report concerning it; and take encouragement to go up in the strength of the Lord and possess it at once. But carnal sense, and carnal preachers and professors, are not to be trusted in this business; and unbelief overlooks the promises and power of God, magnifies every danger and difficulty, and fills the heart with overwhelming discouragement.—May God help us to believe, and we shall then find all things possible! Faith will still the tumult of our passions, and inform us far beyond the report of either sense or reason: whilst earnestness of heavenly joys will form a "witness within ourselves," that will confute the false testimony of those who deny the reality or the excellence of spiritual blessings; and will animate us in "seeking those things which are above," nay, render us willing to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better than all things here below.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIV. V. 1. The people in general vented their discontent and despondency, as children are apt to do, in clamorous lamentations and wailings.

V. 2-4. Nothing can be conceived more absurd, as well as rebellious, than the whole conduct of Israel on this occasion. Surely it would have been at least as eligible to fall soldierlike, sword in hand, in attempting to conquer Canaan, had died in the land of Egypt! or would God we had died in this wilderness!

3 And wherefore hath the LORD brought us unto this land, to fall by the sword, that our wives and our children should be a prey? were it not better for us to return into Egypt?

4 And they said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt.

5 Then Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembly of the congregation of the children of Israel.

6 And Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of them that searched the land, rent their clothes.

7 And they spake unto all the company of the children of Israel, saying, The land, which we passed through to search it, is an exceeding good land.

8 If the LORD delight in us, then he will bring us into this land, and give it us; a land which floweth with milk and honey.

9 Only rebel not ye against the LORD, neither fear ye the people of the land: for they were bread for us; their defence is departed from them, and the LORD is with us; fear them not.

10 But all the congregation bade stone them as to die slaves in Egypt, or by famine or pestilence in the wilderness! Had it been possible for them to reach Egypt, they might have expected much more severe treatment, than that which had formerly extorted their doleful groans. But that must have been absolutely impracticable; for could they expect to be miraculously guided, victualled, and watered in their rebellious retrograde march? Yet without this, such a company could never have traversed that waste howling wilderness; but, without any immediate judgment from God, must inevitably have perished. The whole was a strong indication of the most horrible ingratitude, blasphemy, and rebellion. The Lord was directly charged with an intention of bringing them out of Egypt, by alluring them with the most encouraging promises, on purpose to destroy them and their families; and the whole present government of his express appointment, was to be set aside, and a new leader chosen, in opposition to him, and in defiance of him; nay, it seems one was actually appointed. (Neh. 9:17.) Such is human nature! and such counsellors are discontent and passion!

V. 5. Moses and Aaron being shocked at the blasphemy and rebellion of the people, expecting some terrible judgment upon them, perhaps entreating them to desist from their fatal purposes, fell down before them on their faces, to deprecate the divine displeasure by their prayers.

V. 6. [Rent their clothes.] This was a common expression of intense grief or deep abhorrence. (Marg. Ref. i.)

V. 7-9. Caleb and Joshua, with great intrepidity, and in the most energetic language, contradicted the evil report of the other spies. The land was exceedingly good! and if the Lord delighted in Israel, as they had every reason to expect he would, unless they forfeited his favour by their sin; he would bring them into this most desirable land, by the same power which had rescued them from Egypt. They had indeed great reason to fear rebelling against the LORD; otherwise they had nothing to dread from their enemies; who, having filled up the measure of their iniquity, were deprived of the providential defence of God, and exposed to his holy indignation.—The expression, "they are bread for us," denoted that the wealth and prosperity of the Canaanites would afford Israel the more abundant present support and future accommodation.

V. 10. Perhaps the other spies, counting this language a reproach of their conduct and a charge of direct falsehood, or else the rulers of the tribes and families first gave the word; and it soon became the general outcry through the whole multitude, that they who were nearest should immediately stone them; that is not only Caleb and Joshua, but Moses and Aaron also, as it seems probable from the narration. And now dreadful deeds would have been done, had not the Lord interposed to calm this tumult of the people by a visible display of his glory, probably like the fire on the top of Sinai, which intimidated them for the moment.

V. 11, 12. This is the abrupt language of astonishment and indignation. The Israelites had been tried and spared so long to no purpose, and still proceeded in their unbelief, and provocations, to such a degree, that it was in vain to bear with them any longer. (Matt. 17:17. Mark 9:19.) The Lord therefore declared their deservings, in his threatening to destroy them at once; and his faithfulness, in renewing his

28 Say unto them, As truly as I live, saith the Lord, as ye have spoken in mine ears, so will I do to you:

29 Your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness; and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, which have murmured against me.

30 Doubtless ye shall not come into the land concerning which I sware to make you dwell therein, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun.

31 But your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, them will I bring in, and they shall know the land which ye have despised.

32 But as for you, your carcasses, they shall fall in this wilderness.

33 And your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, and bear your whoredoms, until your carcasses be wasted in the wilderness.

34 After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, (each day for a year,) shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years; and mye shall know my breach of promise.

35 I the Lord have said, I will surely do it unto all this evil congregation, that are gathered together against me: in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die.

36 And the men which Moses sent to search the land, who returned, and made all the congrgation to murmur against him, by bringing up a slander upon the land;

37 Even those men, that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the Lord.

38 But Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of the men that went to search the land, lived still.

39 And Moses told these sayings unto all the children of Israel: and the people mourned greatly.

40 And they rose up early in the morning, and gat them up into the top of the mountain, saying, Lo, we be here, and will go up unto the place which the Lord hath promised: for we have sinned.

41 And Moses said, Wherefore now do ye transgress the commandment of the Lord? but it shall not prosper.

42 Go not up, for the Lord is not among you; that ye be not smitten before your enemies.

43 For the Amalekites and the Canaanites are there before you, and ye shall fall by the sword: because ye are turned away from the Lord; therefore the Lord will not be with you.

44 But they presumed to go up unto the hill-top: nevertheless, the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and Moses, departed not out of the camp.

45 Then the Amalekites came down, and the Canaanites which dwelt in that hill, and smote them, and discomfited them, even unto Hormah.

"the LORD sware in his wrath, that they should not enter into his rest," and irrevocably condemned them to wander in the wilderness for forty years, and never to see city, or town, or cultivated field, till that generation was dead, and their children grown up to inherit the land, according to his promise to their fathers. (Note, Ps. 95:9-11.) Having sworn by himself, and pledged the honour of all his perfections, the sentence was made absolute and irreversible; and his almighty power shut them up in the desert, as effectually as if it had been surrounded with the highest and strongest walls imaginable.—The Levites, who were numbered from a month old, were not included; for it is evident that Eleazar, the son of Aaron, assisted Joshua in dividing the land of Canaan after the conquest of it; (Josh. 14:1.) though he was old enough to officiate in the priest's office before this time, and was chief over the Levites. The women and minors, with Caleb and Joshua, were also excepted.—The promises were made to the descendants of the patriarchs, and not to the individuals of this generation.

V. 31. Know the land.] The children of these Israelites, by possessing Canaan, knew what a good land their fathers had despised.

V. 35. (Notes, 1 Cor. 10:1-5. Jude 5-8.) Forty years elapsed, from the departure of Israel out of Egypt to their entrance into Canaan; and the whole term is evidently included.—The word rendered wander, signifies feed: and thus implies, that the Israelites should move from place to place in the deserts, as shepherds in many countries do, who have no certain dwelling, but go from one district to another seeking pasture for their flocks.—The word "whoredoms" is generally used for idolatry; and it is thought that this doom was denounced on the people for their sin in worshipping the golden calf, and for their other idolatries; as well as for the transgression which they had just committed. (Note, Ex. 32:34, 35.)

V. 34. Neither the text, nor the marginal reading, seems to convey the precise meaning of the word (מַחֲלָה) rendered, "My breach of promise." Some translate it, "Ye shall know the fury of my anger," or "my vengeance." But perhaps it may signify my annulling. The words may either mean, that the people should know whether the Lord, having pronounced sentence against them, would annul it, or not; that is, they should experience the truth of it: or that they should know, that whilst his promises stood firm to the believing and obedient, hypocrites and apostates had no benefit from them. They perhaps would consider this exclusion as a "breach of promise," but he would show that it was only a delay made for wise, righteous, and gracious purposes; and that they would fulfil the promises to their descendants.

V. 39-45. The Israelites lamented very much that the sentence of exclusion had been pronounced; and, like Esau in similar circumstances, they sought with tears to have it reversed: (Notes, Gen. 27:38. Heb. 12:15-17.) but their subsequent conduct proved that they had not sorrowed to repentance. They were not truly humbled for their most heinous sin: a having repeatedly escaped, they concluded that the Lord would not proceed to extremities; and being convinced by the death of the spies that they had sinned, they vainly hoped that an alteration of conduct would produce at least a mitigation of the sentence. But the irreversible oath was sworn, and they only added one rebellion to another. The Lord had expressly commanded them to return into the wilderness towards the Red Sea; (25) and Moses, with the priests who used to carry the ark, protested against their presumption. The Lord, their Defence, had been provoked to leave them; the Amalekites and Canaanites waited for them; the honour of the divine justice was concerned to punish them; and accordingly it is probable, that a great slaughter of them was made by their victorious enemies.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-25. We shall not derive the full benefit from Scripture, unless we consider it as the history of human nature; written with an infallible and perfectly impartial pen; and are aware that we ourselves are disposed to act, in similar circumstances, exactly after the same manner as the Israelites did. If we are conscious of this, we shall see, in the chapter before us, a very humiliating picture of our own hearts, which may be of great advantage to us. For we must perceive, that it is natural to sinful man to believe a lie in preference to the faithful word of God; and this gives Satan and his instruments their grand advantage, in opposing religion and deceiving souls. In this spirit of unbelief, we are prone to harbour hard thoughts of God, to rebel against him, to torment ourselves, and to rush headlong upon our own destruction; and we should be completely ruined, if our wishes were granted us, when discontent and unbelief influence our hearts: for we are capable of quarrelling even with our choicest mercies, nay, of impatiently desiring those very evils, which at other times are most dreaded! But we should watch and pray against the first beginnings of this ungrateful and rebellious frame of mind; and keep a guard at the door of our lips, when such thoughts arise in our hearts: for the Lord frequently takes rebels at their word, and sends them the judgment, or the death, for which they rashly wish.—But the madness of a discontented heart is as manifest in its resolves, as in its desires, or wishes. Nor is there any thing so impracticable, or so desperate, that man dares not attempt it, when raging in feeble rebellion against the will of God: as if he could overpower Omnipotence, and annul the appointments of his Maker! Entreaties, counsels, encouragements, and warnings, at such a time, are vain, or only enrage the more: and thus Solomon's words are illustrated, "Let a bear robbed of her whelps meet a man, rather than a fool in his folly." (Notes, Prov. 17:12.) But the grace of the Holy Spirit, possessing the soul, produces a contrary disposition: the servants of the Lord under this influence are inclined to stoop, and to venture or suffer any thing, in order to rescue infatuated sinners from impending ruin: and while they abhor their crimes, they compassionate their persons, and both plead with them and fight for them,

14 And if a stranger sojourn with you, or who-soever be among you in your generations, and will offer an offering made by fire of a sweet savour unto the LORD; as ye do, so he shall do.

15 One ordinance shall be both for you of the congregation, and also for the stranger that sojourneth with you, an ordinance for ever in your generations: as ye are, so shall the stranger be before the LORD.

16 One law, and one manner, shall be for you and for the stranger that sojourneth with you.

17 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, *When ye come into the land whither I bring you,

19 Then it shall be, that when ye eat of the bread of the land, ye shall offer up an heave-offering unto the LORD.

20 Ye shall offer up *a cake of the first of your dough, for an heave-offering: as ye do *the heave-offering of the thrashing-floor, so shall ye heave it.

21 Of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the LORD, *an heave-offering in your generations.

22 ¶ And if ye have erred, and not observed all these commandments which the LORD hath spoken unto Moses,

23 Even all that the LORD hath commanded you by the hand of Moses, from the day that the LORD commanded Moses, and henceforward among your generations;

24 Then it shall be, if aught be committed by ignorance, *without the knowledge of the congregation; that all the congregation shall offer one young bullock for a burnt-offering, for a sweet savour unto the LORD, with his meat-offering, and his drink-offering, according to the manner, and one kid of the goats for a sin-offering.

25 And the priest shall make an atonement for all the congregation of the children of Israel, and it shall be forgiven them; for it is ignorance: and they shall bring their offering, a sacrifice made by fire unto the LORD, and their sin-offering before the LORD, for their ignorance.

26 And it shall be forgiven all the congregation of the children of Israel, and the stranger that sojourneth among them; seeing all the people were in ignorance.

27 ¶ And if any soul sin through ignorance, then he shall bring a she-goat of the first year for a sin-offering.

28 And the priest shall make an atonement for the soul that sinneth ignorantly, when he sinneth by ignorance before the LORD, to make an atonement for him; and it shall be forgiven him.

29 Ye shall have one law for him that sinneth through ignorance, both for him that is born among the children of Israel, and for the stranger that sojourneth among them.

30 But the soul that doeth aught presumptuously, (whether he be born in the land, or a stranger,) the same reproacheth the LORD; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

31 Because he hath despised the word of the LORD, and hath broken his commandment, that soul shall utterly be cut off: his iniquity shall be upon him.

32 ¶ And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered sticks upon the sabbath-day.

33 And they that found him gathering sticks, brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation.

34 And they put him in ward, because it was not declared what should be done to him.

35 And the LORD said unto Moses, *The man shall be surely put to death: all the congregation shall stone him with stones without the camp.

36 And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died; as the LORD commanded Moses.

37 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, same as an omer, or about five pints; a hin is computed by some to have been twice as much. (Tables at the end.)

V. 14—16. (Marg. Ref.) The intention of this law might be, to induce strangers to attend the worship and ordinances of God; to intimate to the Israelites, that if they became profligate and ungodly, they would be treated as strangers; and to signify that in due time the Gentiles would be fully admitted into the church. Though uncircumcised persons might not eat the passover, they might offer other sacrifices in the appointed way, if they were so disposed. These regulations referred to sacrifices and ordinances only; not to public offices, nor to marriages.

V. 17—21. (Notes, Lev. 23:15—21.) The obligation before prescribed, seems to have been a general acknowledgment from the people at large; but this was an oblation from every one that reaped a harvest: who was required, previously to tasting it himself, to offer a portion of dough as a leave-offering to the Lord. This is supposed to have been given to the priests in their several cities, and not carried to the tabernacle.

V. 22—29. This law concerning sins of ignorance, being entirely diverse from one before considered, occasions considerable difficulty. (Notes, Lev. 4:) Some explain that law as relating to sins of commission, this to sins of omission; others explain the one of inadvertent violations of the moral law, and the other of the transgressions of the ceremonial law; and some think that related to the whole nation, this to any one tribe; or that to the bulk of the nation, this to the rulers and elders.—The Jews say, that the former law referred to such national transgressions through heedlessness, as consisted with the maintenance of the prescribed worship in the main, but that this especially respected the case of the nation, when through inattention, and the example and authority of wicked rulers, they had turned aside and committed idolatry, or conducted their worship directly contrary to law; yet through a culpable ignorance, and not in presumption. This was evidently the case under several of their kings, and the explanation seems well grounded.—The law concerning individuals, who sinned through ignorance, does not so materially differ from that before given. The marginal references may assist the student in forming his judgment on the several interpretations before stated: but the difference of sentiment, on such a subject, does not at all interfere with the practical instructions of the passage.

V. 30, 31. To do aught presumptuously, implies that it is done wilfully, deliberately, in contempt of the authority of God's word, in defiance of his justice, "with a high hand," (marg.) and in direct rebellion. Such a conduct "reproacheth the LORD," as if his commands were needless, unreasonable, and inimical to man's happiness; as if his authority were only fit to be trampled under foot; his favour were not desirable, or his wrath not to be feared; in short, as if it were more advantageous to rebel against him than to serve him. (Marg. Ref. g, h, i. Notes, 2 Sam. 12:9, 10.) Many crimes will be found to be sins of presumption, which did not appear such to the offender, at the time when he committed them. Whenever we set our own inclinations in opposition to the known command of God: and when God saith, Thou shalt not, our conduct replies, But I will; we are guilty of sins of presumption; and though the matter be in itself trivial, yet the daring rebellion is exceedingly atrocious. (Notes, 1 Sam. 15:22, 23.) For an offender of this kind no sacrifice was appointed: he was condemned to bear his own iniquity, and to be utterly cut off; in most cases by a public execution, in others by the immediate judgment of God. (Note, 2 Sam. 12:13.)

V. 32—36. This example was evidently introduced to illustrate the foregoing law. A certain person was observed gathering sticks on the sabbath-day, in contempt of the commandment: and he was condemned as a presumptuous offender to be stoned, for a warning to the rest; which sentence was executed the next day. (Note, Heb. 2:1—4.)

V. 38—40. The word rendered "fringes," denotes an ornament resembling a flower, which being added to the bottom of the skirts of the outward garment, and tied together on each division of it, by a riband or lace of a blue colour, placed upon the fringes, would render the wearer conspicuous among strangers. But it was especially intended as a mark of distinction, which the Israelites themselves might frequently look upon, and so be put in mind of their character and obligations as the worshippers and servants of JEHOVAH; that they might remember and keep his commandments, and act consistently in all places, companies, and transactions; not them that they make them fringes in the borders of their garments, throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a riband of blue.

39 And it shall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the LORD, and do them; and that ye seek not after your own heart, and your own eyes, after which ye use to go a whoring;

40 That ye may remember and do all my commandments, and be holy unto your God.

41 I am the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the LORD your God.

CHAPTER XVI.

Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, openly rebel; and Moses felled down before God. 1-4. Moses remonstrates with Korah for seeking the priesthood; and sends for Dathan and Abiram, who refuse to come. 5-15. Korah and his company turn incense, and drive together the congregation. The glory of the LORD appears. 16-19. He threatens to consume them; but is stayed by the prayer of Moses and Aaron. 20-22. By divine command, Moses calls the people away from the tents of the rebels, and denounces their doom; the earth opens and swallows up some, while fire consumes those who burn incense. 23-35. Their censers are used to pave the altar for a memorial to posterity. 35-40. The rebellion is renewed; a plague breaks out, but is stopped by Aaron burning incense. 41-48. The number that died. 49-50.

NOW Korah, the son of Izhar, the son Kohath, the son of Levi, and Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab, and On, the son of Peleth, sons of Reuben, took men;

9 Seemeth it but ^a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath ^aseparated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to himself, to do the service of the tabernacle of the LORD, and to stand before the congregation to minister unto them?

10 And he hath brought thee near to him, and all thy brethren the sons of Levi with thee: ^aand seek ye the priesthood also?

11 For which cause, both thou and all thy company are gathered together against the LORD: and ^awhat is Aaron, that ye murmur against him?

12 And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab; ^awhich said, We will not come up.

13 Is it ^a small thing that thou hast brought us up ^aout of a land that floweth with milk and honey, ^ato kill us in the wilderness, except ^athou make thyself altogether a prince over us?

14 Moreover, ^athou hast not brought us into a land that floweth with milk and honey, or given us inheritance of fields and vineyards: wilt thou ^aput out the eyes of these men? we will not come up.

15 And Moses was ^avery wroth, and said unto the LORD, ^aRespect not thou their offering: ^aI have not taken one ass from them, neither have I hurt one of them.

16 And Moses said unto Korah, ^aBe thou and all thy company ^abefore the LORD, thou and they, and Aaron to-morrow:

17 And take every man his censur, and put incense in them, and bring ye before the LORD every man his censur, two hundred and fifty censurs; thou also, and Aaron, each of you his censur.

18 And they took every man his censur, and put fire in them, and laid incense thereon, and stood in the door of the tabernacle of the congregation with Moses and Aaron.

19 And ^aKorah gathered all the congregation against them unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and ^athe glory of the LORD appeared unto all the congregation.

[Practical Observations.]

20 ^aAnd the LORD spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

21 ^aSeparate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment.

22 And ^athey fell upon their faces, and said, O God, ^athe God of the spirits of all flesh, shall ^aone man sin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation?

23 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

24 Speak unto the congregation, saying, ^aGet you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

25 And Moses rose up, and went unto Dathan and Abiram; and ^athe elders of Israel followed him.

26 And he spake unto the congregation, saying, ^aDepart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye be consumed in all their sins.

27 So they gat up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every side: and Dathan and Abiram came out, and ^astood in the door of their tents, and their wives, and their sons, and their little children.

28 And Moses said, ^aHereby ye shall know that the LORD hath sent me to do all these works; for ^aI have not done ^athem of mine own mind.

29 If these men die ^athe common death of all priests, ventured on this highest part of the sacerdotal office. (Note, 2 Chr. 26:16-23.)

V. 8-11. In these verses Moses particularly addressed Korah, and the other sons of Levi, and charged them with despising the special honour which God had vouchsafed them, in appointing them to the service of the sanctuary; and with seeking the priesthood also. By this it appears, that while Korah charged Aaron and his sons with exercising a usurped authority; he really meant, by the assistance of the Levites and people, to exclude them and to seize upon the honour and emolument of their sacred office for himself and his family! and that whilst they all pretended to rise up against Aaron, they were in fact gathering together in rebellion against the Lord.

V. 12-14. Moses, as the ruler whom God had placed over Israel, summoned Dathan and Abiram to appear before him, to inform him of the cause of this insurrection: but they, doubtless aspiring to the government, would not own his authority, and insolently refused to appear before him. They likewise absurdly and basely spake of Egypt, where they had groaned in abject servitude, in the very language which the Lord had used concerning the land of promise! and sarcastically accused Moses of deceiving them with vain expectations of a valuable inheritance, which they were never likely to see; and of usurping dominion over the nation. They charged him likewise with attempting to impose on the people, with pretences of acting by divine authority, and for their advantage while he was sacrificing all their interests to the establishment of a usurped authority; as if he had attempted to put out their eyes, that he might lead them when blind wherever he chose.—The cloak of religion did not so well serve the purposes of those, who aspired to the civil government; and therefore they never mentioned the Lord at all; but ascribed all to Moses, as if they had never witnessed any miracles, or divine interpositions!

V. 15. Respect not, &c. That is, the offering of incense by Korah ^aand his company, who were confederates with Dathan and Abiram. Much more seems to have been meant than was expressed. ^aMoses prayed, that some evident effect of divine wrath might vindicate his injured character, and confirm his authority in Israel. He was indeed their ruler, under God; but, so far from oppressing them, he had not imposed the smallest tax on them, nor taken even as a present, so much as an ass from one of them. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Sam. 12:2-7.)

V. 16-18. The former challenge was now again repeated:

but Aaron and Korah were directed to appear together on this occasion, as the competitors for the priesthood, between whom the Lord was about to decide. It is certain that the company met in the court of the tabernacle, and not in the sanctuary; and that Aaron in this critical emergency was required to burn incense in the court, though it was not exactly regular: (46) for the sanctuary could not have contained so large a company without great inconvenience; and the people would not, in that case, have witnessed the event, as they evidently did.

V. 19. While the Levites, and others of their party, presumptuously burnt incense: Korah, instead of directly joining the company according to the requirement of Moses, seems to have been employed with vast success, in stirring up the whole congregation to rebellion. By these means he gathered them together to witness the event of the contest: and probably he intended to seize the disputed prize, perhaps with the slaughter of all who attempted opposition, had not the terrific appearance of the divine glory overawed and intimidated him and his party.

V. 22. The God of the spirits of all flesh. Man is a spirit embodied in flesh, the creature and subject of God. This relation of God to the spirits of mortal men seems to be here pleaded, as a reason why he should not indiscriminately punish the whole congregation: for he was acquainted with the inmost spirits of men, and could not be imposed upon; but could distinguish both the innocent from the guilty, and the tempters from the tempted: and Moses and Aaron seem charitably to have hoped, that Korah alone had sinned presumptuously; and that the rest had been misled, and had sinned ignorantly.

V. 24. By this command the Lord admitted the plea of Moses and Aaron; and they who testified their repentance, by separating from the ringleaders of the rebellion, were exempted from their punishment. Thus the congregation escaped, though many rebels perished in their presumption.

V. 26. The rebels, with all that belonged to them, were, as an accursed thing, devoted to utter destruction. (Notes, Lev. 27:28, 29. Josh. 7:13-15, 23-26.) The people therefore were forbidden to touch any thing belonging to them; that they might enter a solemn protest against their wickedness, acknowledge the justice of their punishment, and express their fear of being involved in it.

V. 27. Though the insurgents were of different tribes, they had quitted their proper situations in the camp, and pitched their tents close together; or they had formed one and he put on incense, and made an atonement for the people.

48 And he stood between the dead and the living; and the plague was stayed.

49 Now they that died in the plague were fourteen thousand and seven hundred, beside them that died about the matter of Korah.

50 And Aaron returned unto Moses, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. and the plague was stayed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-19. On reading this chapter we may well inquire, for what purpose these events were thus particularly recorded. In order to derive instruction from them, we should remember that the house of Israel was "planted a noble vine, wholly a right seed;" nor can we reasonably suppose that they were of a more perverse and wicked disposition than other people. But we have in their history an unflattering picture of human nature, a thorough dissection of the human heart. Were any other number of men circumstanced, proved, and left to themselves as they were: and were their history written with as complete information and as impartial a pen, they would appear at least as black as Israel. The secret history of every individual, who lives and dies in sin, especially from under the means of grace, when made known at the day of judgment, will be found a similar compound of infidelity, ingratitude, rebellion, and absurdity; yea, the true believer sees in his former conduct, and feels in his daily experience, that his heart is of the same kind as that of Israel. This trial was therefore made of human nature, in order to expose the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of the human heart; that we might, as in a glass, see the reflection of our own character; be led to examine and watch our own thoughts, desires, and motives; to judge and condemn ourselves; to become sensible of our need of pardoning mercy, and sanctifying grace; and so learn to seek them heartily and earnestly. Instead therefore of expressing our surprise and indignation at these ancient rebels, let us look to ourselves; and we shall soon become sensible that "the spirit that is in us lusteth to envy," pride, ambition, and covetousness.—These restless passions are continually called forth into exercise: and whatever advantages men enjoy, by their rank in life, or station in the church of God; though wealthy, "famous in the congregation, and men of renown;" so long as God withhold any imagined blessing, or advances any one above them, they experience those insatiable cravings, which are only increased by indulgence.—Except these lusts are subdued by the grace of God, suitable occasions and temptations would induce any man on earth to despise the dominion which God hath placed over him; to treat every exercise of authority as usurpation and oppression; to aspire to a lawless independence, or to seize upon the authority for himself and his party; and to account all inferior favours and mercies but a small thing. Nor can any wisdom, equity, or excellence in superiors or competitors, abate envy and enmity; or stop the mouths of those from slanderous accusations, who are under the power of these hateful passions. This ungrateful and injurious conduct towards man, is often accompanied with infidel daring rebellion against God; which no evidences, no judgments, no warnings, no mercies can repress: or if they give it its malignity a temporary check, it afterwards breaks out the more desperately. And if it should appear better to suit the purpose, he is capable of cloaking his ambition and selfishness under a pretence to godliness, and a hypocritical profession of being the Lord's holy people.—Such is human nature! Such are our hearts! yea, worse than this, even "desperately wicked; who can know them?" Such they would appear to be, if fully proved: such they have in a measure appeared already, when put to the trial. And, comparing the Lord's kindness to us with our conduct towards him, during our past lives, we may each of us exclaim, "It is of his mercies that we are not consumed," as Korah and his company were!—One dreadful effect of this depravity is the daring presumption, with which numbers intrude into the sacred ministry, from the base motives of covetousness and ambition, and love of ease or indulgence, without any suitable dispositions, without any delight in the work or love for it, any zeal for the honour of God, or any deep compassion for the souls of perishing sinners. Yet will such men dare to say, in the most solemn manner, before God and his congregation, 'that they judge themselves moved by the Holy Ghost to take this office upon them;' though they are not only conscious of hypocrisy in this declaration, but deride the very inquiry as enthusiasm! Of such conduct the Author himself was guilty, and to the end of his days would be abased before God on account of it; and admire and adore the patience and loving-kindness of the Lord, that, instead of being visited after the manner of Korah, it hath pleased God to give him repentance and forgiveness; and to employ him in the work of the ministry, with some small degree of usefulness. "For where sin hath abounded, grace hath much more abounded." And he men-

CHAPTER XVII.

The Lord commands twelve rods, one from each tribe, with the name written on it, to be laid up before the ark, 1-3. Aaron's rod alone buds, blossoms, and bears almonds, 4-9. It is laid up for a memorial, 10, 11. The people are afflicted, and despond, 12, 13.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Speak unto the children of Israel, and take of every one of them a rod, according to the house of their fathers, of all their princes, according to the house of their fathers, twelve rods: write thou every man's name upon his rod.

tions this humiliating subject, not only that the pious reader may bless God in his behalf; but that he may hope and pray earnestly and constantly for others, who lie under the same guilt, that they may experience the same grace. For our God "hath mercy on whom he will have mercy."

V. 20-50. The Lord will, first or last, manifest "who are his;" "whom he hath chosen," and "who are holy;" for it is not enough that we have his word in our hand, or his name in our mouth, unless we really believe his truth, and keep his commandments: "nor will doing the service of the sanctuary," and "standing before his congregation," though with acceptance from man, and usefulness also, prevent the doom of the hypocritical and rebellious; nay, rather they will aggravate it. And wo be to them, who refuse to judge or condemn themselves, till the Judge detects and condemns their iniquity!—He is "the God of the spirits of all flesh;" all creatures obey him; and frequently in this world he makes examples of the wicked, to deter others from sin. But if in his long-suffering he spare them here, and they still persist in rebellion, relapsing again and again, after solemn warning, and with still greater aggravations, as numbers do; their doom will be the more dreadful at last; and they will indeed be cast alive into the bottomless pit, and the fire of hell will continually torment, but never consume them. (Note, Heb. 2:1-4.)—Let sinners then take warning from such awful judgments, lest they too be swallowed up: let them separate from the wicked, and have no fellowship with their unfruitful works, but rather reprove and protest against them, if they would not be associated with them in punishment. But the Lord knows how to distinguish between the deluded and the presumptuous, the penitent and the impenitent; and to glorify his mercy towards the one, while he magnifies his justice upon the other, and records their doom for a useful lesson to succeeding generations.—Let us, however, turn from such awful objects to contemplate, admire, and imitate the effects of divine grace in the conduct of Moses and Aaron, in their patience, fortitude, meekness, forgiveness of injuries, and unwearied labours and prayers for the welfare of their ungrateful enemies. May we have the same testimony of our conscience to our integrity and benevolence, whenever we are falsely accused: may we be thus angry without sinning, and thus able to "bless them that curse us;" "not being overcome with evil, but overcoming evil with good." Then will the Lord protect, vindicate, and honour us in due time, in the presence of our opposers, and we shall be blessed ourselves and blessings to others.—But we may in all this look unto Jesus, dying for us, when enemies; praying for his crucifiers; hastening between the dead and the living, with the incense of his meritorious intercession, to stay the plague which sin had occasioned, and by which multitudes have perished, and by which we all must otherwise have been eternally ruined. Through him we are spared and live: may "his love constrain us to live no longer to ourselves, but to him who died for us, and rose again."

NOTES.—CHAP. XVII. V. 2-5. The rebellious spirit excited by Korah and his company was so violent, and had spread so widely through all the tribes, that even the awful judgments recorded in the foregoing chapter did not effectually repress it. It therefore pleased the Lord to bring the point in contest to decision, by a miracle, significant in itself, and harmless in its effects. He had before expressly named the princes of the several tribes, without exact regard to primogeniture: (Note, 1:5-16.) and he had appointed Aaron to the priesthood, and also to be prince or representative of the tribe of Levi. (Note, 3:5-10.) To confirm his authority, to establish the priesthood in his family, and finally to silence all other claims, and all murmurs on this account, were the express ends proposed on this occasion. (Notes, 16:1-7.)—The rods seem to have been sceptres, or badges of authority used by the princes; but some think they were all cut out of the same almond-tree on this occasion.—The writing was doubtless formed in such a manner, as to render them certainly distinguishable: and the Lord expressly foretold, that one of them, and but one, should blossom, to determine the tribe and priesthood which he had chosen.

V. 6-11. Moses, who had access at all times into the most holy place, left the rods before the ark all night; and in the morning that of Aaron was covered with buds, and blossoms, and ripe almonds; but those of the other princes, (though probably they were all made of the wood of the almond-tree,) were unchanged. Thus, beyond all dispute, the Lord showed his choice of the tribe of Levi, and of Aaron

3 And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi: for one rod shall be for the head of the house of their fathers.

4 And thou shalt lay them up in the tabernacle of the congregation, before the testimony, where I will meet with you.

5 And it shall come to pass, that the man's rod whom I shall choose, shall blossom: and I will make to cease from me the murmurings of the children of Israel, whereby they murmur against you.

6 ¶ And Moses spake unto the children of Israel; and every one of their princes gave him a rod apiece, for each prince one, according to their fathers' houses, even twelve rods: and the rod of Aaron was among their rods.

7 And Moses laid up the rods before the Lord, in the tabernacle of witness.

8 And it came to pass, that on the morrow Moses went into the tabernacle of witness: and, behold, the rod of Aaron, for the house of Levi, was budded, and brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds.

9 And Moses brought out all the rods from before the Lord unto all the children of Israel: and they looked, and took every man his rod.

10 And the Lord said unto Moses, Bring Aaron's rod again before the testimony, to be kept for a token against the rebels: and thou shalt quite take away their murmurings from me, that they die not.

11 And Moses did so: as the Lord commanded him, so did he.

12 And the children of Israel spake unto Moses, saying, Behold, we die, we perish, we all perish.

as his priest.—Accordingly, the rod of Aaron was laid up “for a token against the rebels,” and probably continued in that very state to future ages; (Heb. 9:4), and no mention is made in the whole history of Israel of any further murmurs on this account. “This was a fit emblem of the Messiah’s resurrection, as declarative . . . of his priesthood’s being acceptable to God; nothing being more fit to represent one raised from the dead, than a dead branch . . . restored to vegetable life, and made to bud, and blossom, and bring forth fruit.” Mac-laurin.

V. 12, 13. The language of these verses is exceedingly descriptive of a forced submission, attended with terror and despondency, and an inward revolting against an appointment which they dared no longer oppose. And it significantly expresses the state of mind and heart of the people, and the greatness of the ferment which prevailed among them. In the preceding events, they “despised the chastening of the Lord;” and now “they fainted when rebuked by him.” (Note, Heb. 12:4—8.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Though “the Lord hath no pleasure in the death of the wicked;” yet such is his holiness and justice, that continuance in sin is inseparable from ruin: he therefore graciously removes the occasions of offending, that men may be preserved from condemnation. He gives all proper satisfaction to those who are disposed to be convinced, and manifest the equity of his determinations to every impartial and humble inquirer: but, as we have no claim to his favours, “he does what he willeth with his own,” and deigns not to assign his reasons for making one man to differ from another.—Our Lord Jesus was unanswerably demonstrated to be the “great High-Priest over the house of God,” by his resurrection from the dead, and when “the rod of his strength went forth out of Zion, and multitudes were made willing in the day of his power, in the beauties of holiness;” and when through him, “Israel shall blossom, and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit,” it will appear still more illustriously divine. (Notes, Ps. 110:3. Is. 26:19. 27:2—6.) Nor shall those ministers, whom he chooses, remain as dry rods before him and his church: but, more or less, sooner or later, they shall “bud, and blossom, and bear fruit,” both that of holiness in their lives, and that of usefulness in their ministry. And when they are opposed and persecuted, they may hope with increasing confidence for more signal success; in order that their adversaries may be silenced, the faith of the Lord’s people established, and their own hearts encouraged in their work of faith and labour of love.—And whether this usefulness be more immediate, or be longer waited and prayed for, it will be “fruit which shall remain” before the Lord, to his everlasting glory, and their eternal recompense; and in the church for the good of many, after they have finished their course. (Notes, John 15:12—16. v. 16.)—But alas! when man’s presumption is checked, and his self-sufficiency is abated, he naturally verges to the opposite extreme: and, in unbelieving despondency arising from hard and injurious thoughts of God, neglects divine ordinances, lest he should be guilty of profaning them: buries his talent in the earth, lest he should be condemned for wasting it; and often justifies himself in both, because he cannot merit heaven by his good works!—The Lord give us grace to avoid all the extremes, into which an evil heart and a subtle enemy combine to betray us!

NOTES.—CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. Aaron and his family were now confirmed in the priesthood against all competitors; and the people were exceedingly terrified lest the tabernacle should occasion their destruction: but, to counterbalance the honour conferred on the former, and to allay the terrors and abate the envy of the latter, it was declared that the priests must bear the blame of every thing, which was not properly conducted in respect of the tabernacle and its service; and that the people had in this respect nothing to fear, except a presumptuous intrusion into the places and services, from which they were by the law excluded. But the priests must be very circumspect, active, and exemplary, both in their ministrations and conversation, else they would soon be laden with guilt, which their sacrifices could not expiate.

V. 2—6. Levi signifies joined, (Gen. 29:34), and the name seems alluded to in this appointment. The Levites, though brethren to the priests, were given to them as servants; and the menial and most laborious parts of the service, in the court of the tabernacle, were allotted them: but the priests alone might minister within the sanctuary, and sprinkle the blood, and order the sacrifices at the altar of burnt-offering. Nay, the Levites must not look upon the sacred vessels which they carried, till they were covered. (Notes, 4:5—18.) The ordinary priests performed the other services; and the high-priest once every year entered within the veil.

V. 7. A service of gift.] The priests were thus taught to account their work and charge to be a special gift and favour from God, and not to consider them as a disagreeable appendage to the distinction and emolument of their office. (Marg. Ref. p.)

V. 10. “The most holy place” here signifies the precincts of the tabernacle, which were most holy, compared with the houses or tents of the priests.—It was very proper on this occasion, to renew the grants before made to the priests; and have given your priest's office unto you as a service of gift: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

8 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Behold, I also have given thee the charge of mine heave-offerings, of all the hallowed things of the children of Israel: unto thee have I given them, by reason of the anointing, and to thy sons, by an ordinance for ever.

9 This shall be thine of the most holy things reserved from the fire: every oblation of theirs, every meat-offering of theirs, and every sin-offering of theirs, and every trespass-offering of theirs, which they shall render unto me shall be most holy for thee, and for thy sons.

10 In the most holy place shalt thou eat it: every male shall eat it: it shall be holy unto thee.

11 And this is thine; the heave-offering of their gift, with all the wave-offerings of the children of Israel: I have given them unto thee, and to thy sons, and to thy daughters with thee, by a statute for ever: every one that is clean in thy house shall eat of it.

12 All the best of the oil, and all the best of the wine, and of the wheat; the first-fruits of them which they shall offer unto the Lord, thou have I given thee.

13 And whatsoever is first ripe in the land, which they shall bring unto the Lord, shall be thine: every one that is clean in thine house shall eat of it.

14 Every thing devoted in Israel shall be thine.

15 Every thing that openeth the matrix, in all flesh which they bring unto the Lord, whether it be of men or beasts, shall be thine: nevertheless, the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem, and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem.

16 And those that are to be redeemed from a month old shalt thou redeem, according to thine estimation, for the money of five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, which is twenty gerahs.

17 But the firstling of a cow, or the firstling of a sheep, or the firstling of a goat, thou shalt not redeem, they are holy: thou shalt sprinkle their blood upon the altar, and shalt burn their fat for an offering made by fire, for a sweet savour unto the Lord.

V. 19. A covenant of salt.] Note, Lev. 2:13.—The Lord established it, as a perpetual and stable covenant, with the family of Aaron, and an unalterable statute to Israel, all the time they possessed Canaan, that the priests should have these perquisites for themselves and their families; by reason of their anointing to the sacred office.

V. 20. No inheritance, &c.] The priests and Levites possessed houses and lands for gardens and pasturage in the suburbs of their cities; and they might purchase estates to the year of jubilee: but they had no portion allotted them in the division of the land of Canaan; for it was the will of God, that they should be maintained by that portion, which he reserved to himself as a rent out of the estates of the other Israelites. Thus they were exempted from many avocations and snares, which the cultivation and improvement of lands would have occasioned; and were plentifully supplied with every thing needful and comfortable. At the same time, their interests were placed in an inseparable connexion with the maintenance of the worship of God: for if the people became generally irreligious or idolatrous, they would neither bring sacrifices nor pay tithes. And indeed the nature of man, and the entail of the priesthood and sacred ministry upon one family and tribe, would render it proper to employ every tie and motive, to engage them to support the worship of God to the utmost of their ability.

V. 21. The Lord, by this statute, gave the Levites a clear tenth of the whole increase of the land; that is, of the labour 18 And the flesh of them shall be thine, as the wave-breast and as the right shoulder are thine.

19 All the heave-offerings of the holy things which the children of Israel offer unto the Lord have I given thee, and thy sons and thy daughter with thee, by a statute for ever: it is a covenant of salt for ever before the Lord unto thee, and to thy seed with thee.

20 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land, neither shalt thou have any part among them: I am thy part and thine inheritance among the children of Israel.

21 And behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel, for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation.

22 Neither must the children of Israel henceforth come nigh the tabernacle of the congregation, lest they bear sin, and die.

23 But the Levites shall do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they shall bear their iniquity. It shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, that among the children of Israel they have no inheritance.

24 But the tithes of the children of Israel, which they offer as an heave-offering unto the Lord, I have given to the Levites to inherit; therefore I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.

25 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

26 Thus speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithes which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall offer up an heave-offering of it for the Lord, even a tenth part of the tithes.

27 And this your heave-offering shall be reckoned unto you as though it were the corn of the thrashing-floor, and as the fulness of the wine-press.

28 Thus ye also shall offer an heave-offering unto the Lord, of all your tithes which ye receive of the children of Israel; and ye shall give thereof the Lord's heave-offering to Aaron the priest.

and improvements, as well as of the estates of all the other tribes. This was a large proportion for by far the smallest tribe; and, when joined to all the rest assigned them, was an abundant provision. But the other tribes would have also the advantages accruing from trade and manufactures, in which the Levites were not allowed to be occupied.—This tenth seems to have been the common stock of the tribe, and divided among them accordingly: and this would obviate that common bad effect of tithes; namely, the contentions which arise about them, between ministers and the people of their peculiar charge: as the tithes were not paid to an individual, but to a collective body; or rather they were presented as an oblation to God, who was pleased to give them to the Levites. (24.)

V. 25-32. The foregoing regulations were delivered to Aaron, and by him to the people: but this law, immediately relating to the interests of him and his family, was given by Moses.—The Levites, receiving tithes of the people, gave a tithe of them to the priests; and some have conjectured that the tenth of this tithe was allotted for the high-priest's support, according to the pre-eminence to which he was advanced. This tithe of the tithes was the oblation of the Levites to the Lord, and as acceptable as that which was paid out of the estates of the other Israelites; and when it had been offered of the best, they might use the rest with comfort and a good conscience, as if it had been the produce of their own lands. But they would pollute the holy things, if they used the tithes without separating the portion assigned to the priests.

The hallowed part. (29) That part which was most proper to be selected as hallowed, or devoted to God, who requires the best of all things to be employed in his immediate service.

her eye offering of the Lord, of all the 'best thereof, even the hallowed part thereof, out of it.

30 Therefore thou shalt say unto them, When ye have heaved the best thereof from it, then it shall be counted unto the Levites as the increase of the thrashing floor, and as the increase of the wine-press.

31 And ye shall eat it in every place, ye and your households: for it is your reward for your service in the tabernacle of the congregation.

32 And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, when ye have heaved from it the best of it: neither shall ye pollute the holy things of the children of Israel, lest ye die.

CHAPTER XIX.

The water of separation directed to be made with the ashes of a red heifer; and all who prepared these must be cleansed from pollution, 1-10. The cases in which the water was to be used, and how: the soul that neglected it to be cut off; and the person that sprinkled it to be cleansed, 11-22.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying,

2 This is the ordinance of the law which the Lord hath commanded, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring thee a red heifer without spot, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke.

3 And ye shall give her unto Eleazar the priest, that he may bring her forth without the camp, and one shall slay her before his face.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The office of a minister is a good work, and an important charge; and to be employed and trusted in it, to be approved faithful and made useful, is the greatest honour and favour which God ever confers upon mortal man. But it is weighty and perilous: "the iniquity of the priesthood," and "of the sanctuary," forms the most aggravated guilt, and will sink the mercenary, the careless, and the profligate minister into the deepest condemnation: besides occasioning wrath upon the people, and dragging them down with him into destruction. All therefore, who are thus employed, should "rejoice with trembling;" and "take heed to themselves, and to their doctrine," not "entangling themselves in the affairs of this life," (Note, 2 Tim. 2:3-7.) but considering the Lord as their Portion, the interests of godliness as their interests, and the glory of God in the salvation of souls, as their grand, their sole object. They who desire this good work should look to it, that their motives, dispositions, and qualifications are such, as may give them a reasonable ground to hope, that they will "be approved of God, as workmen that need not be ashamed;" and that the maintenance which they receive, may be indeed "for their service in the sanctuary."—On the other hand it is the Lord's pleasure, "that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel," and be preserved from the anxieties and temptations of pinching poverty; that they may have no occasion to engage in secular business, or inducement to flatter the rich, or to be silent out of pecuniary considerations. Nay, it is his will, that they should not only have enough to maintain their families, and punctually to discharge their debts; but that they should have a surplus for pious and charitable uses, and that they should thus employ it: not luxuriously spending, or covetously hoarding it, but living themselves, and leaving their families to live, in dependence on Providence. It is therefore criminal not only to defraud, but to be niggardly to, the ministers of God, and their maintenance must not be considered as an alms or an imposition, but their just due, as the Lord's portion out of men's estates, which being withheld will pollute the enjoyment of all the rest.—Whatever is offered to the Lord must be of the best; and they who have him for their inheritance, will be well provided for in this world and in the next, without the embarrassments and cares which perplex others.—Let us then endeavour to know and do our own work diligently; to be contented with our daily bread, and thankful for it; to seek our inheritance and our treasure in heaven; to "set our affections on things above;" to have our conversation heavenly; to consider ourselves as "strangers and pilgrims upon earth;" and to leave the eager pursuit of earthly things to those who know no better treasures to be desired or enjoyed.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIX. V. 2. Intimations had before been given, concerning the method of purification from ceremonial defilement, which is prescribed in this chapter. (8:7).—The red colour of the heifer being expressly insisted on, must be supposed to have had some meaning. Atrocious guilt is spoken of as crimson and scarlet; blood is the atonement for sin; and the vengeance executed by the Lord on his enemies, is represented by his garments being red with their blood. (Is.

4 And Eleazar the priest shall take of her blood with his finger, and 'sprinkle of her blood directly before the tabernacle of the congregation seven times.

5 And one shall burn the heifer in his sight; her skin, and her flesh, and her blood, with her dung, shall he burn.

6 And the priest shall take cedar-wood, and hyssop, and scarlet, and cast it into the midst of the burning of the heifer.

7 Then the priest shall wash his clothes, and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the camp, and the priest shall be unclean until the even.

8 And he that burneth her shall wash his clothes in water, and bathe his flesh in water, and shall be unclean until the even.

9 And a man that is clean shall gather up the ashes of the heifer, and lay them up without the camp in a clean place; and it shall be kept for the congregation of the children of Israel, for a water of separation: it is a purification for sin.

10 And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: and it shall be unto the children of Israel, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among them, for a statute for ever.

11 ¶ He that toucheth the dead body of any man shall be unclean seven days.

63:2.) Perhaps these things might be alluded to.—Christ never bare the yoke of sin; nor would he have been subject to the yoke of the law, except for our sakes and as our Surety. (Note, Gal. 4:4-7.)

V. 3. The high-priest must not on any account knowingly contract defilement; and therefore the next priest to him officiated in this ceremony, not only at this time, but probably on all future occasions of the same kind.

V. 4. Before the tabernacle. Either towards the tabernacle when without the camp, as it is generally thought; or in the court of the tabernacle, when the solemnity without the camp was finished.

V. 5-10. This oblation differed from all other sacrifices, in that the heifer was slain, not in the court of the tabernacle, but without the camp; the greater part of the blood, and all the fat were burned with the skin and carcass; and the same things were cast into the burning, which had been appointed in the case of a leper when cleansed. (Note, Lev. 14:4-7.) Yet it is evident, that it was for substance an atoning sacrifice; and the typical purifying efficacy of the ashes was derived from the typical expiation, made by the spotless animal thus slaughtered.—Every circumstance was ordered, so as to impress the mind with an idea that the heifer was extremely polluted and polluting; and that by thus carrying the pollution out of the camp, it made way for the purification of the people. Even Eleazar, by superintending the transaction and sprinkling the blood, was rendered unclean, as well as he who burned the heifer: and when a clean person had collected the ashes, he also in some degree partook of the pollution.—Thus Christ, our unblemished Sacrifice and Sanctification, bearing our sins, suffered without Jerusalem by the hands of the Romans, yet by the decree and under the inspection of the chief priests: and though his death was "according to the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God;" yet every one concerned in it contracted guilt and pollution of the most aggravated kind.—The ashes of the heifer thus prepared, and carefully kept apart from those of the wood with which it was burned, were laid up in some clean place without the camp, that the water of separation (or the water for purifying those who were separated for ceremonial pollution) might be made, by putting a small quantity of them into spring-water. This water must be frequently wanted by the whole multitude of Israelites: yet, as a little would suffice, the ashes of one heifer might last for some considerable time; and the nature of ashes, which do not easily corrupt, might also typify the abiding efficacy of the atonement of Christ. But that man must be endued with an uncommon measure of credulity, who can believe the assertions of the Rabbies, that the ashes of this one heifer lasted the whole nation, and the strangers sojourning among them, till the days of Solomon.—It is reasonable to suppose, that after the people were settled in Canaan, ashes for this purpose were placed in every neighbourhood, for the convenience of all who needed them.

V. 11. It does not appear that the touch of an unclean person, or of any other thing, required, as burdensome purification, except that of a dead human body, or grave. (Le. 11.

ye unto the rock before their eyes, and it shall give forth his water, and thou shalt bring forth to them water out of the rock: so thou shalt give the congregation and their beasts drink.

9 And Moses took the rod from before the LORD, as he commanded him.

10 And Moses and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; must we fetch you water out of this rock?

11 And Moses lifted up his hand, and with his rod he smote the rock twice; and the water came out abundantly: and the congregation drank, and their beasts also.

12 And the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.

13 This is the water of Meribah; because the children of Israel strove with the LORD, and he was sanctified in them.

[Practical Observations.]

14 ¶ And Moses sent messengers from Kadesh unto the king of Edom, Thus saith thy brother Israel, Thou knowest all the travail that hath fallen us;

15 How our fathers went down into Egypt, and we have dwelt in Egypt a long time; and the Egyptians vexed us and our fathers.

16 And when we cried unto the LORD, he heard our voice, and sent an Angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt; and, behold, we are in Kadesh, a city in the uttermost of thy border.

17 Let us pass, I pray thee, through thy country: we will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells; we will go by the king's highway, we will not turn to the right hand nor to the left, until we have passed thy borders.

V. 8. It has been shown, that the waters from the rock in Horeb typified the sanctifying and comforting influences of the Holy Spirit, communicated to us through the atonement of Christ, when smitten for our sins. (Notes and P. O. Ex. 17:1-7.) The smiting of the rock needed not to be repeated: for though it was not the same rock, it was the outward sign of the same spiritual benefit. (Note, 1 Cor. 10:1-5.) It was, therefore, only requisite to speak to it. And thus, Christ having been once smitten, "and wounded for our transgressions," needs not to be smitten any more; but only to be spoken to by the prayer of faith accompanying the preaching of the gospel; and the waters will flow forth.—The pretended sacrifice of the mass seems to be an imitation of Moses's error, in repeatedly smiting the rock, when he ought only to have spoken to it.

V. 9. As Moses "took the rod from before the LORD," many suppose that "the rod of Aaron which blossomed" was meant; but it is not improbable, that the rod, with which Moses wrought so many miracles, was also generally laid up in the sanctuary. Whatever rod was meant, it was only intended to be a token of the divine power to be exerted, and ought not to have been used in smiting the rock.

V. 10-13. Though the people were rebels, and Moses called them so at other times without offence, yet he evidently spake at this time in an angry spirit. He also assumed honour to himself and to Aaron, instead of giving glory to God, when he inquired, "Must we fetch you water out of this rock?" He seems not firmly to have believed that the water would be given, and he did not think it sufficient to "speak to the rock," and therefore he hastily smote it, and repeated the stroke immediately; though the sign of speaking was probably intended as a rebuke to the people, who were not so obedient to the Lord's command as the very rocks were. In this view of his conduct we perceive that he was very culpable; the Lord considered it as exceedingly dishonourable to his name; and he knew Aaron likewise to be highly criminal: though the water therefore was not withheld, yet the relief to Israel was followed by a severe rebuke to Moses and Aaron, and a sentence of exclusion from Canaan.—They were eminent characters: the eyes of all Israel were upon them; and their improper conduct, and want of confidence in the power and faithfulness of God, rendered it expedient that 18 And Edom said unto him, Thou shalt not pass by me, lest I come out against thee with the sword.

19 And the children of Israel said unto him, We will go by the high-way; and if I and my cattle drink of thy water, then I will pay for it: I will only, without doing any thing else, go through on my feet.

20 And he said, Thou shalt not go through. And Edom came out against him with much people, and with a strong hand.

21 Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage through his border: wherefore Israel turned away from him.

22 ¶ And the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, journeyed from Kadesh, and came unto mount Hor.

23 And the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron in mount Hor, by the coast of the land of Edom, saying, 24 Aaron shall be gathered unto his people: for he shall not enter into the land which I have given unto the children of Israel, because ye rebelled against my word at the water of Meribah.

25 Take Aaron and Eleazar his son, and bring them up unto mount Hor;

26 And strip Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son: and Aaron shall be gathered unto his people, and shall die there.

27 And Moses did as the LORD commanded; and they went up into mount Hor in the sight of all the congregation.

28 And Moses stripped Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son: and Aaron died there in the top of the mount: and Moses and Eleazar came down from the mount.

29 And when all the congregation saw that Aaron was dead, they mourned for Aaron thirty days, even all the house of Israel.

V. 14-21. The descendants of Esau, now grown into a flourishing kingdom, were not acquainted with the relation in which the Israelites stood to them, nor with their bondage in Egypt and deliverance from it, their continuance in the wilderness, and their pretensions to Canaan. With them Moses pleaded the brotherly relation, to move natural affection; the past distresses of the people, to excite compassion; and the favour of the Lord to them; who by the Angel of his presence guided and protected them, to influence their hopes and fears. He engaged also that the people should pass through with all convenient speed, on the king's highway doing no harm, and paying even for the water which they drank: this being the direct road into the land promised to their fathers.—But the Edomites suspected their intentions, retained their old enmity, denied their request, and threatened them with war. Yet the Israelites were not allowed to molest them; but were required to set an example of forbearance, by taking a long circuit round their country. Hence it is evident, that so long as they were under the conduct of Moses and Joshua, they did not wage war from resentment or rapacity, but according to the commandment of God; and that he pointed out to them the people on whom they were required to execute his righteous vengeance, and whose countries they should receive for an inheritance; nor would they have been successful, if they had assailed any others. (Notes, 142-4, 439-45. 21:21-25. 31:2.)—The Edomites seem to have been governed by dukes or military leaders, when Israel came out of Egypt; but now a king ruled over them. (Ex. 15:15. Notes, Gen. 36:31-43.)

V. 22-28. At the command of God, delivered by Moses, Aaron seems to have put on the rich pontifical garments, and in them to have ascended the mountain; where they were taken off from him by Moses, and put on his son Eleazar, who was now invested with the high priesthood. This being done, Aaron immediately expired: and though he left the world under a divine rebuke, yet he died as a pardoned sinner with the hope and earnest of glory, and probably without terror or reluctance. Doubtless the command given to

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. Well might Moses say, "All our days are passed in thy wrath; we spend our years as a tale that is told;" when during so long a period he witnessed nothing worth recording, but the death of many hundreds of thousands of his brethren! (Notes, Ps. 90: title. 7-10.)—Even to this day man's life passes away almost in the same manner: for what is it but a tedious repetition of the same dull occurrences, with evident proofs of our folly and guilt, and of the Lord's anger tempered with mercy, "till it be cut off, and we fly away?" Thus the longest life soon comes to a close; and the only advantage that the most eminent possess above the more obscure is, that they do not die quite so unnoticed. O Lord, "so teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom!"—The propensity to sin is evidently not the fault of any one man or people, but of human nature; and therefore one generation after another manifests the same disposition to unbelief, impatience, and rebellious murmurs.—We can easily exclaim against the Israelites in this respect, after all which they had witnessed and experienced: but had we been in their place, cooped up in the wilderness; confined mainly to one kind of food; at a distance from all the delicacies and varieties with which even the poorest in a fertile land are comparatively feasted during the revolutions of the seasons and their several productions; should not we too have been fretful and impatient? Not that we should have had either right or reason to complain; but because we are proud and sensual, and consequently hard to please.—But why question whether we should have rebelled? when Moses and Aaron stand condemned with Israel, though not of the same, yet of similar unbelief, rebellion, and anger. Even Moses, the meekest man on earth "spoke unadvisedly with his lips;" and we are constrained repeatedly to notice the most eminent saints defective in their most distinguishing excellencies. (Note, Gen. 12:11-16.)—Under long continued trials, the best of men prove that "sin dwelleth in them;" nay, old age gives advantage to some evils, and to none more than a peevish spirit.—But in proportion to the eminence of a man's character, and the notoriety of his offence, it will dishonour and displease God: (Note, Ec. 10:1.) and by putting us to shame for our sins, he will obtain that honour which we have neglected to render him. Whilst impotent sinners escape punishment in this world, being "reserved unto the day of judgment;" the Lord marks the offences of his people with alarming severity, yet still in mercy; and notwithstanding our unworthiness, he provides for our wants, and answers our prayers, when we call upon him for a supply of the waters of life, which flow from the Rock of salvation.

V. 14-29. Here again, let us learn to imitate the impartiality of the historian; the silent submission of him and of Aaron; and the example of Israel to insolent and injurious Edom. Thus upright and inoffensive, candid in our declarations, and open in our profession of religion;—thus fair in our proposals, slow to anger, and ready to forgive;—thus willing to give up our convenience, and even recede from our right rather than contend about it, should we be; and when we cannot "overcome evil with good," we should leave the Lord to plead our cause in his own time and manner.—The word of God will surely, perhaps speedily, be fulfilled in his providence. Shortly death will strip the richest, wisest, and most honourable of all their distinctions, except true grace have made them to differ; but, in that case, when they leave all the rest to others, this will be their own for ever. Having served their generation, they need not wish to survive their usefulness; nor can that correction be reasonably complained of, which hastens a man's entrance into heaven.—When eminently good men die, rivalry, envy, resentment, and prejudice, which often render them uneasy while they live, die also; and survivors very commonly honour and mourn for those, whom when living they opposed and reviled! This respect for their memory is indeed a tribute due to them; but it is of little consequence what others think and say of them, when dead, except they then receive their testimony and follow their example.—Blessed be God, our High-Priest at death relinquished not his priesthood to another, but rose again to complete his design, and ever liveth to make intercession for us. (Note, Heb. 7:23-25.) Having the fulness of the Spirit, he raises up a succession of ministers and Christians to preach and profess his truth from age to age; and he hath consigned the robe of his righteousness to all his spiritual posterity, for their accepted appearance before God.—If we be his indeed, though we be separated from our dearest friends, and must shortly be absent from the body; yet we shall never be separated from him: "for he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit."

NOTES.—CHAP. XXI. V. 1-3. Before the people set out to march round the country of Edom, the king of those Canaanites who inhabited the southern part of the country, knowing their intentions of invading the land, remembering that they had formerly searched it, and now learning that they approached his borders, attacked them in the wilderness, and took some prisoners, which elated him and discouraged them. But this disadvantage induced the Israelites to place their whole dependence on the Lord; and to devote the cities and property of the assailants to utter destruction, if he should render them victorious; their persons being already thus devoted by God himself. In this confidence they waged war with them, and pushed forward to their cities, which they took and utterly destroyed, and called the name Hormah; that is, utter destruction, (marg.) that none might ever after build cities on the same ground. The clause rendered "king Arad the Canaanite," may very properly be translated, "the Canaanite, the king of Arad;" and he is elsewhere called "the king of Arad." (Josh. 12:14.)—Some argue that the Israelites did not at this time destroy the cities, but only devoted them; and that Joshua afterwards destroyed them: supposing that the cities of Arad lay beyond the country of Edom. But our knowledge of the ancient geography of those parts is very imperfect; and the account of the transaction seems given by Moses, and not inserted afterwards by another person.

V. 4, 5. The Israelites were not permitted to force their way through the land of Edom, but were led back into the wilderness, as if about to return to the Red Sea. The road perhaps proved heavy or rough; water was scarce; and they grew weary of living so long on manna, which probably they fancied was not hearty enough to support them under such fatigues. They had expected directly to enter Canaan, and their retrograde journey was a grievous disappointment. Few of them had ever lived upon bread; and even that circumstance might concur in enhancing to their imaginations the satisfaction of having that kind of food. It seems also that water failed them, and they endured some hardship; but their spirits were embittered, as well as discouraged; and they relapsed into their old sin of distrustful murmuring against Moses and against God. (Marg. Ref. m. n.)

V. 6-9. Serpents of various kinds abounded in the wilderness; but they had been restrained from hurting the people, till they provoked God to send them to assail the camps, in which they soon did dreadful execution, and caused still greater consternation. They were called fiery serpents, as some think, from their colour, which resembled polished brass; others deduce the epithet from the inflammation, like the burning of fire, which immediately followed their bite. The people were at length, by this judgment, made sensible of 8 And the Lord said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole: and it shall come to pass, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live.

9 And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole, and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived. [Practical Observations.]

10 ¶ And the children of Israel set forward, and pitched in Oboth.

11 And they journeyed from Oboth, and pitched at Ije-abarim, in the wilderness which is before Moab, toward the sunrising.

12 From thence they removed, and pitched in the valley of Zared.

13 From thence they removed, and pitched on the other side of Arnon, which is in the wilderness that cometh out of the coasts of the Amorites: for Arnon is the border of Moab, between Moab and the Amorites.

their fault, and entreated Moses to pray for the removal of the serpents, which he readily did. Yet they were not removed; but Moses was commanded to form an image of a serpent of brass exactly like them, to affix it to a long pole, or standard, and to place it in a conspicuous part of the camp; and to this, they who had been bitten were directed to look. Nothing could in itself be less suited to give relief than this expedient: but it was the Lord's appointment: and by this token the sufferers must express their entire dependence on him, and submissively expect a cure from him alone. Accordingly, whoever looked, however desperate his case, or feeble his sight, or distant his situation, was infallibly and perfectly cured; and manifested his recovery, by becoming capable of the services to which he was called, or marching in his place when the camp was removed; but if any one would shut his eyes, or turn his back on the brazen serpent, and depend for help on any thing else; he must inevitably die. This forms a very significant type of our salvation by Jesus Christ. The Lord, provoked by man's first apostasy, hath permitted that old Serpent, the tempter, the devil, to communicate his hateful venom to the whole human race, which operates to their destruction: and numbers in consequence have perished, are perishing, and will perish. But "God so loved the world, as to give his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The Saviour was indeed perfectly free from sin, but he assumed "the likeness of sinful flesh." (Note, Rom. 8:3,4.) he was numbered with malefactors, and crucified with them; and it is observable that the supposed crime for which he suffered, namely, "making himself equal with God," was considered by his enemies as the essence of diabolical ambition, usurpation, and blasphemy. Having thus been "made Sin for us," he is now held forth in the gospel to all nations; (Note, 2 Cor. 5:18-21.) and when any poor sinner is made sensible of his guilt and danger, and humbly prays for mercy and deliverance, he is commanded to look unto Jesus, as dying upon the cross for the transgressions of "the law given by Moses;" and renouncing all other confidences, and looking in faith, with a desire of salvation, and in obedience to God; and persevering from day to day in the use of the appointed means; he obtains effectual relief, and at length a perfect deliverance, even though weak in faith, and though Satan's temptations as yet harass his soul. For faith in a crucified Saviour is the appointment of God, and rendered effectual by his grace: and though man's reasoning pride considers it as foolishness, all believers experience it to be "the power of God to salvation." (Note, John 3:14,15.)—The command given to Moses, to make an image of a serpent, shows that forming images is no violation of the moral law; unless intended as representations of God; or worshipped when made, as the Israelites afterwards worshipped the brazen serpent. (Notes, Ex. 20:4. 2 Kings 18:4.)—It is thought that the sight of a serpent, or the image of one, tends to increase the malady of him who has been bitten: and some naturalists have said the same of the sight of brass; yet that of the brazen serpent healed the people. The sight of Christ crucified, naturally filled his crucifiers only with anguish, when they beheld him whom they had pierced, and were convinced he was their Messiah; but by the grace of God, became their only salvation through faith in him. Bp. Patrick.—The Jews in general allow, that there was some mystery in this appointment; but they will not understand the mystery till they become Christians.

16 And from thence they went to Beer; that is the well whereof the Lord spake unto Moses, Gather the people together, and I will give them water.

17 Then Israel sang this song, Spring up, well; sing ye unto it:

18 The princes digged the well, the nobles of the people digged it, by the direction of the law-giver, with their staves. And from the wilderness they went to Mattanah:

V. 10. "Oboth," signifies bottles; (Job 32:19, Heb.) and probably the place was so called, from the people's carrying water thence in bottles for their use in the desert.

אין (plur. אֵינִים or אֵינִים) generally signifies one who has a familiar spirit, 'because,' says Buxtorf, 'he brings forth oracles out of a swelling belly, as out of a bottle.'—See Lev. 19:31. 20:6. 1 Sam. 28:3, &c. Is. 8:19, et al.—The only place in which this word signifies a bottle is Job 32:19, yet this is probably the original meaning.

V. 11-15. After some more journeys, the Israelites encamped in the borders of Moab, to the east of Canaan: and as the sacred historian was about to relate the conquest of Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites, and the devices of Balak king of Moab; he briefly mentioned the boundaries which separated their kingdoms.—Arnon (a small rivulet, arising in the adjacent mountains, and falling into the Dead Sea,) ran through the wilderness to which the Amorites had extended their dominion, and thus formed one of these boundaries: and as Israel had passed this brook without molesting the Moabites, (though they seem to have gone through, or close by, some part of their country,) and were encamped in the land of the Amorites; it appeared that they had given no provocation to the Moabites or Ammonites. On this ground Jephthah long afterwards vindicated the right of his people to that part of the country of Sihon and Og, which the Ammonites claimed as their due; and which had once belonged to them; but the Amorites had conquered it before the Israelites came thither. (Notes, Judg. 11:12-27.) In stating this subject, Moses referred to a book called "The wars of JEHOVAH," which some suppose to have been extant before this time, and others to have been written on this occasion, perhaps by an Israelite: for it can hardly be thought, that an Amorite, or any idolater, would have used the name of JEHOVAH in recording the successes of Sihon. If, however, this was an ancient record, Moses quoted it (as Paul did the writings of the heathen poets,) in order to determine the question by the authority of their own writers. But if a pious Israelite wrote a history of the transactions which he had witnessed, or of which he had received an authentic account, he might naturally call it "the wars of JEHOVAH;" and the previous conquest of this region by the Amorites might be considered by him as an interposition of Israel's God for his people.—(Notes, 26-30. Deut. 32:8.) And if the history were known to be authentic, it would suit Moses's purpose to refer the reader to it, for fuller information on the subject which he had briefly mentioned.—As, however, the point in question, though of importance at that time, had no direct connexion with the grand concerns of religion, this "book of the wars of the LORD" has long since been lost.

What he did in the Red Sea, &c. (14) It does not appear how the passage, as it stands in our translation, could suit the purpose of the sacred historian. He himself fully recorded the works of JEHOVAH, both at the Red Sea, and in giving Israel the victory over Sihon and Og, at the brooks of Arnon. But the words rendered "He did in the Red Sea," are very obscure. In the margin it stands Vaheb in Suphah, in the Hebrew אֶחָד בְּרִיבְהָרָה. There is here no pronoun answering to he, and רִיבָה is preceded by אֶחָד. The clause seems therefore to mean, 'What the Amorite, or Sihon, had done to Vaheb, a prince, or place, in a region called Suphah.' (Note, Deut. 1:1.)

V. 16-18. The people wanting water, the Lord prevented their murmurs by promising them a supply: and by his direction given by Moses "the lawgiver," when the people had been gathered together to witness the event, the princes, with their staves only, opened the dry and sandy surface of the earth, and the water flowed in such abundance, that the place was called "Beer," or the well; and the people expressed their joyful admiration and gratitude in a song of praise.

V. 21—25. The kingdoms, at this time governed by Sihon and Og, and lying between the country of Moab on the south or south-west, and that of Ammon on the north-east, and bounded by the river Jordan on the west, were included in the grant made to Abraham; and so indeed was the whole region as far as the Euphrates; yet the Israelites did not expect at this time to possess it; but to pass through, that they might directly invade the country situated between Jordan and the Mediterranean Sea. We find however, that the Lord, while he forbade them to assault the Edomites, Moabites, and Ammonites, assured them that he would give them the country of Sihon and Og. (Deut. 2:24. 32.) And the obedience of Israel, under the conduct of Moses, shows that neither revenge, ambition, avarice, nor carnal policy, but the command of God, directed them with whom to wage war.—(Note, 20:14—21.) Nay, after this assurance the people, no doubt by the direction of Moses, sent ambassadors to Sihon, requesting a peaceable passage through his country, on the same friendly terms as had been proposed to the Edomites. He however not only refused them, but went out to attack them; they were therefore directed to meet him in battle, and, being victorious, they slew him, and took possession of all his cities and all his dominions, as the first-fruits of their conquests. (Notes, Deut. 2:24—37.)—The morites were descended from Ham by Canaan; but the Moabites and Ammonites were the posterity of Lot, Abraham's nephew. (Gen. 10:15—17. 19:37, 38.)—The strength of the border of Ammon was the reason why the Amorites had not seized on that country also.

V. 26—30. Here again Moses particularly takes notice, that Heshbon, which had belonged to the Moabites, was at this time the city of Sihon, who had vanquished the king of Moab, and taken it from him, with the rest of the country even to the river Arnon. And on this occasion he quotes some poem, or song, composed on account of these victories, in proverbs, or parables, (short, emphatical, figurative, sublime, or elegant sentences,) which was sung among the Amorites, though perhaps not committed to writing. In this poem the Amorites invite one another, in exulting language, to come and inhabit Heshbon, now become the city of Sihon; and, in a kind of insolent triumph, speak of the destruction of Ar and other cities of Moab, the slaughter of the princes, with the captivity and abject misery of the people. This seems to have been merely a vain-glorious poetical boast: for though the Amorites took from the Moabites Heshbon and the adjacent region; yet it does not appear that they made any further conquests.—It is supposed that Sihon was the common name of the kings of this district, as Pharaoh of the Egyptian monarchs; and that some preceding king obtained these victories, and took these countries from a former king of Moab.—Chemosh was the principal idol of the Moabites. (Marg. Ref. v.)

V. 34. Og was a giant, and very formidable; the people therefore feared to attack him, till the Lord thus encouraged them. (Marg. Ref. d. h. Note, Deut. 3:11.)

29 Wo to thee, Moab! thou art undone, O people of Chemosh: he hath given his sons that escaped, and his daughters, into captivity unto Sihon king of the Amorites.

30 We ^ahave shot at them: Heshbon is perished, even unto ^bDibon, and we have laid them waste even unto Nophah, which ^creacheth unto Medeba.

31 Thus ^aIsrael dwelt in the land of the Amorites.

32 And Moses sent to spy out ^aJaazer, and they took the villages thereof; and drove out the Amorites that were there.

33 ¶ And ^athey turned, and went up by the way of ^bBashan: and ^cOg the king of Bashan went out against them, he and all his people, to the battle at Edrei.

34 And the Lord said unto Moses, ^aFear him not: ^bfor I have delivered him into thy hand, and all his people, and his land; and thou shalt do to him ^cas thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon.

35 So they ^asmote him, and his sons, and all his people, until there was none left him alive: and they possessed his land.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—5. The enemies of God are always the enemies of his people; and they often at first prosper in their attempts against them, but at last they will be utterly destroyed. For losses sustained by true Christians, in their spiritual conflicts, by taking them off from self-dependence, and exciting them to call upon God for help, subserve their final victory: and being enabled to say, "When I am weak, then am I strong, for the power of Christ rests upon me," they become invincible.—But alas! how soon are the judgments and mercies of our God forgotten by us! and how prone are we to relapse into former sins, though we have suffered for them, and even repented of them! how apt to magnify every difficulty, to despise our choicest mercies, to be impatient of delays, to distrust, to murmur, and to rebel! Nay, where the dominion of sin is broken, it dwells within, and often breaks out; sometimes even openly to the dishonour of God, and the grief of his faithful servants; and under sharp trials, even the true believer may be so discouraged and tempted, and so yielded to temptation, as to undervalue the "Bread of life," and the benefit of divine ordinances, as if they were "light food," and almost to wish that he had never set out in the ways of God! (Ps. 73:14.) But he will soon be ashamed of these thoughts, if ever harboured in his mind. We have need however to "watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation;" and it is profitable for us to be aware of the enemy within, as well as of the enemies around us; especially in times of grievous disappointment and tedious discouragement.—But "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth;" and thus, as well as by his judgments upon hypocrites, he excites a salutary terror in their minds, and brings them back to his ways with weeping and supplication: and when they repent and acknowledge their offence, he removes the dreaded destruction, though perhaps the smart of the rod may continue for a time.

V. 6—9. The Lord knows how to over rule, not only the bite of poisonous serpents, but the persecutions of wicked men, and the temptations of the devil, for the good of those whom he loves: and our prayers are often most desirably answered, when the letter of the request is not granted. (Note, 2 Cor. 12:7—10.)—The Lord can relieve us from our dangers and distresses, by the means which we should deem most unpromising; of which he hath given proof in redeeming so many souls from hell, from Satan, and sin, and bringing them to holiness and eternal life, by the manifestation of his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, by his agonizing and accursed death upon the tree, and by the preaching of the despised doctrine of a crucified Saviour.—Oh! that the venom of the old serpent inflaming men's passions, and causing them to commit those sins, which must otherwise terminate in their eternal destruction, were but as sensibly felt, and the danger as plainly apprehended, as the Israelites felt the pain, and feared the death, which followed from the bite of the fiery serpents! Then none would turn away from Christ and his gospel: then would a crucified Saviour be so valued, that all things else would "be accounted loss for him;" then, without delay, and with all earnestness and simplicity of dependence, they would apply to him, crying "Lord, save us, we perish;" then from day to day would they look to him for pardon and healing, and show their faith by their works: nor would any abuse the freeness of his salvation to them, when they estimated the price which it cost him; and their love to the Saviour would increase their dread and abhorrence of sin, and watch-

Israel encamp in the plains of Moab, 1. Balak king of Moab sends for Balaam to curse the people, 2-11. He, forbidden by the Lord, refuses to go, 12-14. On second message he accepts permission, and goes, 15-21. An angel opposes him, and he is rebuked by his ass, whose mouth God opens; he beholds the Angel, and obtains leave to proceed, 22-35. Balak meets him, and sacrifices, 36-41.

AND the children of Israel set forward, and pitched in the plains of Moab, on this side Jordan by Jericho.

2 And Balak the son of Zippor saw all that Israel had done to the Amorites.

3 And Moab was sore afraid of the people, because they were many: and Moab was distressed because of the children of Israel.

4 And Moab said unto the elders of Midian, Whom shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field. And Balak the son of Zippor was king of the Moabites at that time.

5 He sent messengers therefore unto Balaam the son of Beor, to Pethor, which is by the river of the land of the children of his people, to call him, saying, Behold, there is a people come out from Egypt: behold, they cover the face of the earth, and they abide over against me.

6 Come now therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people, for they are too mighty for me: peradventure I shall prevail, that we may smite them; and that I may drive them out of the land: for I wot that he whom thou bleesest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed.

7 And the elders of Moab, and the elders of Midian, departed with the rewards of divination in their hand: and they came unto Balaam, and spake unto him the words of Balak.

[Practical Observations.]

8 And he said unto them, Lodge here this night, and I will bring you word again, as the Lord shall speak unto me. And the princes of Moab abode with Balaam.

9 And God came unto Balaam, and said, What men are these with thee?

fulness against temptation.—But alas! few feel their need of Christ to preserve them from perishing; and though he still proclaims, "Look unto me, and be saved," most men die in their sins, even where they have the Bible in their hands, and Christ in the gospel "evidently set forth as crucified among them!" But how will they escape, who, through pride and love of sin, reject this simple method of cure, or prefer their own inventions to this suitable and divine salvation? or who, perverting the doctrine, presume that their iniquities are pardoned, while their covetousness, pride, anger, ambition, lust, or evil tempers betray the venom of the old serpent to be in full force within?

V. 10-35. Our God has engaged to provide for his people in all emergencies, and wells of salvation are opened for them through their whole pilgrimage: so that they need only use the appointed means with simplicity and diligence, and he will send supplies of heavenly consolations, and they shall rejoice in celebrating his praises. Nor ought they to be unthankful to the instruments of their mercies, temporal or spiritual, whether they be princes, nobles, lawgivers, magistrates, ministers, or private persons.—Still, however, we must prepare for fresh conflicts and enemies. With sin and the powers of darkness we must make no peace, nor truce; we must not even treat with them; and it is vain to expect any long cessation of hostilities. Even our neighbours, with whom we would, if possible, live peaceably, will often make themselves ready to battle. But, trusting in the Lord's protection and obeying his commands, we shall be more than conquerors over every assailant, and profit by all their attempts to hurt us. For our inheritance is sure; and, in the Lord's time and manner, every thing will concur in putting us in possession of it.—But worldly inheritances are continually changing their masters: ill-gotten gain never spends well; idolatrous dependences fail in the crisis of need; and the destruction of the wicked, being appointed of God, will be certainly and speedily effected.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXII. V. 1. At length the Israelites terminated their wanderings, by encamping on the banks of Jordan over against Jericho, where they abode, until they passed over into Canaan. The plains, in which they encamped, had belonged to the Moabites, from whom they derived their name; but Sihon had taken them from the Moabites, and Israel had now got possession of them. (2)

V. 4. The Moabites were descended from Lot; the Midianites from Abraham by Keturah. (Gen. 19:37. 25:2.) They lived near together, and were united in interest; as were also the Ishmaelites, and Edomites, and Ammonites; but they were all enemies to Israel, except that part of the Midianites, which was connected with Jethro, Moses's father-in-law.—The persons here called "elders," seem to be elsewhere called princes, and even kings, according to the language of those times. (Marg. Ref. c.) The message to them appears to have been sent with the concurrence of the principal persons in Moab, and by the general sense of the nation; as well as by Balak their king.—They all thought, that nothing but united and vigorous resistance could preserve them: for either they had not heard, that JEHOVAH had forbidden Israel to molest them; or they disregarded any report which they had heard to this effect.—The simile which they employed is extremely expressive, as referring to the complete destruction which Israel had made of Arad, Sihon, and Og, with the nations over whom they reigned.

V. 5. It is the general opinion of expositors, that Balaam was first a prophet, (and as some think a good man), and that afterwards he degenerated and became a soothsayer; yet this is exceedingly improbable, and unparalleled in Scripture. Had he been first a prophet, and then turned aside to use magical arts for the sake of gain, he would scarcely have "sought for enchantments," when he went for the express purpose of meeting the Lord, whatever he did at other times. It is not intimated, that any prophecies were spoken by him, except those contained in this history, which certainly are sufficient to entitle him to the name of "Balaam the prophet." His boasting likewise concerning "his eyes being opened, and his seeing the visions of the Almighty," seems especially to relate to the events here recorded. It appears therefore more probable, that he was originally a diviner, or magician of great renown: but having acquired some knowledge of the true God, perhaps by hearing of the wonderful works performed by Moses in his name, he endeavoured to render this knowledge subservient to his interested and ambitious purposes, by professing himself a prophet of JEHOVAH, and uttering divinations as revelations from him. Thus the exorcists, observing how efficacious the name of Jesus proved in the mouth of the apostle, attempted to cast out devils, "adjoining them by Jesus whom Paul preached" (Note, Acts 19:13-20.) and thus Simon Magus, finding the miracles of Philip so much superior to the effects of his magic, embraced Christianity; and afterwards offered Peter money to confer on him the same power which he exercised, doubtless intending to enrich or aggrandize himself by it. (Notes, Acts 8:9-24.) On this supposition Balaam's use of incantations, even in seeking JEHOVAH, was the natural effect of the association of his old practices with his new pretensions. It is not certain, whether the Lord had ever spoken to him or by him before this event, though probably he had; but he certainly did afterwards: yet there is abundant proof that he lived and died a wicked man, and an enemy to God and his people. (Notes, 31:8. Deut. 23:3-5. Mic. 6:3-5. 2 Pet. 2:15, 16. Jude 11-13. Rev. 2:14-16.) This, however, as is evident from the Scriptures, has by no means been a singular case. (Notes, Matt. 7:21-23. 1 Cor. 13:1-3.)—Balaam dwelt in or near Mesopotamia, by the Euphrates, the renowned river of the inhabitants of those countries. But his reputation had reached so far, and he was so celebrated, that he was sent for, as it appears, in consequence of the counsel given to Moab by the elders of Midian; being the only person who was able to contend with Moses, the prophet of Israel. For we may suppose, that they ascribed to the superior skill of Moses in some unknown arts, all that power by which, notwithstanding Pharaoh's determined opposition, Israel had been brought out of Egypt, had subsisted for so many years in the wilderness, and had obtained their late victories over the Amorites.—Pethor.] Deut. 23:4.

V. 6. Balak had some general notion of the overruling influence of an invisible Power, and at the same time such an opinion of Balaam's interest with that invisible Power, that he supposed he could do nothing so effectual to conciliate his favour, as to pay court to his prophet: nay, he either actually thought, or he was willing to compliment Balaam, and to comfort himself, with the supposition, that his blessings or curses were infallibly ratified! If he could therefore prevail with Balaam solemnly to curse Israel and to bless Moab, he would then defy Israel and declare war against them, notwithstanding all the wonders of which he had heard!—It has been shown by learned men, that many of the heathen nations thus solemnly cursed their enemies in the name of their gods, and devoted them to destruction, before they declared war against them. (1 Sam. 17:43.) And it is not impossible, that the sentence denounced by the Lord against the nations of Canaan, whom he devoted to destruction, and employed Israel to extirpate, and Israel's vow concerning the cities of Arad, might suggest to the Moabites and Midianites the idea of engaging Balaam in a similar manner to devote them

10 And Balaam said unto God, "Balak the son of Zippor, king of Moab, hath sent unto me, saying,

11 Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, which covereth the face of the earth: come now, curse me them; peradventure I shall be able to overcome them, and drive them out.

12 And God said unto Balaam, "Thou shalt not go with them: 'thou shalt not curse the people: 'for they are blessed.

13 And Balaam rose up in the morning, and said unto the princes of Balak, Get you into your land: for 'the LORD refuseth to give me leave to go with you.

14 And the princes of Moab rose up, and they went unto Balak, and said, "Balaam refuseth to come with us.

15 ¶ And Balak sent yet again 'princes, more, and more honourable than they.

16 And they came to Balaam, and said to him, Thus saith Balak, the son of Zippor, 'Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me;

17 For 'I will promote thee unto very great honour, and I 'will do whatsoever thou sayest unto me: come therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people.

18 And Balaam answered and said unto the servants of Balak, 'If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, 'I cannot go beyond the word of the LORD my God, to do less or more.

Israelites; and that the customs of other nations in this respect, were derived from the traditionary report of these events.

V. 8. Balaam seems to have been fully convinced, that JEHOVAH was the true God, and the Protector of Israel: if therefore "his heart had not been exercised with covetous practices," and hankering after the "rewards of divination," he would peremptorily have declared that he durst not, and would not, undertake any thing against the people of God. He could not but know, that it was vain to attempt any opposition to Omnipotence: yet he had such unworthy notions of God, as to think that, by one means or other, he would be 'induced to renounce the cause of Israel, and espouse that of Moab! This appears to have been the project which he formed, and which he prosecuted for a long time, till he was still further given up to infatuation! He therefore desired a night's time, in hopes to obtain the Lord's consent to his journey; and he evidently expected some immediate revelation.

V. 9-14. The Lord, for wise reasons, saw good to answer the expectations of Balaam, and to make known his will in a manner, which should at once have determined him on no account to attempt any thing in the business. But though he declined going at the present; he did not preclude all further applications. He yielded obedience to the divine injunction, but as it seems very reluctantly. He did not "bring the messengers word again as the LORD spake to him:" for he mentioned merely the refusal, but neither the peremptory manner, nor the reason of it, 'That the people were blessed, and Balaam should not curse them.' Had he faithfully reported these, they would have conveyed an important warning to Balak not to "meddle to his hurt;" but he spake as one inclinable to the proposal, and not without hope of obtaining leave; and as his words appear to have been reported in the same imperfect manner, Balak naturally concluded that the prophet only wanted more respect and larger promises.—The constant mention of the name of Balak, shows that he was the principal person concerned; though the elders or princes had much authority and influence.

V. 15-17. As Balak concluded that Balaam might yet be induced to come, he sent a greater number of superior persons, offering him any terms which he chose to demand: and in return he expected an unreserved compliance; so that nothing, not even his conscience, nor the command of God, should prevent his coming and cursing Israel!—His liberality to this wicked man proved him sincere in his confidence; as the penuriousness of some professed Christians, in the cause of their religion, proves their hypocrisy.

V. 18. Balaam does not declare, that he is determined not to come; nor does he express any abhorrence of the crime or the temptation; but he "cannot go" without the Lord's permission, and he seems to regret that he may not avail himself of so liberal an offer. These touches must be carefully noted, if we would understand this instructive history.—He speaks also of "the LORD his God" with great 19 Now therefore, I pray you, 'tarry ye also here this night, 'hat I may know what the LORD will say unto me more.

20 And 'God came unto Balaam at night, and said unto him, 'If the men come to call thee, rise up, and go with them; but 'yet the word which I shall say unto thee, that shalt thou do.

21 And Balaam 'rose up in the morning, and saddled his ass, and went with the princes of Moab.

[Practical Observations.]

22 ¶ And 'God's anger was kindled because he went: and 'the Angel of the LORD 'stood in the way for an adversary against him. Now he was riding upon his ass, and his two servants were with him.

23 And 'the ass saw the Angel of the LORD standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand: and 'the ass turned aside out of the way, and went into the field; and Balaam smote the ass, to turn her into the way.

24 But the Angel of the LORD stood in a path of the vineyards, a wall being on this side, and a wall on that side.

25 And when the ass saw the Angel of the LORD, she thrust herself unto the wall, and 'crushed Balaam's foot against the wall; and he smote her again.

26 And the Angel of the LORD went further, and stood in a narrow place, 'where was no way to turn, either to the right hand or to the left.

27 And when the ass saw the Angel of the LORD, confidence; but this might be done merely to keep up his high reputation: or he might deceive himself; for it is probable, that he outwardly worshipped JEHOVAH.

V. 19-21. After the peremptory answer which God had given Balaam, he should have spoken to this effect; "Say no more to me on this subject, but return home, and make the best terms you can with Israel. They are the people of the true God, whom he is determined to bless; and you can do nothing against them, by stratagem or by power, human or divine: for my part I cannot, I dare not, and I would not for the world, presume to oppose them; so tempt me no more."—The state of Balaam's mind was this: He wanted to do what he knew to be very wicked, and contrary to the express command of God; he had inward checks and restraints which he could not entirely get over; he therefore cast about for ways to reconcile this wickedness to his duty. How great a paradox soever this may appear, as it is indeed a contradiction in terms, it is the very account which the Scripture gives of him! Bp. Butler.—But he was the slave of covetousness, and entertained dishonourable thoughts of God, and supposed that he could be induced to change his determination: therefore the Lord in anger gave him the permission, which he so wickedly and eagerly desired. It seems he was in such haste, that he did not wait the call of Balak's princes, but arose early and prepared for his journey. The clause, "yet the words which I shall say unto thee, that thou shalt do," may be understood either as an injunction, or as a prediction of the event, namely, that he should be constrained to speak the words of God, and not be able to express his own desires.

V. 22. The Lord permits almost an infinity of actions which he does not approve: (Notes, 1 Kings 22:19-23. Job 1:12.) and he is very angry with those, who avail themselves of his permission to gratify their lusts. "They think evil, but God means it unto good." Nay, the motive even of obedience may be so corrupt, that while the action is approved, God may abhor the principle from which it sprang.—Balaam was instigated by covetousness and ambition: (Note, 2 Pet. 2:15, 16.) and he wickedly, with perseverance, sought to curse a people whom the Lord had blessed: yet he seems to have had no attachment to Moab, or ill-will to Israel, except for filthy lucre's sake. The Lord therefore, with evident disapprobation, gave him leave to go with the princes of Moab; of which he eagerly availed himself; and both the motive and conduct displeased the Lord, who therefore met him "as an adversary" in the way.—His avarice was the more inexcusable, as he could already afford to travel with two attendants. Probably, the princes of Moab having been informed of his determination, had gone before to prepare matters for his reception.

V. 23-27. Balaam's eyes being holden that he could not see the angel, who was visible to the ass, was an emblem of the blindness of his mind to that eminent and evident peril into which he was rushing by this presumptuous undertaking. Surely the singular circumstances of this occurrence should she fell down back of Balaam: and Balaam's anger was kindled, and he smote the ass with a staff.

28 And the Lord opened the mouth of the ass, and she said unto Balaam, "What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times?"

29 And Balaam said unto the ass, Because thou hast mocked me: I would there were a sword in mine hand, for now would I kill thee.

30 And the ass said unto Balaam, Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine, unto this day? was I ever wont to do so unto thee? And he said, Nay.

31 Then the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the Angel of the Lord standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand: and he bowed down his head, and fell flat on his face.

32 And the Angel of the Lord said unto him, Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass these three times? behold, I went out to withstand thee, because thy way is perverse before me.

33 And the ass saw me and turned from me these three times: unless she had turned from me, surely now also I had slain thee, and saved her alive.

34 And Balaam said unto the Angel of the Lord, I have sinned; for I knew not that thou stoodest in the way against me: now therefore, if it displease thee, I will get me back again.

35 And the Angel of the Lord said unto Balaam, Go with the men: but only the word that I shall speak unto thee, that thou shalt speak. So Balaam went with the princes of Balak.

36 And when Balak heard that Balaam was come, he went out to meet him unto a city of Moab, which is in the border of Arnon, which is in the utmost coast.

37 And Balak said unto Balaam, Did I not earnestly send unto thee to call thee? wherefore camest thou not unto me? am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour?

38 And Balaam said unto Balak, Lo, I am come unto thee: have I now any power at all to say any thing? the word that God putteth in my mouth, that shall I speak.

39 And Balaam went with Balak, and they came unto Kirjath-huzoth.

40 And Balak offered oxen and sheep, and sent to Balaam, and to the princes that were with him.

41 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Balak took Balaam, and brought him up into the high places of Baal, that thence he might see the utmost part of the people.

have induced him to consider whether he were in the right way or not!—The Angel, &c. Note, 32.

V. 28. The faculty of speech in man is the gift of God, and we cannot comprehend how we ourselves articulate; we need not therefore be surprised that the Lord made use of the mouth of the "ass to rebuke the madness of the prophet," and to shame him by the reproof and by the example of the brute. Satan spake to Eve by a subtle serpent, but the Lord chose to speak to Balaam by a dull ass: for he does not use "enticing words of man's wisdom," but works by instruments and means which men despise.—Some expositors, unable to conceive how an ass could speak, have thought, (in direct opposition to the words of the sacred historian,) that the whole was only a vision: but can they indeed conceive or explain, how God represented these things to Balaam's mind in a vision? If not, the difficulty remains, and Omnipotence must be allowed to have done what man cannot comprehend.

V. 29, 30. The miracle of the ass speaking might astonish Balaam, though that is not recorded; or, having been a magician, he had witnessed or heard of strange, portentous events, and perhaps ascribed it to magic; or the fury of his passion resembled madness, and the prodigy served to increase it.—Balaam was supposed capable of destroying Israel, or at least making way for their destruction, by a curse; yet he could not kill his ass for want of a sword! But the Lord reasoned with him by the mouth of the ass; and, by reminding him of his property in the animal and his benefit from her, and that she had not been accustomed so to behave, he taught him that his conduct was very absurd, and prepared the way for a more full discovery of his wickedness.—The words used on this occasion, seem to imply that Balaam had ridden on this ass from his youth: (marg.) and consequently that she had been a valuable and faithful servant to him.—It must have been peculiarly humiliating to this proud man, who boasted "of his eyes being open, and of seeing the visions of the Almighty," to be reproved and silenced from the mouth of a brute. As the Lord both appeared to the ass and spake by her, before Balaam was enabled to see the vision, he had little reason to boast when the Lord appeared to him and spake by him.

V. 32. Thy way is perverse before me. [From this expression, and from the language of the thirty-fifth verse, "The word that I shall speak unto thee," we may be satisfied that this was the angel of the covenant, the second person of the Trinity, visibly appearing on this occasion.

V. 33. Balaam was thus shown that he owed his life to that supposed ungovernableness of the ass, which he so madly resented.

V. 34, 35. Though Balaam acknowledged that he had sinned; yet he excused himself as being ignorant that any opposition was made to him. He does not appear to have been convinced of the wickedness of his undertaking; and it was with hesitation that he proposed to return, only if he might not proceed except at the hazard of his life. (Is. 57:17.) So reluctant was he to give up "the wages of unrighteousness!" He was therefore again permitted to follow his own foolish devices.

V. 36-38. Balak, hearing that Balaam was at length coming, to show his joy, and to honour him, went to the borders of his land to meet him. Yet he could not but express his surprise, that he had not come at first when such a prospect of honour and emolument opened before him: and Balaam's answer plainly indicated his readiness to concur in Balak's projects, and his strong desire of succeeding, though he feared he should not be able. Nay, he seems to have made a merit of coming through the midst of so much opposition.

V. 40, 41. These sacrifices seem to have been offered to the gods of Moab, by whose aid Balak hoped to prevail over Israel, through Balaam's incantations; for he was not yet aware of Balaam's project of drawing over the God of Israel to the side of Moab; and he therefore propitiated his idols, and invited Balaam, with the princes, to feast upon the sacrifice. After which, without loss of time, the idolatrous king took his covetous prophet to the high places of Baal, that he might both take a view of the Israelites, and curse them by his gods.—"Baal" signifies lord or governor, and was a name common to many idols. Probably this Baal was the same as Chemosh, the god of Moab. (Jer. 48:13, 46.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. Our life is a succession of wanderings which will shortly close upon the brink of the grave: happy they who have an inheritance in the Canaan beyond! with comfort may they sit down on the banks of that Jordan which rolls between, and with composure wait the Lord's call to pass over and possess the promised land. But the ungodly "are consumed with terrors;" though more generally "afraid of them who can only kill the body," than of "Him who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell."—The prosperity of the church, instead of inducing sinners to seek a share in its felicity, generally excites their envy, hatred, and terror, and stirs up the spirit of persecution; but the crafty methods, which ungodly politicians take to secure themselves, generally involve them in more speedy ruin.—That propensity to religion, which results from reason and conscience, and the corrupted remains of tradition, is, through the depravity of our nature, generally productive of absurd superstitions and abominable idolatries; by means of which Satan, that ambitious spirit, is consulted and depended on for information and assistance; his ministers are caressed and honoured; and his rites attended on with immense degradation, trouble, and expense. (Notes, Is. 57:9, 10. Mic. 6:6-8. Col. 2:20-23.)—Great knowledge of doctrinal truth may fill the minds of very wicked men; many convictions may disquiet their consciences; and excellent words may proceed from their lips; but the smallest degree of sanctifying grace is infinitely preferable to the most shining talents, or the most splendid gifts of knowledge, utterance, and eloquence; yea, to those of prophecy and miracles, by which hypocrites have sometimes become more extensively mischievous, illustriously infamous, heinously criminal, and exquisitely miserable.—Let us then covet earnestly and diligently that best gift of divine love, which springs from faith and hope, and never faileth, but shall endure for ever.—If we had learned to lay up our treasure in heaven, and to seek that honour which cometh from God only, and to be content with food and raiment; and if covetousness, ambition, and sensuality were greatly mortified within us, we should have little to hope or fear from man and be removed far out of the way of temptation: but, as there is so much of these evils still remaining in the heart, we all have cause to dread and shun those connexions, which almost every one covets; I mean connexions with ungodly men, who are able to promote us to honour and affluence. These are especially dangerous to such as are called to speak in the name of the Lord: for by their influence, by fair promises exciting large expectations, and by showing great kindness and flattering respect, they prevail with many to sacrifice conscience, judgment, character, and the fear of God, to the humour and inclination of their patrons, and to flatter and countenance their sinful practices.—The attraction is almost irresistible, the heart is deceitful: and who, that values his soul and knows himself, would venture into such a perilous situation?—Therefore "avoid them, pass not near them, turn from them, and pass away."

V. 8-21. There have always been many "who loved the wages of unrighteousness," and paid their court to those who could bid highest and reward best. Some of this character act the hypocrite, and ostentatiously avow their knowledge of God, and intimacy with him, to cloak their wicked intentions; nay, they in this manner deceive themselves, calling "the Lord their God," while they neither keep his commandments nor seek his salvation.—These men do not hate sin, and they love its wages; and thus they mistake gain for godliness, and covetousness for wisdom. (Note, 1 Tim. 6:6-10.) Fear restrains them for a time from those outward crimes, which they are inwardly desirous of committing; and this restraint they mistake for conscientiousness. Convictions struggle against temptations, though overcome by them; and this they mistake for the conflict between flesh and spirit. (Note, Rom. 7:18-21. conclusion.) But they parley with the enemy, and nibble at the bait; they seek excuses, and watch for opportunities; they wrest the Scriptures, explain away the prohibitions or threatening, or seek diligently for some erasion; and even seem to crave leave to commit their darling sin.—Thus they provoke God to "give them up to their own hearts' lusts;" Satan is permitted to increase the force of the temptation; providential dispensations are misinterpreted into a favourable indication; and, by the ingenuity of a wicked heart, aided and prompted by the enemy, they at length find some method of expecting impunity, in following their own wicked inclinations. (Note, 2 Thes. 2:8-12.)—When persons are once judiciously "given over to a strong delusion to believe a lie," all their boasted knowledge and wisdom fail them; and they are left to form such dishonourable notions of God, such erroneous opinions in religion, and such absurd projects in practice, as evidence their folly and ignorance, and expose their desperate wickedness. Nor does this appear more surprising in any thing, than in their strong confidence that the Lord favours them, and their presumptuous hope that he will side with them, notwithstanding the manifest iniquity of their conduct.

V. 22-41. The Lord knows how to restrain the most desperate rebels, and over rule their efforts against him and his cause, to his own glory and the good of his church. By the way, as well as at the end of their course, he will manifest himself to be their adversary: and though they be not convinced, but rush through every hindrance to the gratification of their lusts, these obstructions will one day rise up in judgment against them to their confusion; and every check, which stopped the sinner's career for a time, but did not hinder his continuance in sin, will increase his final condemnation.—Such is man's folly and madness, that, with all his boasted powers, he may be sent to school to the most stupid of the animals: for though God hath "formed us wiser than the beasts of the field," sin hath made us more foolish: (Job 35:11. Prov. 6:6. Is. 13.) and the conduct of the ox and the ass towards their possessors, yea, their inhuman abusers, forms a continued, though silent reproach of our forgetfulness of God, of our ingratitude and rebellion; and may lead us to conceive in what language they might address us, and how they might plead the cause of their Creator, and their own cause, against us, to our shame and confusion, if the Lord should open their mouths. How might they reproach multitudes with their abuse of God's gift, in the cruel tyranny exercised upon them! with their senseless anger vented in oaths and cursings, revilings and unmerciful blows furiously bestowed upon a brute beast, even to their own loss. How might they expose man's cruelty to his own species, yea, to his own soul and body; and his excessive animal indulgence; as if his understanding only served him to invent methods of being more exquisitely a brute, by refining in sensual gratification!—Little cause then have we to be proud of our reason, which fails to preserve us from such absurd and destructive excesses; or of the faculty of speech which is so shamefully abused; and it may serve to abate our self-adoration, to reflect that, if God pleases, he can make a dull ass see further, and speak better, than any of us. Let us then watch and pray against corrupt and unreasonable passions; and listen to the voice of God, as speaking to us by all the creatures with which we are surrounded.—How little are the people of God in general aware of the machinations, which are forming against them; whilst all the policy and power on earth and in hell are combined for their destruction! (Notes, Job 1:9-12. P. O. 6-12. Note, Ps. 37:12-15.) Yet they need not fear, with distressing anxiety; for "he that keepeth Israel neither slumbereth nor sleepeth." The Lord sees through every plot, and "no weapon formed against his church shall prosper." (Notes, Is. 54:15-17. Rom. 8:35-39.) He restrains, intimidates, and infatuates, as he pleases. He hath blessed true believers, and of him alone it can be said, "He whom thou bledest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed." Let us therefore cast our lot among them, and when we shall be safe and happy; "for if God be for us, who can be against us?" "O LORD God of hosts, blessed is the man who trusteth in thee!" Oh, give us true faith, and increase it more and more!

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIII. V. 1, 2. Balaam had heard, that the Israelites had an altar, on which they offered bulls and rams, and in doing this were accepted by JEHOVAH; and he seems to have foolishly fancied, that by going beyond them in the number of altars and sacrifices, the Moabites might draw the Lord over to their side, and obtain leave to curse and destroy Israel. It does not appear from the history, that he either dissuaded Balak from his purpose of warring against Israel, or exhorted him and his people to repentance: but in the language of authority or consequence, he directed Balak to build "seven altars, &c." and Balak, with great obsequiousness, complied with his expensive demands. It is evident that Balaam intended these sacrifices to be offered to the God of Israel; and probably he influenced Balak to join him in this respect likewise. (4)

V. 3. The Lord had before met Balaam in anger, and greatly terrified him: but, having offered such costly sacrifices, he now hoped that he would countenance his design; yet conscious guilt induced him to add "peradventure."—Probably Balaam used incantations in his retirement, to obtain a favourable meeting from the Lord, such as he had formerly employed in his soothsayings. (23. Note, 24:2.)—Formal converts very frequently intermingle their superstitious, philosophical, or carnal notions, with the truths, ordinances, and precepts of God; and from this source, almost all the corruptions of the Christian religion have been deduced.

V. 4-6. The Lord had important designs in meeting and speaking to this wicked man, notwithstanding the unwarranted method in which he sought him. He thus encouraged and admonished Israel, and his church in all ages; he warned their enemies; and he discovered the depths of wickedness which are in man's heart.—Balaam, instead of being ashamed of his atrocious wickedness, seems to have boasted of his service, in prevailing on Balak to offer so many and costly sacrifices to JEHOVAH. But he was blind indeed, to suppose that the God of Heaven would be pleased with sacrifices, offered in hypocrisy, without repentance, faith, love, and obedience; merely out of covetousness and malice, and with an intention of cursing and destroying his people! The Lord however, gave him his message which he could not but deliver; (Note, 22:19-21.) and he soon returned to Balak and his princes, who doubtless had joined with Balaam, in praying for leave to curse and destroy Israel. (Mark 5:7, 12.)

V. 7. 8. Balaam began his speech in the solemn style of prophecy, which approached that of poetry: and the Lord, probably by filling him with the dread of his power and wrath, constrained him reluctantly to pronounce blessings on his people. He guided the mouth of this wicked man, to speak words as contrary to the desires of his heart, as those of the ass were superior to the powers of the brute: and if we duly advert to the temper of the speaker, we shall perceive that the Lord spake by Balaam as entirely as by the ass; that the divine power was as really and effectually put forth in this case as in the other; and that Balaam had no more to glory in than the animal, but much indeed to be ashamed of. (Note, 22:28).—Balaam was sent for from Aram, or Mesopotamia, to curse Israel, and thus disdainfully to set them at defiance; and he confessed that he came with that intent, in order that Balak might war against them. But, as the Lord had not "cursed and defied them," (that is, had not rejected them, or determined to treat them as enemies,) he would not allow Balaam to curse them; though "the curse causeless" could have done them no hurt, and might have deceived and hardened Balak.—Defy. (7) Notes, 1 Sam. 17:8-10, 25, 26, 42-44.

V. 9. Beholding the regular encampment of the Israelites, separate from other people, Balaam was led to speak language suited, not only to that situation, but to the peculiar favour shown them, and to their separation from other nations, by laws, religion, and character, as a holy people; in all which they were a type of true Christians.—The words, however, are a most extraordinary prophecy, which has now been accomplishing for above three thousand years. The distinction between Israel and the Gentiles, may in some sense be traced back to the calling of Abraham; it was recognised and established by the giving of the law and the Sinai-covenant; and after the final captivity of the ten tribes, the Jews, (as the nation was thenceforth generally called,) were kept a distinct people through the Babylonian captivity, and in subsequent ages, by their peculiar way of living, even when among other nations, which was always noted, and made a reproach to them, as the effect of bigotry. Since the destruction of Jerusalem, they have been scattered as aliens through many countries: yet they still "dwell alone, and are not reckoned among the nations;" for they have been preserved from being confounded with their conquerors and oppressors in foreign lands, in a manner absolutely unprecedented in the history of the world. (Note, Jer. 30:10, 11.) This prediction is the more wonderful, as the Israelites had at this time no settlement; and their peculiar laws and constitution could be very little known to Balaam. How then, except by divine revelation, could he possibly have foreseen this striking peculiarity of that people?—The distinction itself between Jews and Gentiles, which subsisted in every age, is a fulfilment of it.

V. 10. The multitudes of Israel were innumerable as the particles of the dust, according to the promises made to their fathers. (Marg. Ref. r.) Even "the fourth part" of them, or one of their four grand encampments, could not be numbered.—As Balaam spoke the words of God, with some understanding of their meaning, and some conviction of their truth, we may consider the concluding part of this verse, as an important ancient testimony to the doctrines of the immortality of the soul, and of a future state of retribution. He not only bore testimony to the temporal felicity of Israel, and to their character as a righteous people; but he also acknowledged, that the righteous are happy in death, and beyond it.—That calmness with which the true believer expects and submits to the stroke of death; that hope full of immortality which supports him at the solemn season; and that prospect of eternal felicity in another world, in which he rejoices, and which he recommends to others; render his latter end desirable, even in the judgment of those wicked people, whose convictions respecting a future judgment check them in their sinful pursuits with fears of eternal misery; and who would be glad of deliverance from the horror of dying in sin, and sinking into hell, if it could be obtained without repentance and self-denial. They wish, they hope, and in some sense they intend, to "die the death of the righteous;" but the love of wealth, honour or pleasure, in one form or other, keeps them from living the life of the righteous. They therefore procrastinate, and quiet their consciences with the hope of future amendment; or they rest in some false confidence, some superficial reformation, or external change; or they despise that only salvation, by which a sinner can be righteous before God. (Note and P. O. Luke 13:22-30.) Thus many, who wish to "die the death of the righteous," live impenitent and perish in sin, as Balaam did.—The object now before us is the most astonishing in the world. A very wicked man, under a deep sense of God and religion, persisting still in his wickedness, and preferring the wages of unrighteousness, even when he had before him a lively view of death, and that approaching period of his days, which should deprive him of all the advantages, for which he was prostituting himself; and likewise a prospect, whether certain or uncertain, of a future state of retribution! All this joined with an explicit wish, that when he was to leave this world he might be in the condition of a righteous man! Good God, what inconsistency, what perplexity is here! With what different views of things, with what contradictory principles of action, must such a mind be torn and distracted! It was not an unthinking carelessness by which he ran headlong into vice and folly, without making a stand to ask himself what he was doing; no, he acted upon the cool motives of interest.... Neither was he totally callous to impressions of religion, what we call abandoned; for he absolutely denied to curse Israel. When reason resumes her place, ... he owns and feels, and is actually under the influence of the divine authority, whilst he is carrying on his views to the grave, the end of all temporal greatness; under this sense of things, with the better character and more desirable state present, ... full before him, ... in his thoughts, in his wishes, voluntarily to choose the worse! What fatality is here! Or, how otherwise can such a character be explained? And yet, strange as it may appear, it is not altogether an uncommon one. Nay, with some small alterations and put a little lower, it is applicable to a considerable part of the world... For if the reasonable choice be seen and acknowledged, and yet men make the unreasonable one; is not this the same inconsistency which appeared unaccountable?... Men's strong attachments to this present world; their hopes, fears, and pursuits, are beyond all proportion to the known value of the things they respect.... They try to make a composition with the Almighty.... Those of his commands they will obey; but as to the others, they will make all atonements in their power.... Indulgences before, or atonements afterwards, are all the same: and they add faint hopes and half-resolves of making a change at one time or other." Bp. Butler.

V. 12. Balaam attempted to make a merit of necessity; and when he was constrained to bless Israel, he would be thought very obedient to the Lord in so doing. Yet after he had declared that God had not cursed them, and he could not, he persisted in his endeavour. Indeed, he seems to have hoped, that he should at length obtain permission in this respect; for he had been allowed to come at the second time, though this had been refused him at the first. (Notes, 22:9-14, 19-21.)

V. 13. Balak seems to have thought that Balaam's mind was indisposed for cursing Israel, by seeing their numerous and orderly encampments all at once; he therefore hoped to prevail, in cursing one division first, against which he probably intended to commence hostilities. Or he superstitiously thought one place more suited to the purpose than another. (Note, 1 Kings, 20:23-25.)

V. 19, 20. Men are deceitful, changeable, easily induced to revoke their engagements, or unable to fulfil them. On the contrary, God is perfectly sincere, faithful, unchangeable, almighty: and though, after the manner of man, he is said to repent of the kindness that he has shown, when his creatures by ingratitude provoke him to withdraw his bounty; and of his judgments denounced, when sinners repent, or when, in answer to prayer, he delays the execution of them; (Notes, Gen. 6:6, 7. Jer. 18:7-10.) yet in the event it will be found, that every promise and engagement made to believers was exactly accomplished, and all his threatenings against unbelievers completely and finally executed.—This declaration, by the mouth of Balaam, had a peculiar reference to the state of Israel: God had absolutely determined to bless them; he had plainly revealed this purpose, and Balaam had reluctantly shown it to Balak. Yet they were vainly attempting, by importunity, to induce the Lord to alter his mind and revoke his word! Balaam, however, was constrained to own that "he had received to bless;" (commandment is not in the original:) blessings on Israel were put into his mouth, and he could by no means reverse them.

V. 21. The national sins of Israel, in former years, had been pardoned, and the people were not at that time generally guilty of idolatry or rebellion, but were in an obedient disposition, had much true religion among them, and were comparatively righteous, and favoured by the Lord. The nation was also a type of believers, in whom God beholds not iniquity or perverseness; none allowed, none unrepented or unsubdued, and none unpardoned. (Notes, Jer. 50:20. Mic. 7:18-20.) While this was the case, God, as reigning over them, protecting them, and leading them forth to victory, was among them; of whose power they had so much experience, that they were inspired with triumphant confidence; and at his word were ready to shout, or blow the trumpet for the battle, and attack their enemies with assurance of success.

V. 22. The word rendered unicorn, is variously interpreted; but the rhinoceros is most generally supposed to be meant.—Israel, strengthened by the Lord, who brought him out of Egypt, was as invincible among the nations, as the rhinoceros among quadrupeds, and was as terrible to them. (Marg. Ref. 24:8.)

V. 23. It seems here to be taken for granted, that Satan exercised some power in answer to the expectations of those who used enchantments. But Israel was so immediately under the divine protection, that nothing of this kind could injure him.—Some, however, render the words as meaning, 'hat no enchantment or divination was used in Israel; and consequently the miracles of Moses were wrought by the power of God. (Marg.)—The favour at that time shown to Israel was a specimen of the protection always afforded the people of God; the remembrance of which would encourage the faith, and inspire the praises, of future ages; while with admiration they would consider what God had wrought. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Thes. 1:5-10, latter part.)

V. 24. At length Balaam not only blessed Israel, but likewise denounced the doom of all their enemies; which might have been a warning to Balak, and to himself also, to desist from the vain and perilous attempt. (Note, Gen. 49:8, 9.)

Drink the blood, &c. The wild beasts gorge the blood, as well as devour the flesh, of the slaughtered prey: and it is undisputable, that many tribes of barbarians have actually, in the triumph of insulting, revengeful victory, drunk the blood of their enemies. But as far as Israel is concerned, it can only signify the completeness of their victories.

V. 25. Balak seems still to have thought Balaam's blessings as efficacious as his curses, and therefore wished to silence him; for he yet hoped to prevail against Israel. (Note, 22:6.)

V. 27. It will please God. At length Balak spoke as one, who had entered into Balaam's original plan; and who hoped, by change of place, (and perhaps times or days also,) and by repeating his expensive sacrifices, to render God propitious to him, and so to obtain leave to curse Israel; though Balaam himself seems almost to have despaired of prevailing.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. Proud and wicked men spare no pains, and grudge no expense, when they imagine that they can purchase the favour of God, or induce him to connive at their mischievous designs. And such is man's ignorance of the divine perfections and of true religion, that multitudes find teachers to encourage them in these vain hopes; while they neither mortify their lusts, nor humble themselves before God: and these in return have their covetousness gratified, by such pupils, and for such instructions!—Mere Pharisees have frequently exceeded the true people of God in the measure of external services, and of partial mortification: and not knowing of any thing more excellent, they are thus confirmed in self-confidence and self-preference; they "trust in themselves that they are righteous, and despise others;" and even boast of their services, at the very time when their hearts are full of malice and wickedness! But the Lord abhors pompous externals and superstitions, nay, even the most zealous attendance on his own ordinances, while the heart remains destitute of repentance, faith, and love to him and to his servants; and still more, when this devotion is the cloak of hypocrisy, and covers injustice and oppression.—(Notes, Prov. 15:8, 9. Is. 1:10-15. Jer. 7:8-11. Am. 5:21-24.)—The spiritual worship of his people is of another kind: a broken and contrite, a believing and thankful, a pure and upright heart, are more suitable to his nature, and more precious in his sight, than "thousands of rams, and ten thousands of rivers of oil."—As true Christians are peculiarly favoured, so are they peculiarly characterized: they "dwell alone;" they are despised by the surrounding multitudes, whom they pity while separated from their company, and with whom they desire no fellowship: their maxims, customs, laws, and conduct, are dissimilar from those of all other men: their inheritance, their home, their citizenship are in heaven: their affections, conversation, pursuits, and pleasures, are heavenly: and, while they are deemed "the filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things," and not fit to live; the Lord accounts them "the excellent of the earth," "of whom the world is not worthy." (Note, Phil. 3:20, 21. Col. 3:1-4. Heb. 11:35-38.) Though few, hitherto in every place, when compared with the ungodly, they are very numerous in all: may the Lord multiply them a hundred fold, how many soever they be! Though despised by those who know them not, they often attract the reverence even of such wicked men as are acquainted with them; but it is frequently accompanied with hatred and resentment. Yet many of the wicked, while through domineering lusts and prevailing temptations, they espouse an opposite interest, and lead a contrary life, secretly account the righteous happy; and wish to have their lot with them at death, and in the eternal world: but in vain; for can they who, in defiance of conviction, choose to serve Satan and their sins in this world, reasonably expect to be numbered with the saints in glory everlasting? There are indeed many whom the devil and his servants do not honour with their hatred: but despise, and only despise, as suspecting no harm to the cause from their example, influence, or endeavours. But let not such mere professors of religion deem themselves interested in those precious privileges which belong to the true Israel of God.

V. 13-30. Notwithstanding disappointments and alarms, the lusts of wicked men revive and reign: for, while some are pushed forward by implacable malice and envy, others are induced to concur in persecution by insatiable avarice and restless ambition. But the Lord "is of one mind, who can turn him?" He will infallibly perform his kindest, largest promises to his people; and execute his most terrible denunciations on his enemies: and, while earth and hell combine their power and policy to prevent it, the Lord "sitteth in the heavens," "hath them in derision," and will soon "speak to them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure." (Note, Ps. 24-6.) Let believers then rejoice in his unchangeableness, his truth, and power; but let the wicked tremble at the alarming thought, and make haste to "flee from the wrath to come." If the Lord sees that we trust in his mercy, and accept of his salvation; that we do not indulge in any secret sin, or continue in presumptuous rebellion, but uprightly endeavour to serve and glorify him; we may be sure that our past offences are pardoned, and "buried in the depths of the sea," no more to hurt us, than if they had never been committed. Then indeed the Lord hath blessed us, and "given commandment to bless us," and he will never suffer it to be reversed: and if Satan cannot deceive or defile us, he cannot hurt us by machinations or temptations, by enchantments or divinations. The Lord, having all hearts and all tongues in his hand, can not only restrain the malice of our enemies, but constrain them to speak well of us, and do well to us; to confess their impotency, to condemn themselves, and to foretell their own misery with their own mouth, even while they madly persist in their destructive opposition; and to acknowledge, with reluctant admiration, the work of God for us and in us.—Well then may the believer triumph in his King, the Lord of Hosts, and re-echo with grateful exultation, "What hath God wrought!" Oh, the wonders of his providence and grace! (Note, Ps. 126:1-3.) The wonders of his redeeming love, of his pardoning mercy, of his new-creating Spirit! What a change in our state, our character, and our prospects! Every former mercy now becomes an earnest of still further blessings; and from past deliverances we infer the certainty of final victory and eternal triumphs. Thus shall every true believer, thus shall the whole church of God, be "unto him for a name, and for a praise," whilst with their eyes they shall behold the destruction of the wicked. But is this the reader's character and felicity? Let us seriously examine ourselves, and earnestly entreat the Lord to decide this infinitely important question. To this let us aspire; let us pursue with unremitting diligence and undiverted attention: let us watch and pray always, for our enemies are vigilant, indefatigable, and malicious; and surely we ought to be as unwearied in glorifying God, and doing good, as his enemies are in doing mischief. Even Balaam's retirement to meet the Lord, and Balak's assiduous attention to his burnt-sacrifices, and rising up to hear the message from God, may furnish us with profitable hints; if we apply them to ourselves, in pursuing nobler objects, from higher motives, and for other purposes.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIV. V. 1, 2. It is evident that Balaam had used enchantments, or incantations of some kind, even when he went to meet the Lord; but he had been constrained to return with answers the very reverse of his wishes and intentions; and therefore he deemed it to no purpose to repeat them. (Note, 23:3.) It is not agreed among expositors, nor is it easy to decide, whether he desperately determined to curse Israel without permission, and thus to satisfy Balak and earn his reward, yet was constrained on the contrary to pronounce further blessings; or whether, under a pang of conviction, he desisted from his purpose for the present, and freely yielded himself to the powerful impulse

V. 3, 4. These verses may more literally be rendered, "He took up his parable and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eye was shut hath said; he hath said who heard the words of God, who saw the vision of the Almighty; falling, and his eyes were opened." The word, rendered "are open," is generally agreed to signify shut, (margin), and the clause "into a trance" is not in the original. Balaam is supposed to refer to the time when his ass, seeing the Angel, (whom he himself could not see,) fell down with him; and then his eyes were opened, and he lay prostrate on the earth. But perhaps he also meant that his eyes had been shut, when he thought of cursing Israel, but were now opened to perceive that the Israelites were blessed; or that his bodily eyes were shut in his visions, while those of his understanding were opened.

V. 5, 6. As valleys verdant, fruitful, and widely extended; as luxuriant gardens on the banks of a fertilizing river; as aromatic trees diffusing a fragrant smell, or as cedars most stately to behold, planted as it were by God himself in a well-watered, fertile soil, and wanting no human culture;—such did the camps of Israel appear, and such would be the prosperity of that favoured people!

Lign-aeol. (6) Or, the wood of aloes; "an aromatic tree, . . . which widely diffuses a very agreeable smell."—Robertson. The word is rendered aloes, Prov. 7:17, as the feminine plural is, Ps. 45:8. (Heb. 9.) Cant. 4:14.

V. 7-9. Israel would be abundantly replenished with heavenly blessings; and, as seed sown in a well-watered place, so his multitudes would increase still more and more. At length his king would be higher than Agag; which seems to have been the name of the several kings of Amalek in succession; though some think that Agag, whom Saul conquered and Samuel slew, was foretold by name long before his birth, as Josiah and Cyrus afterwards were. (Note, 1 Sam. 15:32, 33.) The Amalekites were at this time very powerful, and their king renowned and prosperous: but it was here predicted, that Israel should in due time be governed by more prosperous princes, who would be far greater and more celebrated than those of the Amalekites. Saul, the first king of Israel, who seems to have been especially intended, subjugated the Amalekites and their king: but afterwards the kings of Israel were far more highly exalted.—(Note, 20.) The kingdom of Christ, however, is generally allowed to be predicted; as exalted far above the highest of all earthly kingdoms.—Perhaps Balaam hoped at last to share the blessedness of Israel by thus blessing them; but he did it reluctantly, and not from love, and therefore he was not included. He however predicted Israel's successes under their most prosperous kings, and the spiritual prosperity and felicity of the church of Christ, and of all its cordial friends: and warned all its enemies, from Balak to his latest successors, to desist from the ruinous contest, involving himself also in the general sentence. (Margin. Ref. Notes, 23:23, 24, Gen. 12:1-3, 49:8, 9.)

V. 10, 11. Balak was at length enraged to the greatest degree, and expressed his indignation in the most furious manner: and, not without a mixture of scorn and disdain to Balaam, for having missed so fair a prospect of advancing himself from regard to the God of Israel, he sternly commanded him to depart immediately.

V. 12, 13. Balaam had repeatedly confessed his inability to go beyond the word of the Lord; but here he appears disposed, not only to vindicate his conduct to Balak, but also 12 And Balaam said unto Balak, "Spake I not also to thy messengers, which thou sentest unto me, saying,

13 If Balaam would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the commandment of the LORD, to do either good or bad of mine own mind; but what the LORD saith, that will I speak?"

14 And now, behold, I go unto my people: come, therefore, and I will advertise thee what this people shall do to thy people in the latter days.

15 ¶ And he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said;

16 He hath said, "which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the Most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open;

Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth.

18 And Edom shall be a possession: Seir also shall be a possession for his enemies; and Israel shall do valiantly.

19 Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth of the city.

20 And when he looked on Amalek, he took up his parable, and said, Amalek was the first of the nations, but this latter end shall be that he perish for ever.

21 And he looked on the Kenites; and took up his parable, and said, Strong is thy dwelling-place, and thou puttest thy nest in a rock:

22 Nevertheless, the Kenite shall be wasted, until Asshur shall carry thee away captive.

to intimate, that from the first he had only waited to know the will of the Lord, that he might obey it. (Marg. Ref. Note, 22:18.)

V. 14. Balaam, probably in a measure calmed by Balaam's exposition, permitted him to proceed.—As the word rendered advertise, generally signifies counsel, many think it refers to the diabolical advice which Balaam gave Balak, either at this time or afterwards: but this is not probable; because what follows relates to those things which Israel would do to Moab, not what Moab should do to Israel; and the expression "the latter days" always denotes a very distant period. (Marg. Ref. e.)

V. 16. (Note, 1, 2.) Balaam here spake with increasing confidence of the revelations made to him; and though similar words were used by true prophets, yet from so wicked a man they have an air of ostentation. He indeed seems to have courted applause and admiration, when ready to despair of accumulating riches. "The secret of the LORD is with them that fear him;" (Note, Ps. 25:14.) but Balaam had little reason to boast of his knowledge of God and heavenly things.

V. 17. Balaam's introduction to the subsequent prediction is very remarkable; and implies that it related to events which could only be known by the Spirit of prophecy, enabling him to penetrate into the remotest futurity.—Balaam would see Him, the grand Object to be made known, but not at present; he would contemplate his glory, but at a great distance. (Notes, Job 19:23-27.) Some think that he also forebode his own doom, as sentenced to "depart accursed," by the Judge at his second coming. (Notes, Matt. 25:41-46. Luke 16:22, 23.)—The STAR coming out of Jacob, and the SCEPTRE, or regal authority, rising in Israel, may refer in a subordinate sense to David, as reigning over Israel with great reputation, and gaining considerable victories over the Moabites and others; and to the kings of his race as ruling over Judah, and still further subjugating the Moabites and the neighbouring nations. But the prophecy had its full accomplishment in the exalted Kingdom and spiritual victories of Jesus Christ. (Note, Gen. 49:10.)—Some suppose, that by Sheth, an ancestor or head of some Moabitish tribe is meant: but others think that Seth the son of Adam and the progenitor of the whole post-diluvian world, is intended; and this seems the best-grounded interpretation.—The word rendered "destroy," is only used in this place and one more in Scripture; (Is. 22:5.) and some think it here means build up, for it is derived from a word which signifies a wall; yet, as it seems to be there properly rendered "breaking down," its use in that passage does not favour this interpretation.—The LXX have ῥωπονεύει, will lead captive, or spoil. If then it means destroy, or spoil, it may refer to Christ's subverting the strong foundations of the several great monarchies, which have successively prevailed on earth, with that of Satan, the god and prince of this world; and subverting the corrupt state of things among all the posterity of Adam, by setting up his heavenly kingdom, and filling the earth with his glory. (Notes, Dan. 2:14, 45. Rev. 20:1-6.) The Jewish writers in general interpret this prophecy principally of the Messiah.—Onkelos, one of their most renowned paraphrasts, has these words:

"When a prince shall arise of the house of Jacob, and Christ shall be anointed of the house of Israel; he shall slay the princes of Moab, and rule over all the sons of men." The rest agree with him.—Had the house of David in general been meant, a single star would hardly have been mentioned. A Star was the known emblem of the Messiah; and one of the impostors, who pretended to be the Messiah in the primitive times, called himself Barchochebas, or the son of a star.

Our Lord calls himself, "The bright and morning Star." (Note, Rev. 22:16, 17.) and the Christian fathers were generally of opinion, that this prophecy being known in the East, prepared the way for the wise men following the star which appeared at the birth of Christ. (Note, Matt. 2:1, 2.) In this grand and spiritual sense of the prophecy, Israel represents the true church of God, and Moab and Edom her enemies. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18, 19. The marginal references show the fulfilment of this prophecy in the victories of David and Israel under him and his descendants, which were typical of the triumphs of David's Son, who shall destroy all "that will not have him to reign over them," however they may attempt to secure themselves. David and Solomon had indeed extensive dominions in those regions; yet not answerable to the words, "He that shall have dominion," which emphatically describe Christ, "the King of kings, and Lord of lords." (Note, Rev. 19:11-16.)

V. 20. The Amalekites constituted one of the most ancient and prosperous of the nations, and they were the first who attacked the Israelites; (marg.) but Balaam predicted their final destruction; and thus, without knowing it, confirmed the sentence which the Lord by Moses had denounced against them. (Notes, Ex. 17:14-16.) This prophecy was accomplished by Saul and David, after whose days but few vestiges of that once flourishing people can be traced; and no history now remains of them.

V. 21, 22. Jethro, a Midianite, is called a Kenite, (Judg. 1:16.) and it is most probable the Midianites in general are here meant; who, dwelling in a rocky country, deemed themselves safe from the assaults of their enemies. But, notwithstanding this, they were wasted by the Israelites; till at length they were carried captive by the Assyrians, as it is supposed, about the time of the captivity of the ten tribes. The Kenites indeed are mentioned among the nations whose land the Lord engaged to give to the posterity of Abraham; (Gen. 15:19.) but they seem to have been extinct before Israel conquered Canaan, as they are not once mentioned in the history; and they could not be the people intended by Balaam, who perhaps saw at a distance the rocks and fastnesses of the Midianites.

V. 23, 24. Having paused awhile, Balaam seems to have sighed, and made this exclamation; either meaning that the predicted desolations would be so dreadful, that it would be miserable to live during such calamities; or that the time was so distant, that all who then heard him would have been dead a long time before it arrived. He might refer to the desolations by the Assyrians which he had predicted; or rather to those by the Greeks and Romans, as the next clause may properly be rendered "For ships shall come," &c.—The coasts or isles of Chittim always, in Scripture, mean the regions of Europe, bordering on the Mediterranean; especially the Greeks or Romans. The passage is therefore an evident prediction of the victories of the Greeks, or Macedonians, under Alexander and his successors; and of those of the Romans after them. The latter especially, coming from far in ships, overturned the several kingdoms in the western part of Asia, and possessed them; causing dreadful afflictions to the people, who inhabited the ancient Assyria; but still greater to the Hebrews, especially in the last destruction of Jerusalem. And they have ever since been tyrannizing, in one form or other, over the world and the church; but shall at length be destroyed as entirely as the Amalekites were. This part of the prediction is not yet fulfilled. (Notes, Rev. 18:18.)—It is well worthy our notice, that the final destruction of Amalek and Rome is foretold; but only the afflictions of tim, and shall afflict Asshur, and shall afflict Eber, and he also shall perish for ever.

25 And Balaam rose up, and went and returned to his place: and Balak also went his way.

CHAPTER XXV.

Asshur and Eber. The regions intended by Asshur remained but a short time under the dominion of the Romans, and were afterwards again governed by their own princes; and the Hebrews continue a distinct and numerous, though oppressed and scattered people to this day, evidently in order to the accomplishment of the prophecies respecting their conversion to Christ, and their subsequent prosperity; and this is one good proof that the Hebrews were meant, and not any other obscure tribe, as some think.—What a surprising series of prophecy have we here in few words, which in former accomplishments hath already evidenced to successive generations the divine authority of the Scriptures; and shall to future ages demonstrate the same truth with undeniable evidence! “Thus,” says Dr. Lightfoot, “Balaam, instead of cursing the church, curseth Amalek the first, and Rome the last, enemy of the church.”—His bearing witness to Moses and Israel, is somewhat like Judas’s attesting the innocence of Christ.” Bp. Newton.

V. 25. Though Balaam for the present desisted from his purpose of cursing Israel; yet he was not rendered more friendly to them, or cured of his avarice, which at length suggested to him a still more diabolical plan.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. The enemies of the church may renew their attacks, or vary them as they please; yet they can gain no real advantage: for it pleases the Lord to bless his people, and he will make all their opposers see, and feel, and acknowledge it; which will fill them with rage and desperation. Nay, in some cases, they are constrained to allow the excellence of the righteous, as well as to forebode their prosperity. Under the protection of Judah’s Lion, believers securely rest; and whoever disturbs them, will stir him up as an enemy: for he only suffers the malice of the wicked to proceed, till it hath accomplished his purposes for the good of his people, and he then arises to execute vengeance on their oppressors. (Notes, Ps. 76:10. Is. 10:5-7, 12-19.) But while he renders those, who would curse or injure his servants, most miserable under his awful displeasure, he abundantly blesses all who heartily pray for them and seek their peace.—They, who are kept from worldly honour and affluence by an upright heart and a good conscience, will be great gainers: and the minister of Christ especially, who faithful to his trust, with meekness and firmness, reproves the wickedness of those, who had thought to promote him to honour, will have “a hundredfold more in this present time, and in the world to come everlasting life.” But such persons as have light enough in their minds, and restraint enough upon their consciences, to induce their hesitation at going the whole length which a wicked patron may require; and thus lose his favour, and hinder their own preferment, continuing still the slaves of sin, and the enemies of God; are very miserable in this world, and likely to be so in the world to come. Let us not then attempt to serve God and Mammon, or halt between JEHOVAH and Baal: but let us follow the Lord fully, and he will make up every loss to us; while the consent of wicked men in sin, will at length issue in bitter hatred and severe recriminations.

V. 14-25. Many force the miseries coming upon others, who do not suspect far greater and nearer miseries which await themselves. (Note, 31:8.) But what benefit would accrue to us, what cause should we have to glory or rejoice, if we “understood all mysteries and all knowledge;” if we could penetrate the secrets of the most remote futurity, and develop the book of the divine decrees; “if we saw the visions of the Almighty, and knew the knowledge of the Most High,” and had our eyes open to see things hidden from all others, “since the foundation of the world;” while distant nations and successive ages were destined to celebrate our fame; if at the same time we remained the slaves of covetousness, ambition, lust, or malice; impenitent and unpardoned, under the wrath of God, doomed “to the fire that never shall be quenched, and the worm that never dieth?”—All these endowments would but aggravate our guilt, and enhance our condemnation. Nor is there any indissoluble bond between extensive and exact knowledge, even in theological subjects, and “that holiness without which no man shall see the Lord.” Let us then “take heed lest the light which is in us be darkness; for if it should prove so, alas! how great will that darkness be!”

2 And they called the people unto the sacrifices of their gods: and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods.

3 And Israel joined himself unto Baal-peor: and the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel.

4 And the Lord said unto Moses, Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Israel.

5 And Moses said unto the judges of Israel, Slay ye every one his men that were joined unto Baal-peor.

(Note, Matt. 6:22, 23.) Let us seriously examine whether, or in what respects, our knowledge, attainments, experience, or profession, excel those of Balaam. “No fluency nor excellency of speech, even in preaching or in prayer; no gifts of knowledge or prophecy; no “visions and revelations of the Lord;” are intrinsically and decidedly superior to the boasted endowments of this wretched man, who “loved the wages of unrighteousness,” and died the enemy of God and his people. But a broken and contrite heart; a simple dependence on the Redeemer’s atoning blood and sanctifying grace; a cheerful subjection to the divine command, and submission to his will; an habitual aim to glorify God and benefit his people; are less splendid, but far more excellent attainments, and invariably “accompany salvation.” (Note, Heb. 6:9, 10.) No vainglorious hypocrite ever possessed these; yet the feeblest true believer is in some measure conscious of them, and is daily longing and praying for more of them: while perhaps, through an error in judgment, and through Satan’s subtlety, he overlooks all these infallible evidences of saving grace; and indulges desponding fears, because he cannot emulate some boasting Balaam’s gifts.—But let such persons bless the Lord, and rejoice in what he hath done for them. Here by faith they behold the Saviour nigh unto them; shortly shall they see him nigh, as come to complete their redemption, and consummate their felicity: whilst the wicked shall be “punished with an everlasting destruction from his presence.”—Yet the Lord will glorify himself and benefit his church by the gifts, and in the doom, even of hypocrites; and in these prophecies we may discern both the misery of the ungodly; the vanity of all worldly dependences and pre-eminence; the approaching destruction of every enemy who hath done evil in the sanctuary; the consequent triumphs of the church; and the universal spread of the gospel, notwithstanding afflictions, persecutions, and damnable heresies; while they assure our faith in all the promises which respect our own salvation.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXV. V. 1-3. It is expressly said, in several places, that the temptation by which the Israelites were seduced, was the effect of Balaam’s counsel to Balak; (31:15, 16. Rev. 2:14.) yet we read in the conclusion of the preceding chapter, that “Balaam rose up, and went and returned to his place.” He was, however, afterwards slain among the princes of Midian; (Note, 31:8.) and it may therefore be supposed that he directly went home in sullen despondency, where after a time Satan suggested this infernal counsel to him; that he then returned to propose it to Balak; and that, waiting to observe its success and to enjoy his reward, he was slain by the Israelites. Many commentators however suppose, that he gave Balak this counsel before he went home; and consequently they must conclude, that he returned to claim his recompense when his project had succeeded, or to give further advice. (Marg. Ref.)—This wicked man could not obtain leave to curse Israel: but he instructed Balak how to seduce Israel to bring a curse upon themselves; or at least to deprive themselves of the Lord’s immediate protection, and to provoke such judgments as would diminish their numbers and discourage their hearts.—“Not daring, as a prophet, to assist the king of Moab, he considers whether some other means might not be found. . . . One would not think it possible that the weakness even of religious self-deceit, in its utmost excess, could have so poor a distinction, so fond an evasion, to serve itself of! But so it was; and he could think of no other method, than to betray the children of Israel to provoke his wrath, who was their only Defence.—He could not forego the rewards of unrighteousness; he therefore first seeks for indulgences; and when these could not be obtained, he sins against the whole meaning, end, and design of the prohibition! And surely the impious counsel he gave to Balak . . . was a greater piece of wickedness than if he had cursed Israel in words. . . . He seeks indulgences for plain wickedness; which not being able to obtain, he glosses over that same wickedness, dresses it up in a new form, in order to make it pass off more easily with himself! That is, he deliberately contrives to deceive and impose upon himself, in a matter which he knew to be of the utmost importance! . . . This was the man who desired to “die the death of the righteous, and that his last end might be like his.” Bp.

6 ¶ And, behold, one of the children of Israel came, and brought unto his brethren "a Midianitish woman," in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

7 And when Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, the priest, saw it, he rose up from among the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand;

8 And he went after the man of Israel into the tent, and thrust both of them through, the man of Israel, and the woman through her belly. "So the plague was stayed from the children of Israel."

9 And those that died in the plague were twenty and four thousand.

10 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

11 Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, hath turned my wrath away from the children of Israel, while he was zealous for my sake among them, that I consumed not the children of Israel in my jealousy.

Butler.—Under the mask of friendship, an intercourse with Israel was opened, and some of the women of Moab and Midian, (who were, it seems, by no means backward to such an infamous undertaking,) were employed to allure the people to a criminal intercourse. This made way for an invitation to those idolatrous feasts, where every species of licentiousness was practised; and this being readily complied with, the Israelites flocked in great numbers, and greedily joined in this abominable worship: (Note and P. O. 1 Kings 11:1—8.) for 'the ordinary charms unto idolatry, were good victuals and bad women.' Bp. Patrick.—These Israelites had hitherto been preserved from connexions with heathen women, amidst all their rebellions; and therefore it is said, "the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab."—The women of Moab perhaps were the first tempters; but those of Midian at length became more generally and deeply criminal. (Note, 17, 18.)—"Baal-peor," or the lord of Peor, might be the same as Chemosh, the god of Moab. (Note, 22:40, 41.)

V. 4, 5. Many principal persons, in the several tribes and families, seem to have been ringleaders in this complicated provocation: and it is probable, that the Lord had already sent a plague which was making dreadful ravages.—If, therefore, the people at large would not have this idolatry interpreted into a national forfeiture of the covenant, and be destroyed by the pestilence as one man, immediate vengeance must be executed on the chief transgressors, by putting them to death, and hanging them up ignominiously, as a sacrifice to the justice of God. (Note, Ex. 32:27—29.) The words "joined unto Baal-peor" seem to imply an exception for such as had sinned, but had speedily repented. The notorious criminals of every rank were slain by the magistrates directly; but perhaps none except the more eminent persons were ignominiously hung up for a warning to all the survivors. From comparing the sum total of those who died by the plague (9) with that mentioned by Paul, (1 Cor. 10:8.) it is thought that no less than one thousand persons were thus executed in a summary manner.

V. 6—8. This action of Zimri and Cosbi was done in direct defiance of God himself; as well as of Moses, and of the congregation, who in great multitudes were penitently confessing their sins, and deprecating the divine displeasure. That a man should thus triumph in his wickedness, and dare the sword of justice, while numbers were dying by the sword of the magistrate, and much greater multitudes by the hand of God, was the greatest insult and outrage imaginable upon all authority, divine and human;—upon all order, and even upon common decency. Phinehas was the second priest, and successor to the high-priesthood, and doubtless as high in authority as in rank. As a magistrate, he was commissioned by Moses and by God to slay "those who were joined to Baal-peor." Zimri was notoriously and avowedly guilty; but while others trembled to come near him, Phinehas boldly executed vengeance upon him and his infamous paramour at once. No conduct could in every view be more unexceptionable; nor can it ever be drawn into a precedent to countenance acts of private revenge, of religious persecution, or even of irregular public vengeance. The objections therefore of some inbels, to this part of Holy Scripture, expose their ignorance, or disingenuity, as much as their hatred of this sacred book. For there is not one of them, (religion out of the question,) but in such a crisis, when a daring rebel set the regular magistracy at defiance, and evidently meant to instigate the people to revolt, would have allowed, that the welfare of the community was the chief law, and that so extra-14 Now the name of the Israelite that was slain, even that was slain with the Midianitish woman, was Zimri, the son of Salu, a prince of a chief house among the Simeonites.

15 And the name of the Midianitish woman that was slain, was Cosbi, the daughter of Zur; he was head over a people, and of a chief house in Midian.

16 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

17 Vex the Midianites, and smite them:

18 For they vex you with their wives, wherewith they have beguiled you in the matter of Peor, and in the matter of Cosbi, the daughter of a prince of Midian, their sister, which was slain in the day of the plague for Peor's sake.

ordinary a case required an extraordinary remedy; and would have applauded a decisive measure, though irregular: yet, after all, this does not appear in the least to have been so.

V. 11—13. The congregation had wept before the Lord, and doubtless many had joined with Moses in prayer and supplication; yet this act of Phinehas, by which, being zealous for the glory of God, he had inflicted condign punishment on two arrogant offenders, and thus offered an atoning sacrifice to the divine justice, is exclusively mentioned as having "turned away the wrath of God from Israel," and prevented their destruction. It was therefore "imputed to him for righteousness." (Note, Ps. 106:28—31.) Let who would censure it in succeeding ages, the heart-searching God declared his approbation of it as a righteous action; and he rewarded it by giving to Phinehas "his covenant of peace," ensuring to him personally, no doubt, all the blessings of his favour and friendship, in this world and in the next; but, in particular, engaging that the high-priesthood, the office of a typical mediator and peace-maker, should be continued in his family by "an everlasting, or perpetual covenant."—Phinehas was the eldest son of Eleazar, the eldest son of Aaron; but there was no express law limiting the high-priesthood to the eldest son; he might die before his father; his children might die, or be incapacitated: so that there was no certainty of his and of their succession till this promise was made.—The high-priesthood continued in the family of Phinehas till about the days of Eli, who was descended from Ithamar; and it is not known on what account that branch was substituted. (Notes, 1 Sam. 2:30—35, 36. 1 Kings 2:26, 27.) It soon, however, returned into that of Phinehas, in which it is probably supposed to have continued till the time of Herod the great, if not till that dispensation came to an end.

V. 14, 15. The names and rank of these offenders are thus declared, in order to illustrate the heretical impartiality of Phinehas.—Zur is numbered among the kings of Midian, who were slain by Israel. (31:8.)

V. 17, 18. Balaam's counsel seems to have been first given to Balak, king of Moab; yet probably the Midianitish women, especially of the higher ranks, as Cosbi was, were the principal tempters; and the nation of Midian seems, more generally and heartily, to have come into the execrable measure than that of Moab: they were therefore first selected to be made examples of, for a warning to the Moabites, who were spared at this time. (Notes, 31. Deut. 23:3—5. 2 Sam. 8:2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—5. The friendship of the wicked is more dangerous than their enmity: for none can prevail against the servants of God, except by tempting them to sin; no enchantment can injure them, except the fascination of worldly interests and pleasures; nor would the enemy of souls be so much gratified by casting them into a fiery furnace, as by alluring them to criminal indulgences. When once the fence of the divine command is broken, the progress from one kind and degree of sin to another is almost unavoidable; and when the barrier of female modesty is removed, the transition to the most impudent licentiousness is frequently very sudden; nor are any persons more pestilential to the human species, than beautiful abandoned women. Numbers in every age are brought to an ignominious execution, and immensely greater multitudes are hurried to the grave by dreadful diseases, in consequence of listening to their allurements: in short, "their feet lead down to death, and their steps take hold of hell." Yet multitudes, increasing multitudes, through the fatal path, regardless of the law of God, in defiance of his vengeance, and in neglect of the dictates of common sense, universal observation, and their own painful experience of the fatal effects! (P. O. Prov. 2:10-22. Note, 5:14. P. O. 1-14.) But let him who would have health, credit, and comfort in this world, or escape the wrath to come, "flee youthful lusts," and shun such fascinating tempers, as he would persons infected with a baleful pestilence.—In collective bodies there is generally a diversity of characters: we should not therefore indiscriminately condemn all for the crimes of some, which perhaps the others detest and lament; and our gracious Lord always distinguishes between the penitent and the obstinate transgressor.

V. 6-18. The more highly advanced in rank or authority offenders are, the deeper aggravation attends their crimes, and the more extensive is the influence of their pernicious example; it is therefore of vast importance, that judgment should be administered without respect of persons. Yet there have always been those, who would attempt to elude, out-brave, or bribe human justice. When this is the case, zeal for the honour of God, and the welfare of society, should excite all invested with authority, to disregard every personal consideration, in stepping forward, and bringing an overgrown offender to condign punishment. And they who, by any warrantable means, boldly attempt to check the progress of daring wickedness shall be honoured and recompensed by God, though they be censured and hated by men for so doing. None will be more surely and severely punished than they, who, after Satan's example, as his agents, and with his subtlety, tempt others to wickedness.—The Lord will chastise his offending people; but their tempters he will utterly destroy; and how dreadful the change to those, who sink together from the indulgence of sinful pleasure into the torments of hell-fire!—How infatuated are men, who wantonly provoke the vengeance of that God who can so easily destroy them!—But let us not close our reflections without looking to Jesus, who, in zeal for the Lord of hosts, and love to his people, made an atonement, not with the blood of others, but with his own blood, that we might not be consumed; and who is in consequence established in an everlasting priesthood after the order of Melchizedek, a High Priest upon the royal throne of universal and everlasting dominion.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVI. V. 1, 2. (Notes, 1:2).—The plague, above recorded, had swept away the last of that devoted generation, which provoked the Lord to "swear in his wrath that they should not enter" Canaan: and he commanded that the people should again be numbered, (this being the third time,) both to illustrate his faithfulness to his promises, and to prepare for the division of the promised land. Not only the tribes, but the families of Israel are here registered; that is, the names of those sons, or grandsons, of the patriarchs, who were the progenitors of the grand subdivisions in the several tribes.

V. 10. Together with Korah.] This verse seems to determine, that Korah was swallowed up with Dathan and Abiram. (Note, 16:28-34.)

V. 11. The sons of Korah, not consenting to their father's crime, or speedily repenting, were preserved when he was cut off, and afterwards became eminent in the service of the sanctuary. (Marg. Ref. k.)

V. 14. The immense decrease of this tribe renders it probable, that, influenced by the example of Zimri, the Simeonites had been peculiarly criminal in the late wickedness; and that multitudes of them had died by the plague. (Marg.)

32 And of Shemida, the family of the Shemidaites: and of Hephher, the family of the Hephherites.

33 And Zelophehad the son of Hephher had no sons, but daughters: and the names of the daughters of Zelophehad were Mahlah, and Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.

34 These are the families of Manasseh, and those that were numbered of them, fifty and two thousand and seven hundred.

35 These are the sons of Ephraim, after their families: of Shuthelah, the family of the Shuthalites: of Becher, the family of the Bachrites: of Tahan, the family of the Tahanites.

36 And these are the sons of Shuthelah: of Eran, the family of the Eranites.

50 These are the families of Naphtali, according to their families: and they that were numbered of them were forty and five thousand and four hundred.

51 These were the numbered of the children of Israel, six hundred thousand and a thousand seven hundred and thirty.

52 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 53 Unto these the land shall be divided for an inheritance, according to the number of names.

54 To many thou shalt give the more inheritance, and to few thou shalt give the less inheritance: to every one shall his inheritance be given, according to those that were numbered of him.

55 Notwithstanding, the land shall be divided by lot: according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they shall inherit.

56 According to the lot shall the possession thereof be divided between many and few.

57 ¶ And these are they that were numbered of the Levites, after their families: of Gershon, the family of the Gershonites: of Kohath, the family of the Kohathites: of Merari, the family of the Merarites.

58 These are the families of the Levites: the family of the Libnites, the family of the Hebronites, the family of the Mahlites, the family of the Mushites, the family of the Korathites. And Kohath begat Amram.

59 And the name of Amram's wife was Jochebed, the daughter of Levi, whom her mother bare to Levi in Egypt: and she bare unto Amram, Aaron and Moses, and Miriam their sister.

60 And unto Aaron was born Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.

61 And Nadab and Abihu died, when they offered strange fire before the Lord.

62 And those that were numbered of them, were twenty and three thousand, all males from a month old and upward: for they were not numbered among the children of Israel, because there was no inheritance given them among the children of Israel.

63 These are they that were numbered by Moses and Eleazar the priest, who numbered the children of Israel in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho.

64 But among these, there was not a man of them whom Moses and Aaron the priest numbered, when they numbered the children of Israel in the wilderness of Sinai.

65 For the Lord had said of them, They shall surely die in the wilderness. And there was not left a man of them, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun.

The division of Canaan was to be made according to the register now formed; and the quantity of land was to be proportioned to the numbers of each tribe: but the situation was to be determined by lot, both to the tribes and to individuals. Thus the decreasing of any tribe in the wilderness, proved the decrease of their future political importance and affluence, in all succeeding ages. (Notes, Josh. 14:3-5. 18:19.)

Thus his word was magnified, and an intimation was given that a speedy entrance into Canaan might be expected. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Death is continually making awful havoc of the human species, and causing surprising revolutions in families and nations; yet all is appointed in perfect wisdom, justice, and truth. This should excite us to meditate upon the odious nature and destructive tendency of sin, the deserving cause of all these devastations; and to take occasion to renew repentance, to seek forgiveness, to value the salvation of Christ; to remember how frail we are, to prepare for the approaching summons, and to fill up our remaining days in "serving our generation according to the will of God." Then death will be disarmed of his sting, become our friend, and convey us to heaven, when our appointed period on earth is finished.—But unrepented sin arms death with unutterable horrors: and lasting infamy perhaps in this world, and everlasting shame, contempt, and misery in another, will be the

6 And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying,

7 The daughters of Zelophehad speak right: ^jthou shalt surely give them a possession of an inheritance among their father's brethren: and thou shalt cause the inheritance of their father to pass unto them.

8 And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a man die, and have no son, then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughter.

9 And if he have no daughter, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his brethren.

doom of those who are "driven away in their wickedness," however famous and renowned they were among their ill-judging fellow-sinners. While the Lord punishes the iniquity of the fathers upon their unbelieving posterity, he preserves those, who do not imitate their parents in sin, from sharing their punishment; and the infamy of the father only makes the piety and usefulness of the son more noticed. (Notes, Ez. 18:2-20.) The word of God will be surely performed; and the eye of the Lord can discern, and his arm can reach, every sinner in the midst of surrounding multitudes: yet respites give space and opportunity for repentance. The promises likewise are irrevocable, and they who follow the Lord fully, shall certainly at length have the comfort of it. In all our different situations in life, let us submit to the sovereignty of the Lord, admire his equity and wisdom, and be thankful for his goodness; and desire above all things an inheritance in the heavenly Canaan.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVII. V. 1-4. In the orders for the division of the land just given, no provision had been made for females in case of the failure of male issue. (26:52-56.) The five daughters of Zelophehad, therefore, considered themselves as left destitute, having neither father nor brother, and being themselves entirely overlooked: and they agreed to refer the case to Moses and the rulers, whether it were not equitable that they should inherit their father's portion, especially as he had not incurred a forfeiture, any more than the other Israelites, who were all involved in one common sentence. There was therefore no sufficient reason, that his memory should be disgraced, as if his line were extinct, when he had left so many children. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5-11. As no law had been given concerning females inheriting in defect of male issue, Moses consulted the Lord about it: and he not only allowed the justice of the claim made by the daughters of Zelophehad, but also gave "a statute of judgment," by which the magistrates might determine such cases, both in the division of Canaan, and in after ages.—It is generally supposed, that brothers and relations in the line of the father are exclusively meant; as one great object was to preserve the genealogies distinct.

V. 12-14. Either this order was repeated, or the performance of it was postponed till some time after, as a variety of events took place in the interval. (Notes, 20:10-13, 22-28. Deut. 32:45-52.)

V. 15-17. We find from another place, that Moses, on this occasion, earnestly requested to enter Canaan; but this prayer was not granted. (Note, Deut. 3:23-28.) His chief concern however was about the congregation, that they might not be left without a magistrate to rule and judge them, or a commander to lead them against their enemies, lest they should be "as sheep without a shepherd." (Marg. Ref. t u. Note, Matt. 9:36-38.) And, as the Lord "knew what was in man" (John 2:25) he alone could appoint them such an able, faithful, and affectionate ruler. (Note, 16:22)

V. 18. Joshua had long attended on Moses; and, being endowed with the Spirit of wisdom and courage, was eminent for faith and piety: but he had not hitherto been publicly recognised as his successor. (Notes, 11:16. Ez. 17:8-13, 24:12-14. 32:17.) At this time, however, he was solemnly set apart for that important and arduous station, by imposition of Moses's hands; a ceremony frequently mentioned in Scripture, in designating men to a peculiar office, or giving authority to perform it. (Marg. Ref.)—It is very remarkable, that Moses never intimated a desire that one of his sons should succeed him, as Eleazar had succeeded Aaron; nor do we find that they had this expectation: on the contrary, they seem to have acquiesced in the Lord's determination, and without envy or murmuring, to have obeyed and honoured Joshua. (Note, 1 Chr. 23:14.)

V. 19. Give him a charge. That is, "Seriously instruct him in the important duties of his place, warn him to be upon his guard against its temptations, and, in the most earnest manner, charge it upon his conscience to be diligent and faithful in it." Such should episcopal charges be! (Marg. Ref.)—This was done before the high-priest and all the congregation.

V. 20. Joshua was admitted to a present share in the authority, that the people might be accustomed to obey and honour him. (Note, Josh. 1:16-18.)—Moses lived, and was very busily employed, some time after this warning; and Joshua would be very useful to him, in easing him of the burden of the civil government, whilst he gave himself wholly to attend on the interests of religion.

V. 21. Moses asked counsel of the Lord himself immediately; but all the future rulers of Israel were directed to consult the Lord by the high-priest. (Note, Ez. 28:30.) No doubt Joshua obeyed this direction, though it is not particularly recorded. One instance, however, in which he was negligent, is mentioned as an exception to his general conduct. (Note, Josh. 9:14, 15.)—As none of the subsequent rulers of Israel descended from Moses, they had the less temptation unduly to magnify him; and their testimony concerning him becomes, on that account, the more unexceptionable.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The assured faith that the word of the Lord would be performed in due season, and the desire of an interest in the promised inheritance, which these young women manifested; together with the modest, open manner in which they preferred their petition, are well worthy of imitation. The readiness also of Moses to attend to their application, and to seek counsel from the Lord about it, should be copied by magistrates, ministers, and all intrusted with authority.—The earnestness likewise with which Moses, under the divine rebuke and on the verge of death, pleaded for the congregation; his anxiety for their welfare after his decease; and his disinterestedness, with the peaceful submission of his sons to the undistinguished lot of ordinary Levites, are excellent models for our spirit and conduct.—Even when we do not by impenitent wickedness exclude ourselves from the inheritance of heaven: all our sufferings in this world, and our final dissolution, must be considered as the effect of our sins. (3)—The word of God is the only standard of faith and practice; yet sobriety and impartiality are requisite, to enable us to apply general rules to particular circumstances: but when difficulties, relative to practice, are fairly proposed and solidly resolved, they become adjudged cases, extensively and durably useful. Jesus alone ever liveth to rule and protect his church; and all others have their subordinate and temporary services, which having finished, they must be “gathered to their fathers:” and though their dismissal may be with a rebuke for some miscarriages, the prospect of heaven, and the grace of the Holy Spirit, will induce a peaceful and submissive acquiescence. Progressive sanctification always evidences itself by a proportionate regard to the interests of true religion, which will be enhanced by the evident approach of death; and the more any one hath experienced the burden of important stations, the more sensible will he be, that none but the Lord can furnish a man for such services, or support him in them. We should therefore with all earnestness apply to him who hath the fulness of the Spirit, to set suitable persons over his congregations: even such men, as by their example and instructions, and by the proper exercise of authority, may be before the people and take care of them, that they be not “as sheep which have no shepherd.” But no one can be fully qualified for any service in the church, who is destitute of the grace of the Holy Spirit, however learned, eloquent, ingenious, or sagacious he may otherwise be. (18)—They who are appointed to public stations, as magistrates or ministers, should be solemnly charged to attend to their duties; and the people should honour and obey them, and pray for them: and, thus supported, they need not fear the most difficult services; for the grace of the Lord shall be sufficient for them.—In Joshua's succession we are likewise reminded, “that the law was given by Moses,” which by reason of our transgression could not bring any of us to heaven: “but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ,” to accomplish the salvation of every believer. (Note, John 1:17.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVIII. V. 1, 2. The ceremonial worship had been greatly interrupted, during the continuance of the Israelites in the wilderness: and as a new generation had arisen, who were children or minors when the law was given; and as they were about to enter on the wars of Canaan, and to take possession of the promised land; it was proper to remind them not to neglect the ordinances of God, either in the hurry and peril of the one, or in the satisfactions of the other. Some things circumstantially new are contained in these chapters, intermingled with the repetition of former appointments; and they are regularly arranged, as they respected daily, weekly, monthly, and annual institutions. My bread. (2) Marg. Ref. a. Note, Lev. 3:11.

V. 3-8. The daily sacrifices no doubt were constantly offered in the wilderness in the same manner as they were ordained or offered at mount Sinai: but it was proper here again to renew the appointment of them, with that of the other sacrifices, which might have been in part intermitted. (Note, Ex. 28:38-41.) The wine to be poured on the sacrifice must be the best of the kind; and wine is still the memorial of the blood of Christ, shed for the ransom of many for the remission of sins.—In the holy place. (7) At the altar, in the inner court of the tabernacle.

V. 9, 10. This was a new injunction, apply significant of the extraordinary devotions which should distinguish the sabbath. Probably, two lambs were on that day offered in the morning, and two in the evening.

V. 11-15. (Marg. Ref. n.) The Lord having “appointed the moon for certain seasons,” required his worshippers to observe the new moons, by offering several burnt-offerings, with the accustomed meal-offerings, and drink-offerings, and a sin-offering, in addition to the daily sacrifice. Thus they were taught to acknowledge the living and true God, at a season when idolaters in general were worshipping the moon itself, or some other abominable idol; (Notes, Deut. 4:19. Job 31:24-28. Ps. 104:19. 148:3.) and to renew their dedication of themselves to his service, at the beginning of each month. St. Paul mentions the new moons among those institutions, that were a shadow of which Christ was the substance; yet nothing typical appears in them, except the numerous sacrifices then offered. (Note, Col. 2:16, 17.)

V. 16-25. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 12: Lev. 23:4-8.)—The several offerings for the passover, and the feast of unleavened bread, had not before been appointed; among which the “goat for sin-offering to make an atonement for you,”

24 After this manner ye shall offer daily, throughout the seven days, the meat of the sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD: it shall be offered beside the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.

25 And on the seventh day ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work.

26 ¶ Also in the day of the first-fruits, when ye bring a new meat-offering unto the LORD, after your weeks be out, ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work.

27 But ye shall offer the burnt-offering for a sweet savour unto the LORD: two young bullocks, one ram, seven lambs of the first year;

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are again reminded of the perpetual efficacy of the one sacrifice of Christ, and of our continual need of it: and also of the constancy with which the Christian should wait upon God in his ordinances, both as means of deriving grace from the fullness of Christ, and of rendering to the Lord the glory due unto him, as our Creator, our providential Benefactor, and the God of our salvation. These subjects indeed are not new to us, yet they may stir up our minds by a salutary repetition.—No hurrying employments, or perilous situations, or prosperous circumstances, should induce slackness in religious exercises; nay, they should excite greater diligence in seeking help from the Lord, or in giving thanks to him. And when young persons are about to settle in life, and remove to habitations of their own, it is peculiarly the duty of ministers, parents, and pious friends, to admonish them from the first to establish the worship of God in their families; which will prevent much subsequent trouble, and bring a blessing on them, and on all that they uprightly engage in. Every day should at least begin and end with prayer and praise: sabbaths call for a double measure of personal and family religion; and seasons of peculiar humiliation for sin, of seeking any special blessing, of solemn self-examination previous to approaching the Lord's table, or of remembering signal mercies received, require time still more entirely set apart for such purposes. But we must take care that one duty does not preclude another; and that all be accompanied with the exercise of repentance, faith, and love to the Lord Jesus; and with righteousness and true holiness in our whole conduct; otherwise God will abhor our most solemn services and abundant devotions. (Note, 23:4-6.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIX. V. 1-6. There were more solemnities in the seventh month than in any of the other months. It formed a kind of vacation between the harvest and the ensuing seed-time; and these solemnities during that season might intimate, that the ordinances of God are the rational refreshment from the fatigue of business; and that religion does not at all interfere with our true interest even in this world.—They had all been before appointed, but the sacrifices to be severally offered on them were at this time very particularly prescribed. (Note, Lev. 23:24, 25.)

V. 7-11. (Notes, Lev. 16: 23:26-32.) Even on the day of atonement, "the kid of the goats for" an additional "sin-offering," and the morning and evening burnt-offering, must not be omitted.

V. 12-37. (Notes, Lev. 23:34-36, 39-43.) The decrease of the number of bullocks, which were sacrificed on the several days of this feast, until on the last and great day only one was offered, is the most observable circumstance in this law.

17 And on the second day ye shall offer twelve young bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambs of the first year without spot:

18 And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner;

19 And one kid of the goats for a sin-offering, beside the continual burnt-offering, and the meat-offering thereof, and their drink-offerings.

20 And on the third day eleven bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish:

21 And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner;

22 And one goat for a sin-offering, beside the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

23 And on the fourth day ten bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish:

24 Their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner;

25 And one kid of the goats for a sin-offering, beside the continual burnt-offering, his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

26 And on the fifth day nine bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without spot:

27 And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner;

28 And one goat for a sin-offering, beside the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

29 And on the sixth day eight bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish:

30 And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner:

31 And one goat for a sin-offering, beside the continual burnt-offering, his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

32 And on the seventh day seven bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish:

33 And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner;

34 And one goat for a sin-offering, beside the continual burnt-offering, his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

35 On the eighth day ye shall have a solemn assembly, ye shall do no servile work therein.

36 But ye shall offer a burnt-offering, a sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord; one bullock, one ram, seven lambs of the first year without blemish:

37 Their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullock, for the ram, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner;

38 And one goat for a sin-offering, beside the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

39 ¶ These things ye shall do unto the Lord in your set feasts, besides your vows, and your free-will-offerings, for your burnt-offerings, and for your meat-offerings, and for your drink-offerings, and for your peace-offerings.

40 And Moses told the children of Israel, according to all that the Lord commanded Moses.

CHAPTER XXX.

Vows not to be broken, 1, 2. Those of a minor daughter might be disallowed by her father, 3-5. Those of a wife by her husband, 6-8. The vows of a widow, and of a divorced woman, 9-16.

AND Moses spake unto the heads of the tribes, concerning the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded.

2 If a man vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

3 ¶ If a woman also vow unto the Lord, and bind herself by a bond, being in her father's house in her youth;

(Note, Heb. 8:7-13.)
V. 38. The sin-offering was offered along with the other sacrifices, at all these solemn feasts; 'being a shadow of the passion of Christ, for whose sake all our sacrifices are acceptable unto God the Father.' Ep. Patrick.

V. 39. The peace-offerings were always the voluntary oblations of individuals; and therefore none were required as public sacrifices of the congregation, on any of the festivals; though pious princes and others frequently brought them. (1 Kings 8:63-65, 2 Chr. 30:21-25, Ezra 3:5, 6.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If we would well understand the Scriptures, we must bestow pains in comparing one part with another; for the Lord seems to have arranged them purposely to exercise our diligence, and to distinguish those who value the knowledge of the truth from such as do not. (Prov. 21-9.)—We are here again reminded that the trumpet of the gospel, even the glad tidings of salvation, calls us to mourn for sin, and to receive the atonement, before we can truly rejoice in the Lord; and to be strangers and pilgrims upon earth, constantly bringing our "spiritual sacrifices, which are through Christ Jesus to the praise and glory of God." The more consolation we receive, the more abundant and unwearied should we be in serving him; and a spiritual mind will be refreshed and recreated by the ordinances of God, after the fatigue of worldly care and labour, more than any carnal person can be with festivity and dissipation. The spiritually minded therefore will value leisure and opportunity of attending at the courts of God as a privilege, while the worldly seek for excuses; they will not suppose that public ordinances render secret devotion unnecessary, or that the prayers of the ministers supersede the necessity of their own; much less will they imagine that the merits of Christ, and his sacrifice for them, render their personal obedience and good works unnecessary.—Every thing reminds us of our sinfulness: our very repentance and faith in Christ, being imperfect, need forgiveness through him; and whether we mourn for sin, or rejoice in the Lord and praise him for his mercies, "the life that we live in the flesh" must be "by the faith of the Son of God," and attended with a constant reliance on his atoning sacrifice; until at the close we go to be with him, behold his glory, and extol his mercy, "who hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood;" "to whom be honour, and glory for ever. Amen."

NOTES.—CHAP. XXX. V. 1. Heads.] Marg. Ref. a. The elders or magistrates were required to make these laws known through their respective tribes.

V. 2. (Notes, Lev. 27:1-29.) If a man vow to do any thing sinful in itself, he ought deeply to repent of the sin which he has committed; for no vow or oath can bind him to break the command of God. (Notes, Judg. 11:30, 31, Ec. 5:4-7, Acts 23:12-22.)—Some vows relate to the performance of what was previously our indispensable duty; and such a vow is implied in our attendance on the Lord's table. But there are things of a discretionary nature; as Jacob's vow concerning the proportion of his substance which he would set apart for religious purposes; (Note, Gen. 28:20-22.) Paul's solemn determination to take nothing of the Corinthians; the Nazarites' vow; the vows concerning undemanding sacrifices; and vows of abstinence in respect of things lawful, for a limited season. Vows in such things may on some occasions be properly made; but they are a kind of promissory oaths, and should be formed with solemnity, and religiously observed; seeing the life or soul is bound as a surety for the performance of them.

V. 3-5. An unmarried woman in her father's house was required to notify her vows to her father: and if he did not refuse his consent, she was bound by them; but if he did,

4 And her father hear her vow, and her bond wherewith she hath bound her soul, and her father shall hold his peace at her; then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she hath bound her soul shall stand.

5 But if her father disallow her in the day that he heareth; not any of her vows, or of her bonds, wherewith she hath bound her soul, shall stand: and the Lord shall forgive her, because her father disallowed her.

6 And if she had at all an husband when she vowed, or uttered ought out of her lips, wherewith she bound her soul;

7 And her husband heard it, and held his peace at her in the day that he heard it: then her vows shall stand, and her bonds wherewith she bound her soul shall stand.

8 But if her husband disallowed her on the day that he heard it; then he shall make her vow which she vowed, and that which she uttered with her lips, wherewith she bound her soul, of none effect: and the Lord shall forgive her.

9 ¶ But every vow of a widow, and of her that is divorced, wherewith they have bound their souls, shall stand against her.

10 And if she vowed in her husband's house, or bound her soul by a bond with an oath; they were disannulled, and the obligation ceased. If she had vowed discreetly and properly, "she had done well that it was in her heart," and her willing mind would be accepted; if otherwise, her fault would be forgiven.—In many instances such vows might not only be disagreeable to a parent, but prejudicial to the whole family.—It is supposed by many expositors, that, by parity of reason, minor sons were under the same restriction in respect of their vows: but if they were intended also, it is extraordinary that daughters exclusively should be mentioned. The males were certainly allowed more liberty in various cases than the females: the vows of the latter might be adjudged more prejudicial to families; or the sons, being more immediately under the father's tuition, might be thought less liable to be inveigled into rash engagements of this kind.

11 And her husband heard it, and held his peace at her, and disallowed her not: then all her vows shall stand, and every bond wherewith she bound her soul shall stand.

V. 6-8. Married women were under the same law, as unmarried young women, for reasons at least equally cogent.

V. 9-16. The vows made by a widow, or a divorced woman, even if she had returned to live in her father's house, could not be disannulled by him.—The vows made by a married woman were obligatory on her when she became a widow, or was divorced, if her husband had allowed of them; but not if he had disannulled them.—The words to afflict her soul, (Marg. Ref. k), imply that such vows had often respect to seasons of fasting and abstinence.—If a husband at first seemed to allow his wife's vow, and afterwards hindered her from performing it, the guilt became his, and he might expect to be punished for the violation of his wife's vow.—With this chapter before our eyes, we may form a judgment of the impiety, injustice, and absurdity of the vows of celibacy and chastity, which children, and even wives, are encouraged to take, and required to observe, in the Romish church, without, and even against, the consent of parents and husbands!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We cannot too strictly engage ourselves to be the Lord's, and in all things to live to his glory: but we may inconsiderately vow things impracticable, inexpedient, not within our own choice, or not consistent with relative duties.—The peace, comfort, and true interest of families, and the exercise of the parental and conjugal authority, are of such consequence to communities and to religion, that the Lord will sooner disannul a solemn vow, than authorize any thing that is inconsistent with them. What regard therefore should all persons, especially those in inferior relations, pay to these important obligations! and how willing should they be to give up every personal inclination in observing them! Blind guides indeed, in all ages, have attempted "to make the commandments of God of none effect through their traditions;" and, that they might finger the corban, (the money given to God, and to them as his receivers,) have authorized disobedience to parents, to husbands, and to magistrates.—(Notes, Matt. 15:3-6. Mark 7:1-12.) But the whole Scripture teaches us, and divine grace induces every individual, from the highest motives, and with the greatest encouragements, to act properly in the several relations of life for the Lord's sake. We should then attend carefully to those 12 But if her husband hath utterly made them void on the day he heard them; then whatsoever proceeded out of her lips concerning her vows, or concerning the bond of her soul, shall not stand: her husband hath made them void; and the Lord shall forgive her.

13 Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void.

14 But if her husband altogether hold his peace at her from day to day; then he establisheth all her vows, or all her bonds, which are upon her; he confirmeth them, because he held his peace at her, in the day that he heard them.

15 But if he shall any ways make them void, after that he hath heard them; then he shall bear her iniquity.

16 These were the statutes which the Lord commanded Moses, between a man and his wife, between a father and his daughter, being yet in her youth in her father's house.

The Israelites, by divine command, war against the Midianites, slay the men, with their kings, and balaam; and take the women and children with much spoil.—12. duties, to which we are solemnly engaged by our very profession of Christianity: and from the performance of these vows no authority of husbands, parents, or magistrates can release any one: for "we must obey God rather than man." And in respect of the rest, we should be cautious and circumspect, and seek counsel of the Lord in prayer: "for it is better not to vow, than to vow and not pay." But if we have engaged ourselves, let us never think of going back, because we have altered our mind, or become averse from the thing engaged in: for our souls are bound for the performance, and the Lord abhors our trifling in such holy and sacred concerns. (Notes, Gen. 35:1. Ps. 56:12. 66:13,14.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXI. V. 2. Vengeance belongeth only to God, and to those whom he deputed to be his ministers of vengeance, as magistrates in ordinary cases; and they who, without commission from him, execute private revenge, or out of ambition, avarice, or resentment, wage war and desolate kingdoms, must one day answer for it.—(Notes, Deut. 32:34,35. Rom. 12:17-21. 13:3-5.) If, however, the Lord, instead of punishing sinners by earthquakes, pestilences, or famines, is pleased expressly to command any person or people to avenge his cause, (3) this commission justifies, nay sanctifies, war, massacre, or devastation. None can at present show such commission; but the Israelites could: for the public miracles wrought among them, and for their benefit, were as the broad seal of heaven ratifying this commission, and vindicating all which they did by virtue of it. It is therefore absurd to censure Moses, Joshua, and Israel, for the dreadful slaughter made by them. God himself passed sentence of condemnation, and employed them merely as executioners: and unless it could be proved that the criminals did not deserve their doom, or that the Lord had no right to punish his rebellious creatures, and dispose of them and their property as he pleased; such objectors only show their enmity to God, by becoming the unsolicited advocates of his enemies. The knowledge of the inexpressible evil of sin, of which men make light, but which God infinitely abhors, produces proportionable acquiescence in all the terrible judgments executed on the nations, which had filled up the measure of their iniquities.—The conduct of the leaders in these wars was regulated by the express command of God; and the executioners were more than once reproved for being too lenient, but never for being too severe: (Notes, 14-18. 1 Sam. 15:8-19,32,33.) and yet man's natural compassion recoils from the consideration of the slaughter which they made: as indeed the execution of justice is never intended to gratify the finer feelings of benevolence, but to excite dread and honor. Hence we may draw a very forcible argument, that the consequence of "the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God," will by no means accord to those rules which men, ignorant of the evil of sin and proud of their own benevolence, have devised for him; and which they would wrest the Scriptures to countenance, though evidently contrary to the constant tenor of them. If they cannot reconcile with their own ideas of justice and goodness, the severities inflicted upon the Midianites, Arm some of yourselves unto the war, and let them go against the Midianites, and ¹avenge the Lord of Midian.

4 ¹Of every tribe ^aa thousand, throughout all the tribes of Israel, shall ye send to the war.

5 So there were delivered out of the thousands of Israel, a thousand of every tribe, twelve thousand armed for war.

6 And Moses sent them to the war, a thousand of every tribe, them and ^bPhinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, to the war, with ^cthe holy instruments, and the trumpets ^dto blow in his hand.

7 And they warred against the Midianites, as the Lord commanded Moses; and they ^eslew all the males.

8 And they slew ^fthe kings of Midian, beside the rest of them that were slain; namely, Evi, and Rekem, and ^gZur, and Hur, and Reba, five kings of Midian: ^hBalaam also, the son of Beor, they slew with the sword.

9 And the children of Israel took ⁱall the women of Midian captives, and their little ones, and took the spoil of all their cattle, and all their flocks, and all their goods.

10 And they ^jburnt all their cities wherein they dwelt, and all their goodly castles, with fire.

11 And they took all the spoil, and all the prey, both of men and of beasts.

12 And they brought the captives, and the prey, and the spoil, unto Moses and Eleazar the priest, and unto the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the camp at ^kthe plains of Moab, which are by Jordan, near Jericho.

[Practical Observations.]

13 ¹And Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and all the princes of the congregation, ²went forth to meet them ³without the camp.

14 And Moses was ⁴wroth with the officers of the host, with the captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, which came from the battle.

15 And Moses said unto them, ⁵"Have ye saved all the women alive?"

16 Behold, ⁶these caused the children of Israel, through the counsel of Balaam, to commit trespass against the Lord ⁷in the matter of Peor, ⁸and there was a plague among the congregation of the Lord.

17 Now therefore, ⁹kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him.

ites, Canaanites, and Amalekites, by the express command of a just and good God; let them allow that they are incompetent to determine what conduct becomes the Judge of the world; and that it is more safe, wise, and humble, simply to believe his testimony, and "to flee from the wrath to come," leaving the government of the universe to him, than rashly to dispute about things which are evidently out of their province, and of which they know nothing further than the Lord is pleased to inform them. (Note, Deut. 29:29.) Death in every case is the wages of sin, and all diseases fulfil the counsels of God: why then may he not employ the sword of a warrior, as well as a fever, in depriving sinners of their forfeited life? Or why should it be unjust or cruel in Moses or Joshua to obey the command of God in this respect, and yet righteous and holy in an angel to obey a similar command; as when the angel slew 185,000 men of Sennacherib's vast army? (Note, 2 Kings 19:35.) Moses had beheld with grief and indignation the temptation, the sin, and the punishment of Israel; and in witnessing the success of this war, just before his death, he saw a specimen of the Lord's vengeance on the enemies of Israel, and of his kindness to his people.—The Midianites had been most criminal, and therefore at the present the vengeance was restricted to them.—(Note, 25:17, 18.)

V. 3. The Israelites were reminded by this language not to indulge private resentment, but to be influenced by zeal for the glory of God; and to act as his servants in inflicting punishment on his enemies. (Note, Judg. 16:28.)

V. 4-6. Twelve thousand was a small number, in proportion either to all Israel, or to the forces with which they were to encounter; for the Lord would teach them not to trust in an arm of flesh, but in his almighty power and faithful promise. As they were under the conduct of the captains of thousands, and of hundreds, they probably had no general, and therefore Joshua is not mentioned. Phinehas, the zealous avenger of the insulted honour of God, (Notes, 25:6-13.) was ordered to accompany them with "the holy instruments," by which some understand the silver trumpets; but others suppose that the second priest, the high priest's deputy and successor, consulted the Lord on such occasions with the breastplate of judgment; or that the ark was carried with them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7. They slew all the males.] The victorious Israelites did not extirpate the nation of Midian, which subsisted and was powerful long after; but they slew all the males, without giving quarter, as far as they proceeded, which probably was as far as those tribes reached from which the tempters chiefly came.

V. 8. (Marg. Ref. k, l.)—Balaam, blinded by covetousness, and "hardened by the deceitfulness of sin," perished among the enemies of Israel; which some think he forebode, when he wished "to die the death of the righteous." Thus "he went to his own place," as Judas afterwards did; and their characters have a great resemblance to each other. (Notes, 22:5. 25:1-3. Acts 1:16-18, 25.)—Whatever information Moses might receive concerning Balaam and Balak, he doubtless received it more exactly by inspiration from God; and it was very proper that it should be thus circumstantially recorded, for the information, encouragement, and caution of God's people in all ages, concerning the secret machinations of their enemies; and for the warning of those who unite in wicked counsels against them.

V. 10. The Israelites were not allowed at present to inherit any part of that country; and therefore they in this manner disabled the Midianites from rallying their forces and renewing the war, as well as executed the vengeance of the Lord upon them.

V. 14-18. The sword of war should spare women and children, as incapable of resisting; but the sword of justice knows no distinction, except that of guilty or not guilty, and more or less guilty.—This war was the execution of a righteous sentence upon a guilty nation, in which the women were the principal criminals; and perhaps particular instructions had been given on this head: therefore Moses was angry, when he found that the women had been spared. If those concerned in the detestable project of Balaam, had been preserved as captives, they would have been a constant temptation to the people; and they could not be known from the rest except by miracle. Orders were therefore given to put all the women to death, and the male children; and only to spare the female children, who could not be supposed to have been culpable; and who, being brought up among the Israelites, would not tempt them to idolatry.—It has been groundlessly asserted that Moses authorized the Israelites to make concubines of the whole number of female children, or even promiscuously to debauch them; and a formidable objection against his writings has been grounded on this strange supposition. But the whole tenor of the law, and especially a statute hereafter to be considered, proves the contrary. (Note, Deut. 21:10-14.) They were merely permitted to possess them as female slaves; while all the laws concerning marriage and concubinage, and against fornication and whoredom, were in full force, in this as well as in other cases.—But what shall we say of the execution of all the male infants, who could not be personally guilty in this matter? The Lord commanded it, in this and many other instances: and "shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Had they lived, they might have conspired to avenge the death of their parents on Israel: and the example was thus rendered more tremendous, warning parents not to imitate the guilt of the Midianites, lest they should involve their beloved offspring in destruction. (Notes, Ex. 20:5. 2 Kings 2:23, 24.) The Scripture addresses men's natural affection by promises and threatenings, in which their children also are included; and in a future state the Lord may, for what we know, turn the temporal sufferings of children into an infinite mercy to them.—It should also be remembered that children are constantly involved in the desolations occasioned by famines, pestilences, and earthquakes. (Notes, 16:27-34. Jon. 4:9-11.)

V. 19-24. The Israelites had acted by the Lord's commission; yet they had contracted pollution by touching the dead; and the spoil, having been used by idolaters, must be purified also in the prescribed manner; which would form a pattern for succeeding wars. Thus the law was reduced to whosoever hath touched any slain, purify both yourselves and your captives on the third day, and on the seventh day.

20 And purify all your raiment, and all that is made of skins, and all work of goats' hair, and all things made of wood.

21 And Eleazar the priest said unto the men of war which went to the battle, This is the ordinance of the law which the LORD commanded Moses;

22 Only the gold, and the silver, the brass, the iron, the tin, and the lead,

23 Every thing that may abide the fire, ye shall make it go through the fire, and it shall be clean; nevertheless it shall be purified with the water of separation: and all that abideth not the fire ye shall make go through the water.

24 And ye shall wash your clothes on the seventh day, and ye shall be clean, and afterward ye shall come into the camp.

25 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

26 Take the sum of the prey that was taken, both of man and of beast, thou, and Eleazar the priest, and the chief fathers of the congregation:

27 And divide the prey into two parts, between them that took the war upon them, who went out to battle, and between all the congregation;

28 And levy a tribute unto the LORD of the men of war which went out to battle: one soul of five hundred, both of the persons, and of the beeves, and of the asses, and of the sheep.

29 Take it of their half, and give it unto Eleazar the priest, for an heave-offering of the LORD.

30 And the children of Israel's half, thou shalt take one portion of fifty, of the persons, of the beeves, of the asses, and of the flocks, of all manner of beasts, and give them unto the Levites, which keep the charge of the tabernacle of the LORD.

31 And Moses and Eleazar the priest did as the LORD commanded Moses.

32 And the booty, being the rest of the prey which the men of war had caught, was six hundred thousand and seventy thousand and five thousand sheep,

33 And threescore and twelve thousand beeves,

34 And threescore and one thousand asses,

35 And thirty and two thousand persons in all, of women that had not known man by lying with him.

36 And the half, which was the portion of them that went out to war, was in number three hundred thousand and seven and thirty thousand and five hundred sheep:

37 And the LORD's tribute of the sheep was six hundred and threescore and fifteen.

38 And the beeves were thirty and six thousand, of which the LORD's tribute was threescore and twelve.

39 And the asses were thirty thousand and five hundred, of which the LORD's tribute was threescore and one.

40 And the persons were sixteen thousand, of which the LORD's tribute was thirty and two persons.

41 And Moses gave the tribute which was the LORD's heave-offering unto Eleazar the priest; as the LORD commanded Moses.

42 And of the children of Israel's half, which Moses divided from the men that warred, 43 (Now the half that pertained unto the congregation, was three hundred thousand and thirty thousand and seven thousand and five hundred sheep,

44 And thirty and six thousand beeves,

45 And thirty thousand asses and five hundred,

46 And sixteen thousand persons,)

47 Even of the children of Israel's half, Moses took one portion of fifty, both of man and of beast, and gave them unto the Levites which kept the charge of the tabernacle of the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moses.

48 ¶ And the officers which were over thousands of the host, the captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds, came near unto Moses:

49 And they said unto Moses, Thy servants have taken the sum of the men of war which are under our charge, and there lacketh not one man of us:

50 We have therefore brought an oblation for the LORD, what every man hath gotten, of jewels of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, earrings, and tablets, to make an atonement for our souls before the LORD.

51 And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of them, even all wrought jewels.

52 And all the gold of the offering that they offered up to the LORD, of the captains of thousands, and of the captains of hundreds, was sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels.

53 (For the men of war had taken spoil, every man for himself.)

practice under the inspection of the lawgiver. (Marg. Ref. 19:11-19.)—All the metals known, till these modern times, are here mentioned together.

V. 25-31. To prevent dispute, and for a rule to after times, the Lord ordered the distribution of the cattle and the female captives, between the soldiers and the congregation; and that a portion from each should be reserved for the priests and Levites. The Levites received ten times as much as the priests, being vastly more numerous; and the twelve thousand soldiers had more than all the rest of Israel. The arrangement seems to have given universal satisfaction.—No horses or camels are mentioned. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 35. The number of the female children, when considered as bearing proportion to the men, women, and male children who were slain, suggests an awful idea of the terrible vengeance which God took upon the enemies of him, and of his people! Amalek, who first warred with Israel, was long spared; but Midian, who first tempted them to idolatry, was speedily and most tremendously punished.

V. 47. It does not appear, that a single ox, or sheep, or ass, was required by Moses, as his portion; or given to him by the people: yet he had a family, as well as others, for which no provision had been made, above the common lot of Levites! (Notes, 16:15.)

V. 48-54 The success of this detachment had been extraordinary; so small a company overcoming and cutting off such immense multitudes, and taking so large a spoil: but their preservation was still more remarkable; not one individual having been slain, or even wounded that we find! In acknowledgment of this, the officers presented the wrought gold, (all of it probably,) which they had found among the spoil, as an oblation to the Lord, "to make an atonement for their souls;" or to be employed in that service of God by which atonement was typically made. (Note, Ex. 30:11-16.) Thus they confessed, that, instead of claiming a reward, they needed forgiveness of what had been sinful; and desired thus to express their gratitude for the preservation of their lives, which might justly have been taken away.—Some think the private soldiers had taken a booty of this kind which they reserved to themselves; and others, that the officers presented the offering in the name of the soldiers also.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. "The triumphing of the wicked is short." The pleasures and advantages of sin are bought at an enormous price; and the vengeance of the Lord is always sure, and sometimes speedy and sudden.—"It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God;" (Note, Heb. 10:28-31.) and if his temporal judgments are so dreadful, what will be the case of sinners "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." (Note, 2 Thes. 1:5—10.) Let us then take warning, and flee from the wrath to come," to that Saviour, who alone is able to deliver us: and, depending on his assistance, let us declare war against every corrupt passion, by which we have been induced to dishonour God, and bring guilt and misery upon ourselves. This is indeed a holy war, in which we must utterly destroy every one of the enemies of our souls, or they will certainly ruin us: to this the trumpet of the gospel calls and encourages us; and in it we may depend upon the Lord for counsel and assistance. Here we ought to indulge the deepest resentment; and, without thinking of peace or truce, should prosecute the quarrel to the utter extermination of our enemies, root and branch, with unrelenting severity; not sparing our strongest, nor overlooking our feeblest lusts, which, if not crucified, will soon become formidable and produce fatal effects.—In all our undertakings, we must not only make the Lord our confidence, but adhere to his orders and instructions; and thus we may expect all desirable success, notwithstanding interposing difficulties.—While we forgive and pray for all our enemies, we should entertain the deepest abhorrence of the conduct, and most carefully shun the company, of those who have once attempted to draw us into sin. Nor will any be more severely punished by the Lord than tempters, especially of his people; except it be those who, against the convictions of their own conscience, have counselled and encouraged them so to do.

V. 13—54. There is no natural disposition of the heart which does not require to be moderated and regulated; for even our humanity and compassion, as well as our resentment, must be subjected to the command of God; or we shall spare and encourage those whom the Lord would have reproved, corrected, or treated with severity, and so bring anger from him upon ourselves: and surely, it must be highly criminal in the sight of God, for us to imagine ourselves more merciful and compassionate than he is. This is especially the case with magistrates, ministers, heads of families, and all intrusted with authority. They who have been faithful in inferior stations may expect to be employed in more important services: but even when we have attended to our bounden duty, we need purifying in the blood of Christ, and by his grace, from the guilt and pollution a inhering to our best performances. God so abhors murder, and would have us to abhor it, that he hath represented even that bloodshed which he commanded, as in some degree contaminating those concerned in it. He likewise approves and requires exact equity in all our transactions: nor should we dare to appropriate any gain, of which we cannot conscientiously devote a portion to that God who not go into the land which the LORD had given them.

10 And the LORD's anger was kindled the same time, and he sware, saying,

11 Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, shall see the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob; because they have not wholly followed me;

12 Save Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenazite, and Joshua the son of Nun: for they have wholly followed the LORD.

13 And the LORD's anger was kindled against Israel, and he made them wander in the wilderness forty years, until all the generation that had done evil in the sight of the LORD was consumed.

14 And, behold, ye are risen up in your fathers' stead, an increase of sinful men, to augment yet the fierce anger of the LORD toward Israel.

15 For if ye turn away from after him, he will yet again leave them in the wilderness, and ye shall destroy all this people.

16 ¶ And they came near unto him, and said, We will build sheepfolds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones;

17 But we ourselves will go ready armed before the children of Israel, until we have brought them unto their place: and our little ones shall dwell in the fenced cities, because of the inhabitants of the land.

18 We will not return unto our houses, until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance.

"hates robbery for burnt-offering," and for which we cannot thank him as the Giver.—This rule, if well observed, would render us incapable of fraud, extortion, oppression, or any kind of iniquity or sinful compliances. But besides the exact rules of honesty, we should liberally give to the Lord, and dispose of in pious and charitable uses, a proportion of all our acquisitions; particularly when commemorating special deliverances: and though the blood of Christ has made the effectual atonement for our souls, such oblations are proper evidences of our faith, and of the sincerity of our love; they are acknowledgments that we are unworthy of all our mercies; and expressions of our gratitude to God and zeal for his glory, and of our love to our fellow-Christians.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXII. V. 1—5. (Marg. Ref.) This proposal of the Reubenites and Gadites seemed to imply a disregard to the land of Canaan, a distrust of the Lord's promise, and a reluctance to encounter the difficulties and dangers of conquering and expelling the inhabitants. And indeed when we compare their petition "not to be brought over Jordan," with the earnestness with which Moses entreated to pass over; we cannot but conclude, that they did not behold in the rest of Israel in Canaan, that type of heaven which he and other believers doubtless did. (Note, Deut. 3:23—28.)

V. 6—15. (Notes, 13: 14.) It was very natural for Moses to suspect, that sloth and cowardice, the effects of unbelief, suggested the petition of the descendants of Gad and Reuben; and he therefore remonstrated with them very plainly on their conduct. He feared that they "were risen up, an increase of sinful men," like those who provoked the Lord to "swear in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest." (Note, Ps. 95:9—11. Heb. 3:7—19. 4:1, 2.) Indeed he was apprehensive that their example would induce their brethren to renew the old provocation, and so to destroy the whole nation. But, though they were in some degree faulty, they were not so deeply criminal as he supposed.—It is not known on what account Caleb, or rather Jephunneh, is called the Kenazite: probably from some ancestor of the family, of whom nothing remains on record. (Josh. 14:14.)

V. 16—19. This proposal was very equitable, and it was honestly made and faithfully executed. It did not imply that all the men capable of bearing arms should go, and so leave their families and possessions defenceless; but a sufficient detachment: accordingly forty thousand went out of about a hundred thousand. (Notes, Josh. 1:12—15. 22:1—5.)

V. 20. From the expression, "before the LORD," it has been concluded, that the Israelites carried the ark with them in all the wars of Canaan.—It was very encouraging to repre-side Jordan, or forward; [†] because our inheritance is fallen to us [†] on this side Jordan eastward.

20 And [†]Moses said unto them, If ye will do this thing, if ye will go armed before the LORD to war,

21 And will go all of you armed over Jordan before the LORD, until he hath driven out his enemies from before him, 22 And the land be subdued before the LORD; then afterward ye shall return, and [†]be guiltless before the LORD, and before Israel; and [†]this land shall be your possession before the LORD.

23 But [†]if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against the LORD; and [†]be sure your sin will find you out.

24 Build ye cities for your little ones, and folds for your sheep; and do that which hath proceeded out of your mouth.

25 And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben spake unto Moses, saying, Thy servants will do as my lord commandeth.

26 Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, shall be there in the cities of Gilead.

27 But thy servants will pass over, every man armed for war, before the LORD to battle, [†]as my lord saith.

28 So concerning them Moses commanded Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel:

29 And Moses said unto them, If the children of Gad and the children of Reuben will pass with you over Jordan, every man armed to battle before the LORD, and the land shall be subdued before you; then ye shall give them the land of Gilead for a possession:

30 But if they will not pass over with you

(Note, Prov. 13:21.)

V. 29. It was proper that this country, (which seems hitherto to have been possessed in common by the people,) should be allotted to some of the tribes; and Reuben and Gad having, perhaps too hastily, petitioned for it, it was granted them: but it was a situation very distant from the sanctuary; it greatly interrupted their intercourse with their brethren; it was very much exposed to their enemies, and uneasy to themselves; and they seem to have been dispossessed sooner than the other Israelites. (Notes, 2 Kings 15: 29. 1 Chr. 5:25, 26.)

V. 33. The country eastward of Jordan was, it seems, too large for the two tribes of Reuben and Gad alone; and therefore in consequence of the conquest of Gilead by the descendants of Machir, a division of the tribe of Manasse likewise had their inheritance there, probably by their own consent. (39—42.—Notes, Josh. 13:7—33.)

V. 38. Their names being changed.] When the people rebuilt the cities for their own habitations, they changed the names of such of them, as were called after the idols of the former inhabitants. Yet several of them seem afterwards to have recovered their old names, and indeed to have been seized on by the Moabites and others.

V. 41. Jair was the descendant of Machir and Manasseh in the female line; but from Judah in the male line. (Notes, 1 Chr. 2:21—23.) Yet joining himself to the Manassites on this occasion, his posterity was ever after reckoned among them. (Note, Deut. 3:14.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Covetousness, ambition, impatience, or other carnal inducements, influence most men in choosing their worldly settlements: whereas they ought to consider in the first place, whether they are likely to be convenient for attending on the ordinances of God, and favourable to communion with his people. If, however, Christians are betrayed into such an improper conduct, their iniquity will correct them, and they armed, [†]they shall have possessions among you in the land of Canaan.

31 And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben answered, saying, As the LORD hath said unto thy servants, so will we do.

32 We will pass over armed before the LORD into the land of Canaan, that the possession of our inheritance on this side Jordan may be ours.

33 And [†]Moses gave unto them, even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and unto [†]half the tribe of Manasseh the son of Joseph, [†]the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Bashan, the land, with the cities thereof, in the coasts, [†]even the cities of the country round about.

34 And the children of Gad built [†]Dibon, and Ataroth, and [†]Aroer, 35 And Atroth, Shophan, and [†]Jaazer, and Jogbehah,

36 And [†]Beth-nimrah, and Beth-aran, [†]fenced cities; and folds for sheep.

37 And the children of Reuben built [†]Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Kirjathaim.

38 And Nebo, and Baal-meon, (their names being changed,) and Shibmah: and [†]gave [†]other names to the cities which they builded.

39 And the children of [†]Machir the son of Manasseh went to Gilead, and took it, and dispossessed the Amorite which was in it.

40 And Moses [†]gave Gilead unto Machir the son of Manasseh; and he dwelt therein.

41 And [†]Jair the son of Manasseh went and took the small towns thereof, and called them [†]Havoth-jair.

42 And Nobah went and took Kenath, and the villages thereof, and called it Nobah, after his own name.

will surely suffer for their folly. (Notes and P. O. Gen 13: 14.) But men in general, even when called Christians, have not that faith which explores the unseen world, or that spiritual mind which supremely values heavenly blessings. Earthly things suit their carnal minds, and are apprehended by their senses; these they prefer as their portion: but it proves unsatisfactory and vexatious, they are speedily driven out of it; and having no inheritance beyond the grave, they will eternally bewail their wretched choice, while believers eternally rejoice in theirs.—We are utterly inexcusable, if we do not profit by the examples of those, whose sins and punishments are recorded for our warning. Yet so depraved is human nature, that one generation rises up after another, “an increase of sinful men” walking in the steps of those who perished before them, and thus still more and more augmenting the fierce anger of the LORD. Nor does the wickedness of men merely destroy their own souls; for it murders those of others also, while their examples, influence, and persuasions, encourage numbers in sin, or discourage them from serving the LORD; and while the crimes of professed Christians increase the prejudices or harden the hearts of Jews, Mohammedans, and Gentiles against the gospel. (Note, Matt. 18:7—9.) They, however, who are deeply acquainted with the human heart, and have been long conversant with perverse and rebellious people, are sometimes too suspicious. But such suspicions frequently arise from zeal for the honour of God, and love to the souls of men: (2 Cor. 11:2.) and it is generally best to disclose them, and to remonstrate with the suspected persons; for this may either withdraw them from their purpose, or give them an opportunity of explaining themselves. And even when they are faulty in some degree, we should be ready to accept of reasonable excuses, and to accede to equitable proposals; yet with such express conditions and limitations as may supersede occasions of future contention.—All men ought to consider the interests of others as well as their own; and the law of love requires them reciprocally to labour, venture, and suffer for each other, as occasion requires. But especially it is becoming in the people of God to be disinterested and public-spirited; and they cannot consistently account any thing too great to forego, to endure, or to attempt, in opposing the common enemies of the cause, in promoting the salvation of souls, and in securing the heavenly inheritance. If God hath formed us to this disposition, we shall avoid all appearance of evil, act with equity and love, have a sanctified and comfortable use of our worldly possessions, and so pass through things temporal as not finally to lose the good things which are eternal.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

A record of forty-two journeys of Israel, 1-49. A charge to destroy the Canaanites and their idols, 50-56.

THESE are the journeys of the children of Israel, which went forth out of the land of Egypt, with their armies, under the hand of Moses and Aaron.

2 And Moses wrote their goings out according to their journeys, by the commandment of the LORD: and these are their journeys according to their goings out.

^{B. C. 1491.} 3 And they departed from Rameses in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month: on the morrow after the passover, the children of Israel went out with an high hand, in the sight of all the Egyptians.

4 For the Egyptians buried all their first-born, which the LORD had smitten among them: upon their gods also the LORD executed judgments.

5 And the children of Israel removed from Rameses, and pitched in Succoth.

6 And they departed from Succoth, and pitched in Etham, which is in the edge of the wilderness.

7 And they removed from Etham, and turned again into Pi-hahiroth, which is before Baalzephon: and they pitched before Migdol.

8 And they departed from before Pi-hahiroth, and passed through the midst of the sea into the wilderness, and went three days' journey in the wilderness of Etham, and pitched in Marah.

9 And they removed from Marah and came unto Elim: and in Elim were twelve fountains of water, and threescore and ten palm-trees: and they pitched there.

10 And they removed from Elim, and encamped by the Red Sea.

11 And they removed from the Red Sea, and encamped in the wilderness of Sin.

12 And they took their journey out of the wilderness of Sin, and encamped in Dophkah.

13 And they departed from Dophkah, and encamped in Alush.

14 And they removed from Alush, and encamped at Rephidim, where was no water for the people to drink.

^{B. C. 1490.} 15 And they departed from Rephidim, and pitched in the wilderness of Sinai.

16 And they removed from the desert of Sinai, and pitched at Kibroth-hattaavah.

17 And they departed from Kibroth-hattaavah, and encamped at Hazeroth.

18 And they departed from Hazeroth, and pitched in Rithmah.

19 And they departed from Rithmah, and pitched at Rimmon-parez.

20 And they departed from Rimmon-parez, and pitched in Libnah.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXIII. V. 1, 2. In this chapter the sacred historian has brought into one view the journeys and encampments of Israel, from Egypt to the banks of Jordan.—The clause, "by the commandment of the LORD," may refer either to the journeys which were all taken at his word, or to the register of them which was written by his express direction. The Jews in general explain it of the latter, and suppose that it was intended to encourage them in their present dispersions and wanderings; which they persuade themselves will likewise terminate in their settlement in Canaan, under the rule of their expected Messiah: and this, though not exactly as they suppose, will eventually be the case. But one of their Rabbies has truly said, that "their Redeemer was born before him who reduced them to this last captivity:" an opinion which is well worthy of their serious consideration!

Buried, &c. (4) This mournful employment took off the thoughts of the Egyptians, from the pursuit of Israel, for a time.

V. 8. The wilderness of Etham seems to have extended considerably on each side of the Red Sea, and round the bay, in which that sea terminates. (Note, Ex. 14:24, 25.)

21 And they removed from Libnah, and pitched at Rissah.

22 And they journeyed from Rissah, and pitched in Kehelathah.

23 And they went from Kehelathah, and pitched in mount Shapher.

24 And they removed from mount Shapher, and encamped in Haradah.

25 And they removed from Haradah, and pitched in Makheloth.

26 And they removed from Makheloth, and encamped at Tahath.

27 And they departed from Tahath, and pitched at Tarah.

28 And they removed from Tarah, and pitched in Mithcah.

29 And they went from Mithcah, and pitched in Hashmonah.

30 And they departed from Hashmonah, and encamped at Moseroth.

31 And they departed from Moseroth, and pitched in Bene-jaakan.

32 And they removed from Bene-jaakan, and encamped at Hor-hagidgad.

33 And they went from Hor-hagidgad, and pitched in Jotbathah.

34 And they removed from Jotbathah, and encamped at Ebronah.

35 And they departed from Ebronah, and encamped at Ezion-gaber.

36 And they removed from Ezion-gaber, and pitched in the wilderness of Zin, which is Kadesh. ^[B. C. 1453]

37 And they removed from Kadesh, and pitched in mount Hor, in the edge of the land of Edom.

38 And Aaron the priest went up into mount Hor, at the commandment of the LORD, and died there in the fortieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the first day of the fifth month. ^[B. C. 1452]

39 And Aaron was an hundred and twenty and three years old when he died in mount Hor.

40 And king Arad the Canaanite, which dwelt in the south, in the land of Canaan, heard of the coming of the children of Israel.

41 And they departed from mount Hor, and pitched in Zalmonah.

42 And they departed from Zalmonah, and pitched in Punon.

43 And they departed from Punon, and pitched in Oboth.

44 And they departed from Oboth, and pitched in Ije-abarim, in the border of Moab.

45 And they departed from Iim, and pitched in Dibon-gad.

46 And they removed from Dibon-gad, and encamped in Almon-diblathaim.

V. 30, 31. It is said elsewhere, (Note, Deut. 10:6.) "They took their journey from Beeroh of the children of Jaakan to Mosera;" yet here this seems reversed, "they departed from Moseroth, and pitched in Bene-jaakan," or, the sons of Jaakan.—Either different places are meant, or the people journeyed back again nearly to the same place. Probably no mention is made of any but their principal stations.

49 And they pitched by Jordan, from Beth-jesimoth even unto Abel-shittim, in the plains of Moab.

50 ¶ And the LORD spake unto Moses in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho, saying,

51 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye are passed over Jordan into the land of Canaan;

52 Then ye shall drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you, and destroy all their pictures, and destroy all their molten images, and quite pluck down all their high places.

53 And ye shall dispossess the inhabitants of the land, and dwell therein: for I have given you the land to possess it.

54 And ye shall divide the land by lot for an inheritance among your families, and to the more ye shall give the more inheritance, and to the fewer ye shall give the less inheritance: every man's inheritance shall be in the place where his lot falleth: according to the tribes of your fathers ye shall inherit.

55 But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you; then it shall come to pass, that those which ye let remain of them shall be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your sides, and shall vex you in the land wherein ye dwell.

56 Moreover, it shall come to pass, that I shall do unto you as I thought to do unto them.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

The boundaries of Canaan, 1-15. The names of the men who were chosen to divide the land, 16-28.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 2 Command the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land of Canaan; (this is the land that shall fall unto you for an inheritance, even the land of Canaan with the coasts thereof:)

3 Then your south quarter shall be from the wilderness of Zin, along by the coast of Edom, and your south border shall be the outmost coast of the salt sea eastward.

4 And your border shall turn from the south to the ascent of Akkrabbim, and pass on to Zin: and the going forth thereof shall be from the south to Kadesh-barnea, and shall go on to Hazar-addar, and pass on to Azmon.

5 And the border shall fetch a compass from Azmon unto the river of Egypt, and the goings out of it shall be at the sea.

6 And as for the western border, ye shall even have the great sea for a border: this shall be your west border.

7 And this shall be your north border: from the great sea ye shall point out for you mount Hor.

also mourning; and perhaps it was added to the name Shittim, where Israel grievously sinned and suffered in the matter of Baal-peor, to express the lamentation made on that account. —Probably the Israelites first gave names to many of the places in the desert, by which they were afterwards known.

V. 51-53. (Marg. Ref. p, q. Note, Ex. 34:11-17.) This repeated command rendered it the indispensable duty of the Israelites to extirpate the Canaanites by every means in their power, and as fast as they could subdue them; neither yielding to cowardice, sloth, or self-indulgence; nor setting up their own notions of clemency in opposition to the sentence of the righteous Judge, which they were commissioned to execute. —But they must also destroy all monuments of their abominable idolatries, however precious the materials, or curious the workmanship. —Groves, altars, and images, on hills and mountains, were called "high places."

V. 55, 56. The general duty of Israel became the particular duty of each tribe, after the division of the land, in that portion allotted to them: and the subsequent history proves that these denunciations were real prophecies, which have been wonderfully accomplished even to this day. —During many ages, the remnant of the devoted nations were exceedingly troublesome to the Israelites, even "as pricks in the eyes and thorns in the side," which would be a constant and almost intolerable torture: (Marg. Ref. t. Note, Josh. 23:13.) and at length, as they persisted in imitating their idolatries and atrocious crimes, they were punished as the Lord proposed to punish the Canaanites; being expelled from their country with tremendous slaughter, first by the Assyrians and Chaldeans, and at length more completely by the Romans.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is very useful to record the principal events of our own lives, and of the Lord's dealings with his church: and frequent meditation on these subjects tends to awaken gratitude, to excite repentance and humiliation, and to encourage our faith and hope in God. —Few of the periods of our lives can be reflected on, without reminding us of the Lord's goodness, and of our own ingratitude and disobedience: these, like a twofold thread, run entwined together through the whole of our experience, and our unworthiness renders the kindness of God more admirable, while his kindness shows our sins more execrable. —We could not reasonably wish to pass over again any stages of our pilgrimage, except we could hope, by the grace of God, to shun the sins which we committed, or to embrace those opportunities of glorifying God which before we slipped. But if we are upright in these desires, they will be graciously accepted: and we may be thankful that we have travelled thus far towards a better country; we may set up our Ebenezer, and praise him who hath helped us hitherto; and we may trust in him to bring us safe to our journey's end.

—But, whatever be our character and state, every day, week, month, and year, whether prosperous or adverse, carries us forward to our "long home," and conveys the unbeliever nearer to the gates of hell, the believer nearer to the joys of heaven; and not only those days which are marked for some important transaction or event, but those which glide away unnoticed and are speedily forgotten. —Soon will our wanderings end, and our eternal state be irrevocably fixed: how important then is the present moment! —Happy are they, whom the Lord now "guides with his counsel, and will" at length "receive to his glory!" To this felicity the gospel calls us: "Behold, now is the accepted time! behold, now is the day of salvation!" —Let sinners seize the precious opportunity, and flee for refuge to the hope set before them. Let us all behold with trembling, and keep at a distance from "the graves of the lusts;" let us fear the doom of the unbelievers, concerning whom the "Lord sware in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest;" let us shun the Meribah and Massahs, at which so many have perished in their murmurings and rebellions. Let us rather prefer the bitter waters of Marah, sweetened with the consolations of the gospel. —Let us not loiter in our journey, nor think of returning to Egypt, nor fear interposing enemies, difficulties, or death itself. Let us but redeem our time to glorify God, and serve our generation, and he will carry us safe through all to his eternal kingdom. —But except we separate from sinners, avoid occasions of evil, and crucify our lusts, we must perish: and if we show any quarter to our sinful propensities, they will gather strength by indulgence, mar the comfort of our lives, and perhaps "be pricks in our eyes and thorns in our sides" when we lie upon a death-bed.

NOTES—CHAP. XXXIV: V. 3-5. It was absolutely necessary that the boundaries of the land, of which the Israelites were commissioned to dispossess and extirpate the inhabitants, should be exactly ascertained: because they were not commissioned to push their conquests any further at that time, or at any time in the same manner; though it was the divine purpose at length to put them in possession of much more extensive territories. (Notes, Gen. 15:18-21. Ex. 23:31.) —The boundary of the land towards the south was here fixed, as beginning from the southern extremity of the Dead Sea, extending to the west in a winding direction, past the desert of Zin and the borders of Idumea to Kadesh-barnea, and thence to the place where the river of Egypt ran into the Mediterranean sea.

V. 6. The Mediterranean sea was the western boundary. V. 7-9. Mount Hor, here mentioned, was at the opposite extremity of the land, from that mount Hor on which Aaron died. It seems to have been a ridge of mount Libanus, which was the northern boundary, extending from the Mediterranean sea, southward of Zidon to the springs of Jordan.

border unto the entrance of Hamath: and the goings forth of the border shall be to Zedad.

9 And the border shall go on to Ziphron, and the goings out of it shall be at Hazar-enan: this shall be your north border.

10 And ye shall point out your east border from Hazar-enan to Shepham.

11 And the coast shall go down from Shepham to Riblah, on the east side of Ain: and the border shall descend, and shall reach unto the side of the sea of Chinnereth eastward.

12 And the border shall go down to Jordan, and the goings out of it shall be at the salt sea: this shall be your land, with the coasts thereof round about.

13 And Moses commanded the children of Israel, saying, This is the land which ye shall inherit by lot, which the LORD commanded to give unto the nine tribes, and to the half tribe.

14 For the tribe of the children of Reuben, according to the house of their fathers, and the tribe of the children of Gad, according to the house of their fathers, have received their inheritance, and half the tribe of Manasseh have received their inheritance.

15 The two tribes and the half tribe have received their inheritance on this side Jordan near Jericho, eastward, toward the sunrising.

16 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

17 These are the names of the men which shall divide the land unto you: Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun.

18 And ye shall take one prince of every tribe, to divide the land by inheritance.

19 And the names of the men are these: Of the tribe of Judah, Caleb the son of Jephunneh.

20 And of the tribe of the children of Simeon, Shemuel the son of Ammihud.

21 Of the tribe of Benjamin, Elidad the son of Chishon.

22 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Dan, Bukki the son of Jogli.

23 The prince of the children of Joseph, for the tribe of the children of Manasseh, Hanniel the son of Ephod.

24 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Ephraim, Kemuel the son of Shiphtan.

25 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Zebulun, Elizaphan the son of Parnach.

26 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Issachar, Paltiel the son of Azzan.

27 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Asher, Abihud the son of Shelomi.

28 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Naphtali, Pedahel the son of Ammihud.

29 These are they whom the LORD commanded to divide the inheritance unto the children of Israel in the land of Canaan.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Forty-eight cities with their suburbs to be given to the Levites, 1-8. Six to be cities of refuge, 9-15. Laws respecting murder and manslaughter, 16-51.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho, saying,

2 Command the children of Israel, that they give unto the Levites, of the inheritance of their possession, cities to dwell in: and ye shall give also unto the Levites suburbs for the cities round about them.

3 And the cities shall they have to dwell in, and the suburbs of them shall be for their cattle, and for their goods, and for all their beasts.

4 And the suburbs of the cities which ye shall give unto the Levites, shall reach from the wall of the city and outward, a thousand cubits round about.

5 And ye shall measure from without the city on the east side two thousand cubits, and on the south side two thousand cubits, and on the west side two thousand cubits, and on the north side two thousand cubits, and the city shall be in the midst: this shall be to them the suburbs of the cities.

V. 10-12. Jordan was only a small stream, till it united with other rivulets, and formed the sea, or lake, of Chinnereth, or Gennesaret, or Tiberias; but afterwards, emerging on the opposite end of the lake, it became a considerable river, then more generally known by the name Jordan. It seems, however, in its whole course, including the sea of Chinnereth and the Dead Sea, to have been the eastern boundary of Canaan, properly so called, which formed a country not more than one hundred and sixty miles long, and about sixty broad.—Moses was born in Egypt, and never had an opportunity of making a survey of the countries beyond Jordan. (Deut. 32:5.) Yet he has given an exact geographical description of them, which accords with the whole subsequent history, and with ancient history in general. Whatever opportunity he might have had, in those early times, of gaining information, it cannot reasonably be doubted, but that he was guided by the Holy Spirit, in thus specifying the grant which God made to Israel.—The Dead Sea, once a still more fertile country than Canaan, might be a useful lesson to Israel, to shun those sins which brought destruction upon Sodom and Gomorrah; and the wilderness might call to remembrance their wanderings, rebellions, and mercies there; and the border of Egypt might remind them, that they had been bondmen, but that the LORD their God had redeemed them."

V. 13-15. The countries already conquered, and conditionally assigned to the two tribes and a half, lay without these boundaries: but the Israelites might make alliances with other nations, not included in this grant; and they were not allowed to dispossess or extirpate them, as they did the devoted Canaanites.—During the reigns of David and Solomon they possessed a much larger country: yet, through their own sloth and wickedness, they seldom actually enjoyed the whole even of the land here granted to them.

V. 16-29. This appointment of the persons who should divide the land, gave assurance of conquest to Israel; and to the persons themselves of preservation from the sword, and from natural death, during the wars with the Canaanites.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The people of God, though generally poor, are said "to inherit the earth;" because "a little that the righteous hath, is better than the riches of many wicked."—For the bounds of their habitation, and the measure of their provision, are assigned them by the only wise God, their heavenly Father, in subsergency to their salvation, and the increase of grace and peace in their souls. Their numbers have likewise hitherto been few: and they have commonly been despised and neglected, by the multitude of the turbulent and wicked of the world. But "the eye of the LORD is upon them;" "his Name is their strong Tower;" he "knoweth what things they have need of," and hath reserved for them a more enduring inheritance in heaven; and "they are kept by his power through faith unto salvation." May we cast our lot among them, and not covet riches, nor seek, in any improper way, to increase our temporal provision; may we be careful not to live beneath our privileges, through sloth or indulgence; may we enjoy the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts, as an assurance of victory and eternal life; and when our warfare is ended, may we be welcomed to the heavenly Canaan by Jesus, the Prince of all the tribes of the redeemed, to our everlasting and complete satisfaction.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXV. V. 2-8. These cities, reserved for the priests and Levites, were designed, not only for their accommodation, but likewise that they might reside as religious instructors in the several parts of the land, and conveniently go to the adjacent towns and villages, or receive those who thence resorted to them. They might also dwell elsewhere on some occasions, and those of other tribes might live in these cities as their tenants.—Though the typical temple service was limited to one place; yet reading, expounding, and enforcing the law of God, with prayer and praise, were not thus confined, but might be attended to any where, with reference to the appointed sacrifices and priesthood, and to the ark of the covenant.—Thus the curse pronounced on Levi (Gen. 49:7.) was turned into a blessing, both to them, and to Israel in general.—Many of the cities spoken of seem to have been like our market-towns; and they were very numerous in that populous and fruitful country. The suburbs of a thousand cubits nearest the city would serve for gardens and out-houses; and the larger suburb of another thousand, at a greater distance, would yield pasture for the flocks. The whole seems to have extended nearly three quarters of a mile on every side of each city; and, though forty-eight such cities with the suburbs, in addition to the tithes and other perquisites, would be a very plentiful provision for this small tribe, it does not appear that the people complained of it as exorbitant.

Cities for refuge. (6) Marg. Ref d. Note, 11:15.

V. 11-15. In order to express the greater abhorrence of the Levites, there shall be six cities for refuge, which ye shall appoint for the manslayer, that he may flee thither: and to them ye shall add forty and two cities.

7 So all the cities which ye shall give to the Levites shall be forty and eight cities: them shall ye give with their suburbs.

8 And the cities which ye shall give shall be of the possession of the children of Israel: from them that have many ye shall give many; but from them that have few ye shall give few: every one shall give of his cities unto the Levites according to his inheritance which he inheriteth.

[Practical Observations.]

9 ¶ And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 10 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come over Jordan into the land of Canaan, 11 Then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person at unawares.

12 And they shall be unto you cities for refuge from the avenger; that the manslayer die not, until he stand before the congregation in judgment.

13 And of these cities which ye shall give, six cities shall ye have for refuge.

14 Ye shall give three cities on this side Jordan, and three cities shall ye give in the land of Canaan, which shall be cities of refuge.

15 These six cities shall be a refuge, both for the children of Israel, and for the stranger, and for the sojourner among them; that every one that killeth any person unawares may flee thither.

16 And if he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

17 And if he smite him with a throwing a stone, wherewith he may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

18 Or if he smite him with an hand-weapon of wood, wherewith he may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

murder, and to provide the more effectually for the punishment of the murderer, the prosecution and execution, by ancient custom, devolved upon the nearest relation, or next heir, or "the redeemer" (so the word rendered avenger signifies); the very person to whom the right of redemption belonged; who in notorious cases might pursue the criminal any whither, and execute vengeance without the formalities of a trial. This custom, under certain restrictions, was sanctioned by the divine law: for it must be supposed, that the avenger was not authorized to put any one to death on mere suspicion; as the magistrates and congregation might not inflict this punishment, except the fact was proved by the testimony of two witnesses. (Note, 24-30.) But, even if the person was certainly known, an equitable and merciful provision was also made, for the security of those who had unintentionally shed blood. Six cities were appointed in different parts of the land, to which they might flee for refuge and be safe, until they had a fair trial before the proper magistrates. One or other of these cities would lie within half a day's journey of every part of the land. It would rarely occur that the avenger of blood would be on the spot, and none else had a right to assault or detain the manslayer; at least if no malicious intention was manifest. These unhappy men would therefore generally get the start of their adversaries, and very few of them be overtaken before they gained the place of refuge. But then they must leave their families, employments, and most important interests, and dearest comforts; and they must neither loiter, nor yield to weariness, nor regard difficulties, nor slacken their pace, till they had got safe within the walls of the city; which secured them, in virtue of the divine institution, and not by its own natural strength.—The Jewish writers inform us, that, to afford every facility to those who thus fled for their life, the road to these cities was always preserved in good repair; and way-posts, inscribed REFUGE, were placed wherever needful, that they might not so much as hesitate for a moment. All strangers, i. e. sojourners, whether proselytes or not, were allowed the 19 The revenger of blood himself shall slay the murderer: when he meeteth him he shall slay him.

20 But if he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait that he die;

21 Or in enmity smite him with his hand, that he die: he that smote him shall surely be put to death: for he is a murderer: the revenger of blood shall slay the murderer when he meeteth him.

22 But if he thrust him suddenly without enmity, or have cast upon him any thing without laying of wait;

23 Or with any stone, wherewith a man may die, seeing him not, and cast it upon him that he die, and was not his enemy, neither sought his harm:

24 Then the congregation shall judge between the slayer and the revenger of blood, according to these judgments;

25 And the congregation shall deliver the slayer out of the hand of the revenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to the city of his refuge, whither he was fled; and he shall abide in it unto the death of the high-priest, which was anointed with the holy oil.

26 But if the slayer shall at any time come without the borders of the city of his refuge, whither he was fled;

27 And the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the city of his refuge, and the revenger of blood kill the slayer; he shall not be guilty of blood:

28 Because he should have remained in the city of his refuge until the death of the high-priest: but after the death of the high-priest, the slayer shall return into the land of his possession.

29 So these things shall be for a statute of judgment unto you, throughout your generations, in all your dwellings.

30 Whoso killeth any person, the murderer shall be put to death by the mouth of witnesses: but one witness shall not testify against any person to cause him to die.

benefit of this provision: for the tradition of the Jews, that none but proselytes were intended, most evidently contradicts the text. The region eastward of Jordan was nearly as long as that to the west of the river, and therefore three cities were appointed in each division.

V. 16-23. The several instances here adduced on each side, in order to illustrate the grand principle of the law, and the difference between the unfortunate manslayer and the murderer, are not intended to mark the distinction between sudden anger and malice premeditated; (which latter is indeed an aggravation, but not essential to murder:) but between intentionally striking a man with any weapon likely to cause death, or in wrath from hatred, or with a design of doing him injury; and an unintentional blow, at unawares, and without seeking his harm, which alone is here considered as manslaughter.—(Note, Deut. 19:2-10.)

V. 24-30. After the manslayer had been received into the city of refuge, the avenger of blood could only act as prosecutor; and the magistrates, in the presence of the people, were appointed to decide the cause according to the rules here laid down. Probably the accused person was tried at or near the place, where the deceased had been slain, and where evidence could most easily be brought: and in case he was acquitted by the decision of the judges, and with the approbation of the people, he was conveyed back to the city of refuge, where he was protected, as a kind of prisoner at large, till the death of the high-priest; when the public loss, and the grief occasioned by it, might be supposed to swallow up all personal regrets and resentments: and then he was permitted to return to his house and estate. But if, in the meanwhile, he ventured to leave the city, and the avenger met him and slew him, he was supposed to merit his doom, by thus neglecting the appointment of God for his preservation, and the avenger must not be punished. This shows that in other cases, if the avenger slew an innocent man, on surmise, he was liable to the punishment of a murderer.—But if, by the testimony of two credible witnesses, the man 31 Moreover, ^{ye} shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is ^{his} guilt of death: but he shall be surely put to death.

32 And ye shall take no satisfaction for him that is fled to the city of his refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the priest.

33 So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are; for blood, it defileth the land: the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it.

34 ^{Defile} not therefore the land which ye shall inhabit, wherein I dwell: for I the LORD ^{do} dwell among the children of Israel.

who had fled to the city of refuge (or any other person tried for murder), was adjudged guilty, he must, without fail, be put to death: yet if only one witness supported the charge, though he appeared guilty, he must not be thus punished.

V. 31-34. In case murder was proved against a man, no atonement or ransom might be accepted for his life; but, however otherwise distinguished, he must be put to death: nay, further, no atonement or compensation might purchase the manslayer the liberty of leaving the city of refuge, before the death of the high-priest! Because murder was to be considered, not so much as the private injury of an individual, as the crime of the nation, which could only be expiated by the death of the offender; and as defiling the land, till thus expiated. (Note, Deut. 21:1-9.) Does not this fully prove, that the connivance of our government, in the burning of widows and in human sacrifices, and in other species of murder committed in our East Indian dominions, under the pretext of an idolatrous religion, is wholly unjustifiable, and burthens our land and all connected with those distant regions, with the guilt of blood, not expiated by that of those who shed it?—The vengeance of God might be expected on the nation of Israel, if the magistrates and people neglected their duty in this respect; and especially, as to the land in which the Lord himself condescended to dwell by his temple and ordinances.

This remarkable law, expressive of the deepest detestation of murder, yet providing most effectually against the innocent being punished with the guilty, is likewise an instructive typical representation of the salvation of the gospel. "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men." "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after death is the judgment," with its eternal consequences. In the mean while, a REFUGE is provided and revealed in Christ Jesus. His ministers warn sinners to "flee from the wrath to come," and instruct and exhort them to "flee for refuge, to lay hold on the hope set before them." All things are prepared for the reception of those who obey this call. By faith they discern both their danger and Refuge. Then fear urges and hope animates. Should death, like the avenger of blood, find them without, destruction is inevitable. All is at stake: this is their "one thing needful." Now no longer will they be amused, or bribed, or persuaded to loiter. Even their choicest earthly comforts, and most important temporal interests, appear comparatively worthless. They "count all but loss... that they may win Christ, and be found in him." They apply earnestly to him, and follow his instructions. They are welcomed into the Refuge which he hath provided. "There is no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus:" but a trial must take place before the assembled world, by which those who have a right, as true believers, to this Refuge, will be distinguished from all who have only a dead faith. At present true believers abide in him, and cleave to him in the obedience of faith and love; and at length in virtue of the death of their great and gracious High-Priest; they will be restored to their forfeited inheritance.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. The provision which God hath appointed for his ministers, was not intended to pamper them in pride, sloth, or self-indulgence; and thus to disqualify them for their work, and teach them to dislike and despise it: but to free them from distracting care, and to leave them at leisure wholly to employ themselves in their important duties; and to seize every opportunity of conciliating the people, and gaining attention to their instructions. So that the grant, and the effect of it when properly used, were intended ultimately and mainly for the advantage of those who gave, not of those who received it. But the sinfulness of man's heart perverts the wisest constitutions, human and divine; and the abuse made, alas! by too many affords others a plausible pretext for neglecting their duty. Thus both are criminal, but they who furnish the excuse have the deeper guilt.—It is very profitable for the ministers of the gospel frequently to confer together. This tends to increase mutual love, and gives younger ministers especially the opportunity of profiting by the knowledge, experience, and observations of their seniors:

CHAPTER XXXVI.

A difficulty shown by the Manassites respecting daughters inheriting. —5. Such must marry in their own tribe, 6-8. Zelophehad's daughters are married to the sons of their father's brother, 10-13.

AND the chief fathers of the families of the children of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of the sons of Joseph, came near, and spake before Moses, and before the princes, the chief fathers of the children of Israel;

2 And they said, ^{The} LORD commanded my lord to give the land for an inheritance by lot to the children of Israel: and my lord was commanded by the LORD ^{to} give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother unto his daughters, but above all they should pray much together, for each other personally, for a blessing on each other's labours, for a blessing on the word, and for the success of the gospel and the enlargement of the church, in every place. And when, with this advantage, access to a number of willing hearers can be obtained, a minister of Christ has abundant reason for content and thankfulness.—In the maintenance of the ministry, in the support of divine worship, in the provision for the poor, or in any other good work, equality and proportion should be considered, both by those who contribute, and those who receive; for that donation is liberality from the poorer, which is shamefully scanty in those of superior affluence.

V. 9-34. It is very important in the administration of justice, that the guilty should not escape, and that the innocent should not suffer: and though the prosecution and execution of criminals be a painful, and in many cases an odious employment; yet it is necessary, and therefore it is a duty which should be performed by those concerned, from regard to public justice, and the welfare of society. This is especially the case with murder in all its forms, and under all disguises, which so pollutes the land, that nothing but the blood of the murderer, whatever be his rank or quality can cleanse it. Alas! that unscriptural and absurd distinctions, and concessions to the maxims of proud ungodly men, should cause so many atrocious murders to pass unpunished, the guilt of which, with accumulating weight will, it is seriously to be apprehended, help to sink this nation into destruction!—this nation which hath so long been favoured in a peculiar manner in God's providence, and where he hath so long dwelt by his word and ordinances; but which, infidelity, profaneness, and licentiousness, threatening to deluge all before them, mark to be ripening apace for ruin; except, in answer to the prayers of the remnant of his people, "the Spirit of the LORD lift up a standard against them!" Let us all then with one consent present our supplications in behalf of our beloved country, that reformation and a general revival of pure religion may avert the judgments of God.—The restrictions, dangers, and inconveniences, which unintentional bloodshed occasioned, should impress us with horror at the thought of even heedlessly occasioning death; and should increase our caution and circumspection, as well as watchfulness over our passions, and also our earnestness in praying to be preserved from such a calamity.—But, above all, let sinners take warning without delay to flee for refuge to Jesus Christ, whatever they renounce, venture, and suffer: let them not stop short, turn back, or loiter: let them not fear a repulse; for the Refuge is appointed for the purpose of receiving all such, as are sensible of their danger, and flee to lay hold on the hope set before them, how vile soever they have been. Let them abide in Christ, and show their faith by a thankful obedience to him, who died for sinners, and rose again: let them be careful not to pervert this refuge by encouraging themselves in unrepented sin; and let them wait the appointed time, and they shall certainly at length be restored to liberty, and reinstated in their forfeited inheritance. The Lord grant that neither the writer, nor any of the readers, may be "of those who draw back unto perdition;" but that we all may be "of those who believe to the saving of the soul!"

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXVI. V. 1-12. It does not appear that Manasseh left any son but Machir, or Machir any son but Gilead; from whose posterity, in different families, this whole numerous tribe had sprung. To one division of it a portion had been assigned eastward of Jordan: but Zelophehad was of that division, to which an inheritance was afterwards allotted west of Jordan; yet, expecting the promised land, the elders of the Manassites proposed a difficulty, upon the adjudged case of Zelophehad's daughters. (Notes, 27:1-11.)—If the females should inherit, in defect of male issue, and should intermarry with other tribes, they would diminish the interest and weaken the influence of their own tribes, and give occasion to future confusion, and perhaps contention. The Manassites therefore referred the case to Moses; and he, by the authority of God, annexed a clause, which would effectually keep the tribes and inheritances distinct, as long as it was observed. Heirs were not allowed to marry

3 And if they be married to any of the sons of the other tribes of the children of Israel; then shall their inheritance be taken from the inheritance of our fathers, and shall be put to the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: so shall it be taken from the lot of our inheritance.

4 And when ^{the} jubilee of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: so shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers.

5 And Moses commanded the children of Israel, according to the word of the Lord, saying, The tribe of the sons of Joseph ^{hath} said well.

6 This is the thing which the Lord doth command concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, saying, Let them ^{marry} to whom they think best; ^{only} to the family of the tribe of their father shall they marry.

7 So shall not the inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe; for every one of the children of Israel shall ^{keep} himself to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers.

8 And ^{every} daughter, that possesseth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Israel, shall be wife unto one of the family of the tribe of her father, that the children of Israel may enjoy every man the inheritance of his fathers.

9 Neither shall the inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe; but every one of the tribes of the children of Israel shall keep himself to his own inheritance.

10 ¶ Even ^{has} the Lord commanded Moses, ^{to} did the daughters of Zelophehad:

11 For Mahlah, Tirzah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Noah, the daughters of Zelophehad, were married unto their father's brother's sons.

12 And they were married ^{into} the families of the sons of Manasseh, the son of Joseph; and their inheritance remained in the tribe of the family of their father.

out of their own tribe, though within those bounds they might consult their own inclinations. Probably there had been some prospect of Zelophehad's daughters marrying into another tribe; as both their character and expected inheritance would induce overtures from different quarters: but when the will of God was declared, all parties acquiesced, and they were married to their own cousins; not out of necessity, for there were many thousands within the assigned limits; but by choice, and perhaps because these were the next heirs of the family; and we may hence learn that there is nothing improper in such marriages, as it has often been groundlessly supposed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

No laws, however excellent, express, or multiplied, can reach every particular case which may arise; and still room will be left for the exercise of sound judgment and common sense. But when these are regulated according to the true meaning of the word of God, and in dependence on divine teaching, they will guide us through all perplexities, as far as our immediate duty is concerned. Yet the Lord frequently eaves us to feel our difficulties, that we may be habituated to reflect, to search the Scriptures, and to trust him more simply.—All our inclinations ought to be subjected to the will of God; and in contracting marriage, future consequences to posterity, as well as to ourselves and our connexions, should be taken into consideration.—The Scriptures indeed suppose that esteem, affection, and preference, are requisite in this important relation; but they know nothing of that irrational, ungovernable, and idolatrous passion, which regardless of all consequences, and in defiance of all authority, rushes headlong upon gratification; which is neither moderated by discretion, nor subordinated to the will of God; which is not rational esteem, nor tender friendship, nor congenial affection, but something vastly more rapturous, unintelligible, and undefinable; and which, with all its refinements, is inconsistent with common sense, the interests of society, the happiness of domestic life, and the Christian religion.—Finally, though it is prudent to foresee and prevent disputes about temporal property, it would be better if we were equally quicksighted and attentive in respect of our spiritual and eternal interests. But “the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light.”

THE FIFTH BOOK OF MOSES,

DEUTERONOMY.

THIS BOOK is named by the Jews, as in some former instances, from one of the first words (דברים). Some however, call it, The Book of Reprehensions, from the reproofs contained in it: others style it Torah (תורה), or the Law; and Misna (משנה), 17:18. Heb.) which is nearly the same as Deuteronomy, the name taken from the Septuagint in our version; which signifies a second law, or a repetition of the law. Indeed several of the laws before given are repeated: sometimes with further explanations, and enforced by the most animated and pathetic exhortations and expostulations; and therefore Moses generally speaks in the first person, and directly addresses the people. In the former books he spoke as a lawgiver, merely declaring the statutes, which God had delivered to him. But here he is more generally a preacher, enforcing on a new generation, the laws before given, with illustrations, warnings, exhortations, and persuasions, frequently in the highest style of simple pathetic eloquence. The most remarkable events of the preceding history are likewise recapitulated, and applied to practical purposes. These repetitions were peculiarly proper, in his circumstances; and the way in which Moses applied them, was exceedingly adapted to leave a deep and durable impression on the hearts and consciences of the people.—But several new laws are likewise added, and various other things not before mentioned.—The last two months of Moses's life, which he knew to be his concluding scene, were employed in delivering and committing to writing the several parts of this book; so that it contains his dying exhortations to Israel: and his active zeal for the glory of God, and fervent love to his people, with the various methods which he employed for their benefit in his concluding days, are very remarkable.—Having reminded them of the Lord's dealings with their fathers and with them, and of their past rebellions, he enforced obedience to all his commandments with unequalled pathos and energy, and almost from every imaginable motive. He set before them, in prophetic blessings and curses, the consequences of their conduct; and gave directions for writing the law on pillars of stone, and ratifying its principal parts in a most extraordinary manner, from mount Ebal and mount Gerizim. (27:)—He then formed the substance of his instructions, exhortations, and warnings, into a prophetic song (31:32);—and finally pronounced blessings, evidently prophetic, on their several tribes. (33:)—Thus far the book was no doubt written by him, and has every mark of being genuine; but at the close some other person informs us, that Moses having ascended mount Nebo, viewed the promised land, and died, and was buried by the Lord himself, and lamented by Israel thirty days. (34:)—It is an honourable circumstance to this portion of Scripture, that our Lord took all the texts from it, with which he baffled Satan's temptations: and it is in both testaments quoted as the work of Moses, and the word of God. (1 Kings 2:3. 2 Chr. 2:4. Dan. 9:13. Matt. 4:4, 7, 10. John 1:45. Acts 3:22. 7:37. Rom. 10:6, 8. 1 Cor. 9:9. Gal. 3:10—13.—The prophecies also contained in it are most explicit and numerous, and unanswerably demonstrate its divine origin. They have been evidently fulfilling during a course of above three thousand years; and yet some of them remain unaccomplished. Of this the reader will judge for himself on carefully considering the Notes on the chapters here referred to. (4:18; 29:29; 31:29; 33:)

CHAPTER I.

Moses, toward the end of the fortieth year of Israel's continuance in the wilderness, addresses the people, 1-5. He relates how the Lord directed them to leave Horeb, 6-8; and appointed him assistants in the government, 9-13; how they passed the desert to Kadesh-barnea, and sent spies to search the land; and through their report, brought on themselves the sentence of exclusion from the promised land, by their unbelief, 13-46.

THESE be the words which Moses spake unto all Israel, on this side Jordan, in the wilderness, in the plain over against the Red sea, between Paran, and Tophel, and Laban, and Hazeroth, and Dizahab.

2 (There are eleven days' journey from Horeb, by the way of mount Seir, unto Kadesh-barnea.)

3 And it came to pass in the fortieth year, in the eleventh month, on the first day of the month, that Moses spake unto the children of Israel, according unto all that the Lord had given him in commandment unto them;

4 After he had said Sihon the king of the Amorites, which dwelt in Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, which dwelt at Astaroth in Edrei:

5 On this side Jordan, in the land of Moab, began Moses to declare this law, saying,

6 The Lord our God spake unto us in Horeb, saying, Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount:

7 Turn you, and take your journey, and go to the mount of the Amorites, and unto all the places nigh thereunto, in the plain, in the hills, and in the vale, and in the south, and by the sea-side, to the land of the Canaanites, and unto Lebanon, unto the great river, the river Euphrates.

8 Behold, I have set the land before you: go in and possess the land which the Lord swore unto your fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give unto them, and to their seed after them.

consequences of obedience, and from the experience of former years.

V. 6-8. Moses, being about to recapitulate some remarkable particulars of the preceding narrative, as introductory to his exhortations, began with Israel's departure from Horeb. They had continued there almost a year: and as the law had then been given, and the worship at the tabernacle fully instituted; they needed to stay there no longer, but go directly, (as on a journey rather than a warfare,) and possess the promised land; both that which was more properly called Canaan, and also the other countries even to the Euphrates. (Notes, Num. 10:11-13, 31.)

V. 11. In rather more than two hundred years, the people had multiplied to much more than ten thousand times the number of which they had consisted! The promises of God did not limit their future increase, nor did the faith and prayer of Moses; for a large definite is taken for an indefinite number.—Under Pharaoh the increase of Israel excited jealousy and cruelty: (Note, Ex. 1:9, 10.) but Moses delighted in it, and prayed that it might be still far greater. This was a tacit proof of their murmurings and wishes to return into Egypt; and he evidently meant to remind them, that he sought not his own grandeur or advantage, but their good; and that in the most laborious, patient, and disinterested manner. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12-18. The counsel, here referred to, seems to have been suggested by Jethro before the giving of the law. (Notes, Ex. 18:13-26.) Moses in consequence proposed it to the Lord, who approved it; and then, with the concurrence of the people, it at length took place about the time when they departed from Horeb, and at no great distance from that of the appointment of the seventy elders. (Notes, Num. 11:16-30.) The captains, however, must have been distinct from the elders, and much more numerous: being according to the number of the thousands and hundreds, over whom they probably presided in a civil and military capacity, yet with subordination; and therefore the superiors of them might be called judges. Or these judges might be the seventy elders appointed soon afterwards.

V. 22-28. (Notes, and P. O. Num. 13:14.) The people proposed this measure from unbelief; Moses mistaking their intention, approved of it; and the Lord, being justly displeased, NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. "The words," as here mentioned, seem to mean the subsequent exhortations which Moses delivered to the principal persons in Israel, that they might make them known in their several tribes and families. Perhaps he spake some of the principal passages many times over to the people in general, assembled in large companies for that purpose: but there is no ground to suppose that his voice was miraculously rendered audible to the whole nation at once, as some have asserted.—The names of places, here mentioned, seem intended to mark out the spot, where Israel was encamped, as contiguous to all of them: but it is not easy to make this out. The marginal reading, Zuph, instead of "the Red Sea," seems preferable, as there is nothing in the original for sea. Probably Zuph was a place in the country of Moab. (Note, Num. 21:11-15.) There might also be other places called Paran and Hazeroth, besides those before read of, which were remote from the present encampment of Israel.—The word rendered "on this side," may mean at the passage of Jordan. No doubt the eastern side was intended.

Red Sea.] כספיר, Num. 21:14.—Zuph (marg.) would more properly be Suph; as it is spelt with Samech, not Zain. This confirms the opinion above stated, that the clause, rendered "the Red Sea," means the same place in Moab which is mentioned in Num. 21:14.

V. 2. This seems to have been introduced to remind the Israelites, that their own misconduct alone had occasioned their tedious wanderings: otherwise they might long before have been settled in peaceable possession of Canaan; as in eleven days they might have marched from Horeb to the borders of the land.—It does not appear, that the march of Israel from Horeb to Kadesh-barnea, at the first, took up much time. (6-8, 19, 20. Num. 10:12, 13. 13:3, 26. 14:25, 32:5.)

V. 5. This law.] The word law is at some times used with considerable latitude, and at others with more exact precision, which is generally perceivable from the context. This book does not contain another law, distinct from that of the foregoing books: and it is evident it comprises much more than a repetition of the law before given. "This law" must therefore mean the commands of God, enforced by arguments deduced from their reasonableness and authority, from the the mountain of the Amorites, which the LORD our God doth give unto us.

21 Behold, the LORD thy God hath set the land before thee: go up and possess it, as the LORD God of thy fathers hath said unto thee: ^a“fear not, neither be discouraged.

22 And ye came near unto me every one of you, and said, ^a“We will send men before us, and they shall search us out the land, and bring us word again by what way we must go up, and into what cities we shall come.

23 And the saying pleased me well: and I took twelve men of you, one of a tribe.

24 And ^athey turned and went up into the mountain, and came unto the valley of Eshcol, and searched it out.

25 And they took of the fruit of the land in their hands, and brought it down unto us, and brought us word again, and said, ^aIt is a good land which the LORD our God doth give us.

26 Notwithstanding ^aye would not go up, but rebelled against the commandment of the LORD your God.

27 And ye murmured in your tents, and said, Because ^athe LORD hated us, he hath brought us forth out of the land of Egypt, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us.

28 Whither shall we go up? our brethren have ^adiscouraged our heart, saying, ^a“The people is greater and taller than we; the cities are great and walled up to heaven; and, moreover, ^awe have seen the sons of the Anakims there.

29 Then I said unto you, ^a“Dread not, neither be afraid of them.

30 The LORD your God which goeth before you, ^ahe shall fight for you, ^aaccording to all that he did for you in Egypt before your eyes:

31 And ^ain the wilderness, where thou hast seen how that the LORD thy God ^abare thee as a man doth bear his son, in all the way that ye went, until ye came into this place.

32 Yet in this thing ^aye did not believe the LORD your God,

33 Who went ^ain the way before you, to search you out a place to pitch your tents ^ain, in fire by night, to show you by what way ye should go, and in a cloud by day.

34 And the LORD heard the voice of your words and was wroth, ^aand sware, saying,

35 Surely there shall not one of these men of this evil generation see that good land, which I sware to give unto your fathers;

36 Save ^aCaleb the son of Jephunneh, he shall see it; and to him will I give the land that he hath trodden upon, and to his children, because he hath ^awholly followed the LORD.

37 Also ^athe LORD was angry with me for your sakes, saying, ^aThou also shalt not go in thither.

38 But ^aJoshua the son of Nun, ^awhich standeth before thee, he shall go in thither: ^a“encourage him; for he shall cause Israel to inherit it.

39 Moreover, ^ayour little ones, which ye said should be a prey, and your children, ^awhich in that day had no knowledge between good and evil, they shall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they shall possess it.

40 But ^aas for you, ^aturn ye, and take your journey into the wilderness, by the way of the Red Sea.

41 Then ye answered and said unto me, ^a“We have sinned against the LORD; we will go up and fight, according to all that the LORD our God commanded us. And when ye had girded on every man his weapons of war, ye were ready to go up into the hill.

42 And the LORD said unto me, Say unto them, ^aGo not up, neither fight: ^a“for I am not among you; lest ye be smitten before your enemies.

43 So I spake unto you, and ye would not hear, ^abut rebelled against the commandment of the LORD, and ^awent presumptuously up into the hill.

44 And the Amorites which dwell in that mountain, came out against you, and ^achased you as bees do, and destroyed you in Seir, ^aeven ^aunto Hormah.

45 And ^aye returned, and wept before the LORD: but the LORD would not hearken to your voice, nor give ear unto you.

46 So ye abode ^ain Kadesh many days, according unto the days that ye abode there.

permitted them to follow their own counsel, which proved injurious to them only through their sin and folly. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 29—31. Moses, in bitterness of spirit, when greatly tried, had hastily spoken, as if he had been required to bear Israel as a man does his son; (Note, Num. 11:11—15.) but he here tacitly retracted it, and allowed that the Lord himself had thus borne or carried them.—The arguments, which he at that time used with them, taken from their past experience of God's powerful protection and tender care, are here adduced, though not related in the account of these transactions.

V. 32—36. Moses here addressed another generation, and not that which had been sentenced, for unbelief and disobedience, to fall in the wilderness: but many of them might be concerned, though not at that time of age; the rest in general showed a disposition to imitate the sin of their fathers; and they formed the same nation, the same body corporate, though not the same individuals. (Notes, Ex. 13:21,22. 40:36—38. Num. 14:22—24.)

V. 37. It was natural for Moses here to introduce this subject, though the event took place many years after that, of which he was discoursing: for it would occur to his mind that he also was excluded, and thus involved in the general sentence, in consequence of a temptation which the unbelief of the people had laid in his way. This he mentioned, not to excuse himself but to humble them; and remind them, that they heard the words of a dying man, and of one to whose death they had been accessory. (Note, Num. 20:10—13.) days, before they were sentenced to return by the way of the Red Sea; and they remained there many days afterwards.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8. The faithful servants of the Lord, with advancing years and experience, frequently acquire increasing reputation for wisdom, integrity, and disinterested philanthropy, as well as pious zeal for the glory of God. This adds to their influence, and gives weight to their instructions; and when favoured with health, they may, with vast advantage, redouble their diligence in enforcing the truths, which they before had taught, upon the consciences of the people, that they may have them in remembrance after their decease. (Note, 2 Pet. 1:12—15.) While they draw nearer to the heavenly world, they often seem to breathe a purer air, and all their words have a heavenly savour; their motion accelerates, as they approach their rest; their earnestness increases, when they can be influenced by no earthly motive; and their confidence and comfort acquire strength, in defiance of the approaching king of terrors. Under such circumstances their instructions are doubly impressive, and frequently have a durable effect upon the survivors. They should then seize every occasion of reminding the people of the wisdom, power, truth, and love of God, as manifested in his dealings with them; and there are times when they may also, consistently with deep humility, speak of their own conduct, their love to souls, their faithful labours, their self-denial, and patient sufferings in the arduous work about which they are engaged; in order to obviate prejudice, and to obtain a more favourable attention to further exhortations. But it is likewise necessary to show the people their transgressions, that they may be duly humbled; to warn them against the fatal effects of unbelief and sin; to point out the advantages of confidence in God and obedience to him; and to unite confessions of their own imperfection and sinfulness, (37) both to avoid giving needless

CHAPTER II.

Moses reminds the people of the command given them not to meddle with Edom, Moab, or Ammon: he introduces some fragments of very ancient history; and touches on the continuance of Israel during forty years in the wilderness, till the rebellious generation was dead, 1-23. The grant and conquest of the kingdom of Sihon, 24-31.

THEN we turned and took our journey into the wilderness by the way of the Red Sea, as the LORD spake unto me: and we compassed mount Seir many days.

2 And the LORD spake unto me, saying,

3 Ye have compassed this mountain ^{along} enough: turn you northward.

4 And command thou the people, saying, ^{Ye are} to pass through the coast of your brethren the children of Esau, which dwell in Seir, and they shall be afraid of you: take ye good heed unto yourselves therefore.

5 Meddle not with them; for I will not give you of their land, ^{no} not so much as a foot-breadth; because I have given mount Seir unto Esau for a possession.

6 Ye shall buy meat of them for money, that ye may eat; and ye shall also buy water of them for money, that ye may drink.

7 For the LORD thy God hath blessed thee in all the works of thy hand; he knoweth thy walking through this great wilderness: these forty years the LORD thy God hath been with thee; thou hast lacked nothing.

8 And when we passed by from our brethren the children of Esau, which dwell in Seir, through the way of the plain from Elath, and from Ezion-gaber, we turned, and passed by the way of the wilderness of Moab.

9 And the LORD said unto me, Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle; for I will not give thee of their land for a possession, because I have given ^{Ar} unto the children of Lot for a possession.

10 The Emims dwell therein in times past, a people great and many, and tall as the Anakims;

11 Which also were accounted giants, as the Anakims; but the Moabites call them Emims.

12 The Horims also dwell in Seir before-time: but the children of Esau succeeded them, when they had destroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their stead, as Israel did unto the land of his possession which the LORD gave unto them.

13 Now rise up, said I, and get you over the brook Zered. And we went over the brook Zered.

14 And the space in which we came from Kadesh-barnea, until we were come over the brook Zered, was thirty and eight years; until all the generation of the men of war were wasted out from among the host, as the LORD swore unto them.

15 For indeed the hand of the LORD was against them, to destroy them from among the host, until they were consumed.

16 ¶ So it came to pass when all the men of war were consumed and dead from among the people,

17 That the LORD spake unto me, saying,

18 Thou art to pass over through Ar, the coast of Moab, this day.

19 And when thou comest nigh over against the children of Ammon, distress them not, nor meddle with them: for I will not give thee of the land of the children of Ammon any possession, because I have given it unto the children of Lot for a possession.

20 (That also was accounted a land of giants: giants dwell therein in old time, and the Ammonites call them Zamzummims; offence, to suggest encouragement, and to excite personal humiliation.

V. 9-16. It is exceedingly profitable for us frequently to meditate on the history of our past lives, and to set apart time for that purpose; to divide our years into distinct periods; to review them separately; to give thanks for the mercies of each successive period; and to confess and seek forgiveness of all our sins, as far as we remember them: and thus endeavouring to revive suitable affections, with earnest prayers and simple dependence on the Lord, to renew our acceptance of his salvation, and the surrender of ourselves to his service.—Without repeating the observations before made on the history here recapitulated, we may take notice in general that nothing but total unbelief, and the disobedience connected with it, can exclude any sinner from the promised rest; that unbelief, partially operating in disobedience, occasions manifold abatements and delays in our comforts; that our own expedients seldom avail to much good purpose, that courage, in the exercise of faith and the path of duty, enables the possessor to follow the LORD wholly, to disregard all obstructions, to triumph over all opposition, and to seize the promised blessings; that all the mercies which we receive render our distrust more inexcusable; that the sins of some are the temptations of others, and tend to involve them in guilt and punishment; that worldly sorrow is seldom better than impatience and rebellion and unbelief, and thus worketh death; and that they who do not exercise godly sorrow in due time, and obey the call of mercy, must weep with bitter unavailing sorrow, when the sentence of condemnation is irrevocably past. Finally, we may observe, that every public and honourable trust implies a very heavy and laborious duty, and that frequently the duty is particularly described in Scripture.—Happy is it for themselves, and for those around them, when men diligently search out such passages as describe their duties, and show what manner of persons they ought to be, in that station of life in which the providence of God has placed them: while they seriously meditate on them, and pray over them; and then in the fear of God, as under his eye, and with reference to the day of judgment, endeavour to regulate their public and private conduct according to them.

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 3. Here again an almost total silence is observed, concerning more than thirty-seven years of the time which the Israelites passed in the wilderness. (Note, Num. 20:1.) We may however suppose, that Moses, Aaron, and the priests and Levites, were diligently employed in instructing the people; and that many even “of them whose carcasses fell in the wilderness,” were thus prepared for heaven; while the survivors were humbled and proved, in order to their entrance into the promised land. In the mean time the Canaanites, elated with their first success, and perceiving their dreaded invaders entangled in the wilderness, grew more insolent and daring in wickedness, and ripened apace for destruction.

V. 4-7. On comparing this passage with the texts referred to in the margin, it appears that the Edomites refused the Israelites a passage into the heart of their country, but allowed them to march through some parts of the confines; and that they generally sold them provisions, though perhaps in some instances they refused to do it. (Note, Num. 20:14-21.)—The manna was still continued; yet the people would naturally desire change of diet when they came near cultivated regions. This they might purchase of the Edomites, but they were not permitted to plunder, because God himself had given mount Seir to the descendants of Esau for their inheritance. Nor had Israel any need to covet the possessions of Edom, seeing the Lord had noticed, guided, and guarded them during all their wanderings in the wilderness; and for forty years had blessed them with an abundant supply of every needful good.—Moses called the Edomites brethren, though they would not acknowledge or act according to that relation. Thus the Israelites were taught to forgive their enemies, before they were employed to execute vengeance on the enemies of the Lord; and to obey his command in leaving nations unmolested, before they fulfilled his word in dispossessing and destroying the Amorites and Canaanites. (Note, Num. 21:21-25.) It is also observable that the opposition of Edom is not here mentioned; for the Spirit, which spake by Moses, would not needlessly repeat grievances, but bury them in oblivion.

V. 10, 11. All the nations here mentioned appear to have been the posterity of Ham, who lay under the prophetic curse of Noah, which was thus executed upon this part of them by the Moabites and Edomites.

V. 12. Israel had at the time when Moses spake this, conquered Sihon and Og, and taken possession of their countries, as Edom had done to the Horims. (22. Note, Gen. 36:20.)

V. 15. Num. 16:45, 49. 21:6. 25:9.

V. 20-23. These fragments of ancient history were introduced to encourage the Israelites. If the Lord destroyed these gigantic people before the posterity of Lot, and of Esau; what cause had the posterity of Abraham, Isaac, and

The servants of God, while they despise worldly riches in comparison of a treasure in heaven, and often live and die poor, bequeath to their posterity the most durable possessions, in the blessings which God had promised to bestow upon them, for the sake of their parents.—“The earth is the Lord’s, and the fulness thereof;" and with perfect justice, absolute sovereignty, and irresistible power, he assigns to every people the countries which they inhabit, and dispossesses them to make way for others, as he sees good: (Notes, 32:8.) but none can plead his grant to excuse the violence which ambition, rapacity, or revenge induce them to commit; though undesignedly they fulfil his secret purposes.—When nations or individuals are ripe for destruction, the Lord in awful judgment gives them up to final and total obduracy; and their deperate wickedness both occasions their ruin, and manifests his righteousness. Then the wic est are infuriated, and the boldest are intimidated; they tremble, and are in anguish, and perish, as instructive examples to the survivors.—But, calling off our attention from the enemies of God, to reflect upon his dealings with Israel, we are led to meditate upon years spent in vanity through our transgressions and his indignation. A succession of uninteresting events and changes, of trifling employments and pursuits, of disappointed expectations and unsatisfying enjoyments, wear out the life of man, and bring one generation after another to the grave. Indeed ever since the sentence was passed upon offending man, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," "the hand of the Lord hath been against us to destroy us until we are consumed;" nor can wisdom, learning, authority, wealth, courage, vigour of constitution, or eminence of reputation, procure any exemption or respite, in this universal execution: nay, even faith and piety plead in vain for another passage to the heavenly felicity. (Notes, 2 Cor. 5:1—4.)—What the mouth of the Lord hath spoken, his hand is engaged to perform. Wretched then are they who abide, and die, under the incumbent weight of that "wrath of God which is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men." (Notes, Rom. 1:17—20.) But happy those whom "Jesus hath delivered from the wrath to come," and to whom he hath "given the earnest of his Spirit in their hearts." "All things are theirs;" all the promises of God belong to them, and are ratified by covenant and by oath. His arm is engaged on their behalf to perform all his word: "He knows," guides, guards, and approves their path, while "walking through this great wilderness;" for the twenty, thirty, fifty, sixty, or even eighty years of their past lives, they have lacked nothing, but have had all with a peculiar blessing. (Notes, Gen. 48:15, 16. 49:18.) The Lord is their Portion, nor need they envy the prosperity, or covet the possession, of any worldling. He who hath prepared for them an incorruptible inheritance, and taught them in the first place to seek it, will provide for them all that is needful and profitable by the way. They have only to submit to his disposal; to depend on him; to abstain from what he forbids, and deny themselves when he requires it, in his providence or by his precept: to receive what he gives with thankfulness, and to use it with moderation, and to glorify him and adorn their profession, by an upright, generous, disinter-

CHAPTER III.

Israel's victory over Og king of Bashan, 1-11. His kingdom and that of them are given to the two tribes and a half, 12-17. The command given to Sihon and Joshua, 18-22. Moses prays to enter the promised land, but is refused; yet is permitted to see it, 23-29.

THEN we turned, and went up the way to Bashan; and ¹Og the king of Bashan came out against us, he and all his people, to battle at Edrei.

² And the LORD said unto me, ³Fear him not: for I will deliver him, and all his people, and his land, unto thy hand; and thou shalt do unto him ⁴as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon.

⁴ And we took ⁵all his cities at that time; there was not a city which we took not from them, threescore cities, ⁶all the region of Argob, the kingdom of Og in Bashan.

⁵ All these cities were fenced with high walls, gates, and bars, besides unwalled towns a great many.

⁶ And ⁷we utterly destroyed them, ⁸as we did unto Sihon king of Heshbon, utterly destroying the men, women, and children of every city.

⁷ But ⁸all the cattle and the spoil of the cities, we took for a prey to ourselves.

⁸ And we took at that time out of the hand of the two kings of the Amorites, ⁹the land that was on this side Jordan, from the river of Arnon unto mount Hermon;

⁹ (Which Hermon the Sidonians call Sirion, and the Amorites call it ¹⁰Shenir;)

¹⁰ All ¹¹the cities of the plain, and all Gilead, and all Bashan, unto Salchah and ¹²Edrei, the kingdom of Og in Bashan.

¹² ¹⁵And this land which we possessed at that time, from Arero, which is by the river Arnon, and half mount Gilead, and the cities thereof, gave I unto the Reubenites and to the Gadites.

¹⁵ And I gave Gilead unto ¹⁶Maachir.

¹⁷ The plain also, and Jordan and the coast thereof, from ¹⁹Chinnereth even unto ²⁰the sea of the plain even the salt sea, under ²¹Ashdod-pisgah eastward.

¹⁹ But your wives, and your little ones, and your cattle, (for I know that ye have much cattle,) shall abide in your cities which I have given you;

²⁰ Until the LORD have given rest unto your brethren, as well as unto you, and until they also possess the land which the LORD your God hath given them beyond Jordan: and then shall ye ²¹return every man unto his possession which I have given you.

²¹ And ²²I commanded Joshua at that time, saying, Thine eyes have seen all that the LORD your God hath done unto these two kings: ²³so shall the LORD do unto all the kingdoms whither thou passest.

²² Ye shall not fear them; ²⁴for the LORD your God he shall fight for you.

²³ And ²⁵I besought the LORD at that time, saying,

²⁴ O LORD God, thou hast begun to show thy servant ²⁶thy greatness, and thy mighty hand: for ²⁷what god is there in heaven or in earth, that can do according to thy works, and according to thy might?

²⁵ I pray thee let me go over and see ²⁸the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain and Lebanon.

²⁶ But ²⁹the LORD was wroth with me for your sakes, and would not hear me: and the LORD said unto me, ³⁰Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter.

²⁷ Get thee ³¹up into the top of ³²Pisgah, and lift up ³³thine eyes westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and behold ³⁴it with thine eyes: for thou shalt not go over this Jordan.

²⁹ So we abode in the ³⁷valley over against Beth-peor.

ested, forgiving, and blameless deportment, not injurious to their enemies, nor needlessly burdensome to their friends; and "by doing to all men, as they would they should do unto them." In this case, the vanity of the world cannot prevent their comfort, nor can its opposition interrupt the serenity of their minds: their inheritance cannot be affected by the revolutions of kingdoms, or the mutability of earthly possessions; death cannot hurt and need not alarm them; all will combine in preparing them for heaven, and giving them the anticipation, and introducing them to the enjoyment, of those pleasures which never satiate and will never end.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-10. Marg. Ref. Note, Num. 21:34.

V. 11. It is probable that Og was descended from a race of giants, of larger stature than even the Anakim.—If his bedstead of iron was intended for use, and not for ostentation, his bulk must have been enormous; as it was at least five yards long, and above two broad. Either the Ammonites seized on it, or they bought it of the Israelites; and carrying it to Rabbath, it was there preserved as a monument of his stature, or of Israel's victory: for neither his vast strength, nor his numerous fortified cities, could secure him against God, who fought for his people.—This race of giants was soon extinct; but others remained within the land of Canaan, of whom we read in the history of David. (Notes, 1 Sam. 17:4-7, 45-49. 2 Sam. 21:15-22.)

V. 12-22. "Bashan-havoth-jair" (14) signifies Bashan the villages of Jair.—The words, "unto this day," were perhaps added by Ezra, to show how long these places retained their names. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Num. 32: Josh. 13:22.)

V. 23-28. This prayer of Moses arose from a high valuation of the promised land, and an earnest desire of witnessing the power and faithfulness of the Lord, in putting the Israelites in possession of it, by destroying their enemies. He had prevailed in behalf of Israel more than once, in apparently similar circumstances: and his request did not displease the Lord though for an example to Israel, he did not see good to grant it.—Thus Moses prevailed for others, but for himself he could not prevail; which made him the more exact type of Christ, who "saved others, himself he could not save," that is, con-

NOW therefore hearken, O Israel, "unto the statutes, and unto the judgments, which I teach you, for to do them," that ye may live, and go in and possess the land which the LORD God of your fathers giveth you.

2 Ye shall not "add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the LORD your God, which I command you.

3 Your eyes have seen "what the LORD did because of Baal-peor: for all the men that followed Baal-peor, the LORD thy God hath destroyed them from among you.

4 But ye that did "cleave unto the LORD your God are alive every one of you this day.

5 Behold I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the LORD my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it.

6 Keep therefore, and do them; for "this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, "Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people.

7 For "what nation is there so great, "who hath God so nigh unto them, as the LORD our God is in all things that we call upon him for?

8 And what nation is there so great, that hath "statutes and judgments so righteous, as all this law which I set before you this day?

9 Only take heed to thyself, and "keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, and "lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life: but "teach them thy sons, and thy sons' sons;

sistently with the purpose of saving others. (Mark 15:31. Notes, Num. 20:10-13, 27:15-20.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Nothing more raises the destruction of sinners than overlooking the examples of divine justice set before them for their warning, and rushing forward in the same steps, which have brought others to a miserable end.—All those advantages, with which men are naturally pleased, eventually conduce to their more speedy ruin and deeper condemnation, whenever they increase their pride, security, and boldness in transgression: so far are riches, power, worldly wisdom, and courage, from profiting their ungodly possessors!—No arm can be strong when the contest is against the Almighty; and he that assaults the church wages war against God. In this case especially "the battle is not to the strong, nor the race to the swift;" his most insolent and presumptuous enemies will soon lie down in despair; and his feeblest and most timid friends have no cause to fear. His promise secures success in every undertaking, in which they are required to engage; and not only victory, but abundant advantage from every foe that assaults them, "for the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just." Every experience of the Lord's faithfulness is a sure pledge of further mercies, and ere long all his people shall be more than conquerors, and enter upon the full possession of their everlasting rest.—"This is the heritage of the servants of the LORD, and their righteousness is of me, saith the LORD." (Notes, Is. 54:15-17, Rom. 8:35-39.) Are we then of that number? Do we seek reconciliation unto God through Jesus Christ, as "the one thing needful?" Do we trust his grace, plead his promises, listen to his voice, and keep his commandments? Then assuredly "all things will work together for our good."—But unbelief excludes men from heaven: a dead inactive faith deceives and ruins thousands; and even the sins of believers are chastened with sharp trials, the withholding of wonted comforts, and the refusal of their prayers for such mercies, as are not immediately connected with salvation. If this should be the case with us, let us kiss the rod, and seek to profit by our chastening. And if we have the earnestness and prospects of heaven; let this suffice us, let us acquiesce in the Lord's will, and speak no more to him of those things which he sees good to refuse us.—When we are about to leave the world, the same principle which before induced us to contribute, as we were able, to promote the cause of God and the good of his church, will dispose us to rejoice in the prospect of the good work being carried on by other, and more honoured instruments; and will make us wish to close our eyes, encouraging our survivors to be valiant for the truth, assured that the Lord will fight for them and make them successful.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1. The power of God and his love to Israel, as delineated in the foregoing recapitulation of their history, are in this chapter improved by a variety of practical admonitions and exhortations. The abstract of the argument may be thus stated: "As the Lord hath manifested himself so able and willing to deliver, protect, and bless you, take heed that you do not forfeit his favour by disobedience; but from gratitude for past mercies, and in order to secure the continuance of his favour, make it your constant study to worship him alone, to depend on his promises, perfections, and providence, and to submit to his authority; as a nation governed by his judgments, and as individuals "walking in all his ordinances and commandments." This is your true wisdom; this will certainly advance you to greatness, prosperity, and reputation, and secure your felicity; whereas the contrary conduct will surely involve you in misery and ruin." The subsequent practical instructions seem to be thus inferred from the preceding history; and they are enforced by every argument and every motive imaginable.—The national covenant made with Israel is indeed constantly referred to: yet the whole may be accommodated to the case of true Christians; whilst it more directly suits the case of nations favoured with the light of revelation.—The Israelites had witnessed many instances, in which disobedience was punished with immediate death. Their fathers had been doomed to die in the wilderness: nor could they expect to possess Canaan if not obedient. Obedience cannot merit salvation: but it is the only evidence that we partake of "the gift of God, which is eternal life through Jesus Christ;" and disobedience both deserves eternal destruction, and when persisted in, renders it inevitable. (Note, Ez. 18:30-32.)

V. 2. To add any thing to the commands of God, as obligatory upon the conscience, or an essential part of religion, seems to charge him with an oversight; and is as affronting to his wisdom, as to diminish any thing from it is to his authority and goodness. And human traditions or appointments, when not explicitly distinguished from the law of God, as comparatively of no authority, and kept entirely subordinate have always been the competitors of the sacred word, and tended to render it of none effect. (Marg. Ref. Note, Matt. 15:3-6.)—Some explain the word add to be merely a caution against sins of commission; and diminish, against sins of omission: but this comes far short of the true meaning.—This prohibition is supposed to have been extremely useful, in preserving entire the text of these ancient books; by deterring even those who most openly broke the law, or explained away its meaning, or contended virulently with each other about religious opinions and practices, from adding to, or taking from, the words of the Scriptures themselves. (12:32. Notes, Prov. 30:5-6, Rev. 22:18-21.)

V. 3, 4. (Notes, Num. 25:) It appears from this appeal, that the pestilence, as well as the sword of the magistrates, singled out the guilty persons and spared the rest. (Ps. 91:6-8.) "The legislator, in order to deter the Jews from idolatry, alludes to this fact, but he notices no circumstance but one, which, though in the original narrative not stated, was infinitely the most important to advert to on this occasion; but which no persons, but spectators of the fact, and perfectly acquainted with every individual concerned in it, could possibly feel the truth of: 'Graves on the Pentateuch,' Vol. 1, pp. 137, 138."

V. 5. The people had been often ready to conclude, that Moses taught them by his own authority; but at the close of his life he solemnly assured them, that he had instructed them exactly as the Lord had commanded him, neither more, nor less, nor otherwise.—This is a most express declaration, that he was divinely inspired; and utterly incompatible with integrity of character, if he was not.

V. 6, 8.—Israel was a "great nation," highly honoured by having the tabernacle, ark, and ordinances of God in the midst of them, and by his powerful interposition in their behalf, whenever they earnestly called upon him for help. Even the surrounding nations could not help observing this, while Israel adhered to the worship of God, which was their true wisdom: and indeed, taking in the whole time from Moses to this day, what nation has been so greatly distinguished as they have been?—Their laws also, whether moral or judicial, in proportion as they are examined, and compared with the laws of other nations, will appear to every impartial judge most equitable and excellent.

V. 9. Keep thy soul—(Note, Prov. 4:23.)

learn to fear me all the days that they shall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children.

11 And ye came near, and stood unto the mountain, and the mountain burned with fire unto the midst of heaven, with darkness, clouds, and thick darkness.

12 And the LORD spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude: only ye heard a voice.

13 And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone.

14 And the LORD commanded me that time to teach you statutes and judgments, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to possess it.

15 Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves, (for ye saw no manner of similitude on the day that the LORD spake unto you in Horeb out of the midst of the fire,)

16 Lest ye corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image, the similitude of any figure, the likeness of male or female;

17 The likeness of any beast that is on the earth, the likeness of any winged fowl that flieth in the air;

18 The likeness of any thing that creepeth on the ground, the likeness of any fish that is in the waters beneath the earth:

19 And lest thou lift up thine eyes unto heaven, and when thou seest the sun, and the moon, and the stars, even all the host of heaven, shouldst be driven to worship them, and serve them, which the LORD thy God hath divided unto all nations under the whole heaven.

20 But the LORD hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the iron furnace, even out of Egypt, to be unto him a people of inheritance, as ye are this day.

[Practical Observations.]

21 Furthermore, the LORD was angry with me for your sakes, and sware that I should not go over Jordan, and that I should not go in unto that good land, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

22 But I must die in this land, I must not go over Jordan; but ye shall go over, and possess that good land.

23 Take heed unto yourselves, lest ye forget the covenant of the LORD your God, which he made with you, and make you a graven image, or the likeness of any thing which the LORD thy God hath forbidden thee.

24 For the LORD thy God is a consuming fire, even a jealous God.

25 When thou shalt beget children, and children's children, and ye shall have remained long in the land, and shall corrupt yourselves, and make a graven image, or the likeness of any thing, and shall do evil in the sight of the LORD thy God, to provoke him to anger;

26 I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that ye shall soon utterly perish from off the land whereunto ye go over Jordan to possess it, ye shall not prolong your days upon it, but shall utterly be destroyed.

27 And the LORD shall scatter you among the nations, and ye shall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the LORD shall lead you.

28 And there ye shall serve gods, the work of men's hands, wood and stone, which neither see, nor hear, nor eat, nor smell.

29 But if from thence thou shalt seek the LORD thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart, and with all thy soul.

30 When thou art in tribulation, and all these things shall come upon thee, even in the latter or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; as all are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." (Note, 1 Cor. 3:18-23.)

V. 21-24. The consideration, that Moses was excluded from Canaan for one offence, was both suited to impress the people with the sense of the Lord's mercy in sparing them, notwithstanding their many and heinous transgressions; and to warn them of the consequence of renewing their rebellions, and of running into idolatry: for their merciful God was also "a jealous God, and a consuming fire."—It seems that when Moses pleaded earnestly for a reversal of the sentence, the LORD, to silence him, confirmed it with an oath. (Note, 3:23-28.)

V. 25-28. Many expressions in this prophecy evidently refer to times much later, than even the Babylonian captivity. The Jews could not then, with any propriety, be said to have "utterly perished" out of the promised land, as they returned to it at the end of seventy years: but their present state, in which they have been "scattered among the nations" for almost eighteen hundred years, without any access to their own land; and their condition, as dispersed individuals, not as a nation under a regular government, answer the language of the prediction with great exactness. They do not indeed at present worship images; except as in popish countries they sometimes conceal their religion, and conform to the idolatrous worship there performed, in order to escape persecution; but they are grossly ignorant of the true God: "for he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father that sent him." (Notes, John 5:20-23. 8:54-59.) Numbers of Israelites also have doubtless been incorporated with idolaters.

V. 29-31. "A jealous God" hath fulfilled the threatenings before denounced on the rebellious Israelites: but he is also a merciful God, and waits to receive them, either as a nation or individually, whenever they repent, and turn to him with all their hearts, in the obedience of faith. After all that hath come on the nation, especially in their present long-continued dispersion, they are still preserved a distinct people, by a most astonishing interposition of Providence; evidently in

V. 11. The midst of heaven.] The fire and smoke filled the atmosphere to a great height; as the fowls are, in the original, said "to fly in the open firmament of heaven."—(17. Notes, Gen. 1:6-8. Ex. 19:16-20.)

V. 13. (Notes, Ex. 20:24.) The ten commandments were the foundation of the national covenant made with Israel, as well as of the covenant of works, though not exactly in the same manner: and, when written in the heart, they form the evidence, that the covenant of grace by faith in Jesus Christ is ratified with us. (Notes, Jer. 31:33,34. Heb. 8:7-13.)

V. 15-18. Let any one carefully examine the multiplied and varied expressions of these verses; and then let him form his judgment, and bring in his verdict, respecting the use of images, in religious worship, in the church of Rome, and elsewhere. (Note, Ex. 20:4.)

V. 19. The propensity of mankind to idolatry, and the artifice of Satan, would concur to drive the people into this species of it. It is indeed extremely irrational to make the creatures of God his rivals; and to allow the instruments of his bounty to rob him of his glory: but the worship of the splendid and useful luminaries of heaven is far more plausible than any other idolatry, and therefore more carefully to be guarded against. The declaration that the God of Israel had formed the sun, moon, and stars, and given all nations the benefit of them, was well suited to this purpose, and to mark to every reader the infinite distance between the glorious Creator and the noblest of his creatures. (Marg. Ref. g. Note, Job 31:24-28.)

V. 20. The iron furnace.] This strong expression forcibly marks the misery which the Israelites endured, and the danger to which they were exposed, in the Egyptian bondage.—Thence they were brought forth to be "unto the LORD a people of inheritance." All the revenue of worship, obedience, and praise, which the Lord receives from this lower world, is paid him by his redeemed people, by whom alone he is loved, in whom he delights, and for whose sake the frame of nature is preserved. As the apostle says: "All things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and halt be obedient unto his voice;

31 (For ^hthe Lord thy God is a merciful God;) he will not forsake thee, neither destroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers, which he swore unto them.

32 ¶ For ^hask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ^hask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it?

33 Did ever people ^hhear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live?

34 Or hath God assayed to go and ^htake him a nation from the midst of another nation, by ^htemptations, ^hby signs, and by wonders, and by war, and ^hby a mighty hand, and by a stretched-out arm, and by great terrors, according to all that the Lord your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes?

35 Unto thee it was showed, that thou mightest know that the Lord he is God; there is none else beside him.

36 Out of heaven he made thee to hear his voice, that he might instruct thee; and upon earth he showed thee his great fire, and thou heardest his words out of the midst of the fire.

37 And ^hbecause he loved thy fathers, therefore he chose their seed after them, and brought thee out in his sight with his mighty power out of Egypt;

38 To ^hdrive out nations from before thee, greater and mightier than thou art, to bring thee in, to give thee their land for an inheritance, ^has it is this day.

39 Know therefore this day, and consider it in thine heart, that the Lord he is God in heaven remembrance of the covenant confirmed with their fathers; and in order to the fulfilment, as prophecies, of these conditional promises, when the "Spirit of grace and supplications" shall be poured out on them, and they shall look in penitence faith to their crucified Messiah. V. 32, 33. During above two thousand five hundred years, from the creation, no record, nor even report, existed of such events as the Israelites had witnessed, nor of any at all similar to them.

Fire. (33) Impostors have sometimes deceived men by voices, supposed to be uttered by some deity, but never as spoken out of the midst of a most tremendous fire, in the sight and hearing of numbers, to whose senses the appeal was made.

V. 34. Temptations.] The commands, judgments, and respites, by which Pharaoh was required to let Israel go, made trial of his temper, and discovered his unwillingness to obey, and his inability to resist. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 35—40. Nothing had occurred in the history of the world at that time, and nothing has taken place during much more than three thousand years since, that at all resembled the interposition of God, to deliver one nation out of the midst of another more powerful nation, which had long enslaved it, by two unarmed men, entirely through miracles, and contrary to all human probability; or that was any thing like his dealings with them at Sinai and in the wilderness. The very singularity of the transactions, though attested beyond all reasonable doubt, gives a plausible pretence for skepticism. But miracles must be extraordinary events, or they would cease to deserve the name; and an adequate reason is assigned for this extraordinary interposition of JEHOVAH, at a time when all nations were ready to sink into idolatry: for he intended thus effectually to show men in general, and his chosen people in particular, that he alone was the true God in heaven and earth; and that all the deities of the nations were mere names, or lying vanities, who could not at all protect or help their worshippers, or resist his power. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. 9:13—16.)

V. 41—43. The first exhortation, or sermon, (so to speak) above, and upon the earth beneath; there is none else.

40 Thou shalt keep therefore his statutes and his commandments, which I command thee this day, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days upon the earth, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, for ever.

41 ¶ Then Moses severed three cities on this side Jordan toward the sunrising;

42 That ^hthe slayer might flee thither, which should kill his neighbour unawares, and hated him not in times past; and that, fleeing unto one of these cities, he might live:

43 Namely, Bezer in the wilderness, in the plain country of the Reubenites; and Ramoth in Gilead of the Gadites; and Golan in Bashan of the Manassites.

44 ¶ And this ^his the law which Moses set before the children of Israel:

45 These ^hare the testimonies, and ^hthe statutes, and the judgments, which Moses spake unto the children of Israel, after they came forth out of Egypt;

46 On ^hthis side Jordan, in the valley over against Beth-peor, in the land of Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt at Heshbon, whom Moses and the children of Israel smote, after they were come forth out of Egypt:

47 And they possessed his land, and ^hthe land of Og king of Bashan, two kings of the Amorites, which were on this side Jordan, toward the sunrising:

48 From Aroer, which is by the bank of the river Arnon, even unto mount ^hSion, which is Hermon.

49 And all the plain on this side Jordan eastward, even unto the sea of the plain, ^hunder the springs of Pisgah.

of this book ends with the preceding verse: and the appointment of the cities of refuge has no visible connexion with what goes before, or with what follows: but probably Moses performed that service, before he delivered his next discourse, that he might show how this important concern was to be regulated. (Note, Josh. 20:7—9.) Thus he lost no part of his short remaining time, but filled up the whole with speaking or acting for the good of the people.

V. 44. (Note, 1:5.) This is evidently an introduction to the discourse of the subsequent chapters. Moses having practically improved some particulars in the history of Israel, proceeded to repeat and enforce the laws which he had before delivered, with additions and explanations, beginning with the ten commandments.

V. 46. Beth-peor.] Or, "The house of Peor." Probably a temple of Baal-peor was full in the view of the people, while Moses was pressing upon them the worship of JEHOVAH alone; and perhaps that very temple, where so many had sinned to their own destruction.

V. 48. Mount Sion, &c.] (Marg. Ref.) Not mount Zion, but Sion, which was on the east of Jordan, and northwards towards Lebanon.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—20. Every instance of the Lord's kindness to us is a conclusive argument to enforce our obedience to his commandments; and will either influence us to obey him, or testify against us, and enhance our condemnation. Indeed, all his commandments are so reasonable, equitable, and salutary, that if we were not blinded and infatuated by Satan, a wise regard to our own interest would induce us to observe them: for they are only righteous and kind rules, which the all-wise Creator has affectionately prescribed to his rational creatures; by attending to which they may secure their own felicity, and conduce to that of each other, while they render him the glory due unto his name. None of them can be broken without injuring ourselves and others, as well as dishonouring God: and a peaceful conscience, well-regulated passions and appetites, a sweet sense of his favour, an unspeakable pleasure in his ways, and complete harmony and love with each other, together with health of body and vigour of mind, must be the consequences of perfect obedience to them. Even now, in

CHAPTER V.

Moses shows that God made a covenant with Israel at Horeb, 1-5. He sets the ten commandments before them, 6-21. He relates how, at the people's request, he had received the law from God for them, 22-31. He exhorts them to obedience, 32, 33.

AND Moses called "all Israel, and said unto them, ^bHear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and ^ckeep, and do them.

proportion as we are enabled to obey them, these blessed effects follow: and the case is the same with nations as with individuals. They therefore will one day appear to be the only "wise and understanding people," (however now derided as fools,) who make the law of God the rule of their whole conduct, without "adding to it or diminishing from it;" and that very light which discovers their wisdom, will detect the folly and madness of those pretenders to superior understanding, who reject the divine testimony, and disregard the divine authority: so that at length it will be undeniably evident, that true religion is but another name for wisdom, honour, and felicity. Even in this world experience decides, that they who forsake the Lord plunge themselves into many miseries, and often into sudden destruction: and, notwithstanding self-denial and persecutions, the temporal advantages of piety are vastly more satisfactory, than the most splendid acquisitions of prosperous wickedness; even apart from the comforts of the Holy Spirit and the hope of glory on the one hand, or the remorse and terrors, which are more sensibly felt than honestly acknowledged, on the other: for "godliness hath both the promise of this life and of that which is to come." (Notes, 1 Tim. 4:6-10. 6:6-10.)—But if we would secure these advantages, with hearts like ours, in such a world as this, in the midst of temptations and enemies, we must apply our minds seriously both "to know and to consider" the works and the word of God: we must "take great heed unto ourselves, and keep our souls diligently," lest the good impressions which are excited depart out of our hearts, without producing any abiding effects: for while our duty and happiness, as well as God himself and his service, are always the same; our sense of them is alas! exceedingly variable, and even apt to wear out of our minds. (Note, Heb. 2:1-4.) We should therefore "watch and pray always," that we may not be entangled by those snares which are laid in every ^{acc}: we should keep a strict and constant guard upon our imaginations, affections, senses, and appetites: our minds must be armed with every imaginable motive which can encourage hope, excite fear, and influence our love or hatred; that in patience, courage, and self-denial, we may be prepared for labour, trials, and for the cross, in whatever form it is laid in our way. All this, and much more must be attended to, if we would walk safely and comfortably with God, through this world to glory.—But trusting in Christ by faith in his blood; and drawing from his fullness wisdom, strength, and grace, it will become practicable and pleasant.—Nothing is more essential in this important concern, than just apprehensions of the perfections of God: since universal history reminds us of man's astonishing propensity to idolatry. We must not therefore trust to our vain reasonings, or indulge our gross imaginations; but, by faith, derive our knowledge of God from revelation alone; particularly attending to the displays which he hath made of his power, justice, goodness, mercy, and truth, in the various dispensations there recorded.

V. 21-49. We ought carefully to study our obligations to God, and his character, with the relations in which we stand to him; his law and worship; our own situation as sinners under a dispensation of mercy; and the nature of that gracious covenant to which we are invited to accede: since far more interesting discoveries are made to us, than ever Israel saw from mount Sinai; and far greater mercies are conferred on us, than they experienced in Egypt, in the wilderness, or in Canaan. One speaks to us of infinitely superior dignity to Moses, who, on our account, was not, like him, ^{deprived} merely of a greatly desired and much regretted ^mmoral satisfaction, but who even bare upon the ⁿcross the wrath and curse of God for our sins, and ^olit the unspeakable agony in all its bitterness. And now, instead of the language and displays of fiery indignation, he pleads with us by his dying love, and in mild accents of mercy, not to neglect so great salvation.—Nay, our God, while awfully jealous for the glory of his name, and "a consuming Fire" to all impenitent sinners, is yet most merciful, ready to forgive, and willing to be gracious to all who turn to him in true repentance. If then, after all our rebellions, we at last seek him with all our heart and with all our soul, and become obedient to his voice, (seeking for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us,) he will yet pardon us, and ratify to us all the blessings of the everlasting covenant.—But apostles, prophets, and ministers, yea, heaven and earth also, will testify against us, if we "refuse him that speaketh." (Note, Heb. 12:22-25.) Even our natural affection to our children may suggest additional motives to obedience; for when the Lord loves the parents, he often chooses and blesses the children after them, especially when they diligently instruct them in the same good way. (Note, Gen. 18:18, 19.) Thus may we seek an entail of heavenly blessings upon our latest posterity: and both parents and ministers may learn profitably from Moses, to instruct their children and people, with fervour and faithfulness, even to the close of their lives, in all that the Lord had taught them, with a mixture of firmness, affection, and gravity, suited to such important occasions. (Notes, 2 Tim. 4:1-5. 2 Pet. 1:12-15.)—Finally, as the present dispersion of the Jews shows this chapter to have been a prophecy, as well as a sermon; let us not forget to pray for them, that in their tribulation, even now in these latter days, they may seek the Lord, and be reinstated in the privileges of the covenant made with their fathers.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 3. The Sinai covenant was different from that made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; for that was personal, and related mainly to spiritual blessings; this was national, and especially stated the terms, on which the possession of the promised land, and other privileges, would be continued to Israel. (Notes, Gen. 17:1-8. Ex. 19:5. Gal. 3:15-18.) But this language may also mean, that the covenant made at Horeb, was as obligatory on the generation whom Moses then addressed, as on those who were immediately present, when the law was delivered, and the covenant ratified. For they were a collective body, incorporated by charter, the obligations and advantages of which descended to the successors of those to whom it was first conceded. Some indeed whom Moses addressed had been present at the giving of the law, though under age; but most of them were then unborn, or children: yet the covenant made with their fathers included them likewise.—Thus all, favoured with revelation, are bound to submit to it, equally with those to whom it was first given; though they do not behold the miracles by which it was authenticated: for there are other evidences of its divine authority, which gather force by revolving ages; and they who submit to it have equal benefits, with those to whom it was first communicated.

V. 12-15. (Notes, Ex. 20:8-11.)—The words "As the Lord thy God hath commanded," here introduced in recording the giving of the law from mount Sinai, seem to imply an appointment of the sabbath, previous to that transaction.—The original reason for hallowing the sabbath, taken from the creation, is not here mentioned. This indeed must ever remain valid, and it was well known to the people. But they were also required to remember their oppressed state in Egypt, and their wonderful deliverance: and while they worshipped and gave thanks to their great and gracious Deliverer thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor *thy stranger that is within thy gates: that 'thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou.

15 And "remember that thou wast a servant in 'ne land of Egypt, and that 'the LORD thy God brought thee out thence, that 'through a mighty hand, and by a stretched-out arm: therefore the LORD thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath-day.

16 Honour thy father and thy mother, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee: that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

17 Thou ^ashalt not kill.

16 Neither ^bshalt thou commit adultery.

19 Neither 'shalt thou steal.

20 Neither^d shalt thou bear false witness against thy neighbour.

21 Neither shalt thou desire thy neighbour's wife, neither shalt thou covet thy neighbour's house, his field, or his man-servant, or his maid-servant, or his ox, or his ass, or any thing that is thy neighbour's.

22 ¶ These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly, in the mount out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice; and he added no more: and he wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me.

23 And it came to pass, ^hwhen ye heard the voice out of the midst of the darkness, (for the mountain did burn with fire,) that ye came near unto me, even all the heads of your tribes, and your elders :

24 And ye said, Behold, the LORD our God hath showed us his glory, and his greatness, and 'we have heard his voice out of the midst of the fire :

we have seen this day that God doth talk with man, and he liveth.

25 Now therefore why should we die? for ¹this great fire will consume us. If we ²hear the voice of the LORD our God any more, then we shall die.

26 For who is there of man's flesh, that hath heard the voice of the living God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as we have, and lived?

27 God thou near, and hear all that the LORD our God shall say; and speak thou unto us all that the LORD our God shall speak unto thee, and we will hear it and do it.

28 And the LORD heard the voice of your words, when ye spake unto me, and the LORD said unto me, I have heard the voice of the words of this people, which they have spoken unto thee: they have well said all that they have spoken.

29 "Oh, that there were such an heart in them, that they would fear me, and ⁷keep all my commandments always, ⁸that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever!

30 Go say to them, Get you into your tents again.

31 But as for thee, stand thou here by me, and I will speak unto thee all the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which thou shalt teach them, that they may do them in the land which I give them to possess it.

32 Ye shall observe to do therefore as the Lord your God hath commanded you: *ye shall not turn aside to the right hand or to the left.

33 Ye shall walk in all the ways which the LORD your God hath commanded you: that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye shall possess.

humanely to allow respite from labour to their servants, and even heathen slaves, and piously to afford the man opportunity of becoming acquainted with JEHOVAH, and worshipping him from which advantages, they themselves had been cruelly and impiously restricted by their Egyptian oppressors. Thus, while the judicial law supposed the existence of slavery among the Jews; this, and similar regulations, when duly complied with, were calculated to convert the slavery of the heathen in Israel into a blessing to their souls, by bringing them under the means of grace, and putting them in the way of obtaining the privileges of God's peculiar people. (Note, Ec. 21:2.) And amidst the enormities of modern slavery, if it could truly be said, that all the slaves rested from a labour on the Lord's day, being allowed and required to keep it holy; and were so instructed on it in the nature of genuine Christianity, as to afford them an adequate opportunity of being made partakers of its blessings; it would plead more powerfully for its being suffered to exist, than all other reasons which have been urged in its favour.

V. 16-21. There are several unimportant variations from the law as delivered from Sinai; but the substance is entirely the same. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 20:12-17.)

V. 22-27. Several particulars are here added which were not mentioned in the narrative; and all well calculated to illustrate the greatness of the consternation excited among the people, by the giving of the law from mount Sinai.—(Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. 20:18-20.)

V. 28, 29. When the people were impressed with the terror of immediate destruction from the voice of God speaking from mount Sinai; and were conscious that they could not thus approach him, but desired a mediator by whom he might speak to them; and when they promised to hear and obey that mediator; they spake well: and had they properly understood their own request, and been permanently disposed according to it, all would have proceeded and terminated happily. But the Lord, in very affecting and emphatical language, suggests that it was not so: for he saw that, though they were alarmed, they were neither duly humbled, nor prepared to receive in faith the promised mediator whom Moses typified, nor disposed to walk in the ways of holy obedience. This language shows us what God approves, delights in, and accepts, as honourable to his name, right in itself, and profitable to his rational creatures, and is highly encouraging to those who are humbly desirous of salvation, and consciously willing to obey the commands of God; and who earnestly pray for grace to enable them so to do. For it evinces the Lord's readiness to assist and accept them; and shows that he does not delight in punishment for its own sake, but only when the righteous purposes of his government render it necessary; as the merciful prince does not delight in, yea, indeed, weeps over, the death-warrant, which a variety of important considerations render it indispensably necessary he should sign. But we should not attempt to infer any thing from such passages, respecting the conduct of God towards impenitent sinners, or the method of his dispensing his unmerited favours; for it is the evident intention of them to give us a practical, useful view of the subject, unencumbered with the niceties of speculation; and we should be very careful to admit nothing which tends to counteract that important design. (Notes, 32:29. Ps. 81:13—15. Is. 48:17—19. Ez. 18:23. Luke 19:41—44.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The word of God is spoken to us, that we may learn, retain, and practise it; for in this all religion is ultimately centred, and without it the whole is but a dead carcass, not only worthless but abominable. Of this practice the divine law is the universal, immutable, and everlasting rule: but we transgressors have no disposition, ability, or encouragement, to obey that law, but what is derived from the new covenant of mercy and grace, made with us through the mediation of Christ. He continually stands between the holy God and the sinner who comes by faith in his name, both to ensure his acceptance, and assist his obedience. The words he once spake on earth are written in the Scriptures; and from age to age sinners are invited to accede to his covenant, and share the promised blessings; which invitation cannot be finally refused, without ensuring eternal destruction; and nothing except such refusal can ruin us. But we must remember that good words may be spoken, good resolutions formed, and transient convictions experienced, yet excellent words used in prayer, even by those who persist in unbelief through prevailing pride and love of sin. (I such we may say, "Oh, that there were such a heart in them.") But we should also add a prayer for ourse lves, and for each other:

and beg of the Lord that he would give us such a heart "that we may fear him, and keep all his commandments, always." And we may present such a petition in faith, for the Lord delights in bestowing his blessings on those who have been taught to value them, and to seek them in the name of Jesus Christ.—Let sinners then tremble at this fiery law, and flee for refuge to the Saviour ; let professed Christians examine carefully, whether their faith be accompanied with a desire of having that law written in their hearts, and reduced to practice in their whole conduct : and let believers make it more and more their study and delight, that they may do as the Lord God hath commanded them, without "turning aside to the right hand or to the left." Thus, by universal godliness, righteousness, temperance, patience, purity, and love, and an exact regard to every relative duty, they will best evince their faith, adorn the gospel, glorify the Lord, be useful to their fellow-creatures, entail a blessing on their children, and ripea for glory. In attending to these important concerns, we need repeated instructions and admonitions : let us then not deem it tedious frequently to hear, read, and meditate on the same truths and precepts. Let us learn to hallow the Lord's sabbaths, and set an example of attending on his ordinances : and, remembering that our servants are of the same nature with ourselves, and equally in need and capable of the same inestimable salvation, let us allow them also suitable relaxation from labour, and opportunity for hallowing the sabbath, and learning the way of peace and holiness.

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1. Here and in similar passages, "the commandments" seem to denote the moral law ; "the statutes," the ceremonial law ; and "the judgments," the judicial law.

V. 4. The threefold mention of the divine names, and the plural number of the original word translated God, are supposed by many commentators, ancient and modern, to be a plain intimation of a Trinity of Persons, even in this express declaration of the unity of the Godhead, to the exclusion of the many lords and gods of the heathens, and in opposition to them. (Note, Gen. 1:1.) "Some of the Jews themselves have thought there was something extraordinary in it, that the name of God should be thrice mentioned : . . . which signifies three Midoth, or properties, they confess, which they sometimes call three Faces, or Emanations, or Sanctifications, or Numerations ; though they will not call them three Persons." Bp. Patrick.

V. 5. The foregoing verse contains the first article of our creed ; and this is "the first and great commandment," which briefly comprehends the whole of the first table of the law.—The love of God perfectly consists with the fear of him before-mentioned : (2) yea, the more we love him, the more we shall regard his authority, reverence his majesty, fear to offend or dishonour him, and be careful to render unto him that worship which he requires.—Human laws can only take cognizance of the outward conduct : but the law of the heart-searching God requires Love, the seat of which is in the inmost soul. That love comprises a supreme valuation of his infinite excellence and amiableness ; an entire desire of the knowledge and enjoyment of him, as our felicity ; cordial delight in contemplating his manifested glories, and in worshipping and obeying him ; lively gratitude for all his innumerable and invaluable mercies ; zeal for his glory ; and an ardent desire that all our fellow-creatures, in conjunction with us, may thus know, love, worship, obey, and serve him. These dispositions and affections are required to be as large as the powers of the soul itself, and to engross and fill the whole, to the entire exclusion of all contrary affections, and all thine heart, and with all thy sou^l and with all thy might.

6 And these words, which I command thee this day, ^ashall be in thine heart.

7 And thou ^bshalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and ^cshalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

8 And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.

9 And thou shalt ^dwrite them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates.

10 And it shall be, when the LORD thy God shall have brought thee into ^ethe land which he swore unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give thee ^fgreat and goodly cities which thou buildest not,

11 And houses full of all ^ggood things which thou filledst not, and wells digged which thou the regulation and moderation of all other affections, in entire subordination and subservency to this governing principle : so that nothing should, in any sense, or in any degree, be loved by us, but for the Lord's sake, and according to his commandment. Thus are we reasonably required to "love the LORD our God," both for what he is in himself, what he hath done for us, and what he is and will be to us ; and that uniformly, constantly, perfectly, and progressively.—Whatever our natural capacities may be, or to whatever improvements we may, in this or in a future world, attain, the Lord commands us to give him the whole : and were our love thus perfect, our worship, obedience, and submission also would be perfect ; nor could it ever possibly vary, or fall short of our whole strength and power, without a variation or diminution of this inward principle. Yet even this would admit o. degrees and increase, from the first dawning of reason in the infant, (such as was the holy child Jesus,) in progressive enlargement to the highest possible exaltation of the angelic nature. For no creature, to all eternity, can ever love God in measure equal to his excellence, which is infinite as his incomprehensible being ; but each might and ought to love the Lord, to the utmost extent of all the powers which the Creator has bestowed on him. This would at once secure to God the glory due to his name ; and to his creatures, that felicity of which he hath formed them capable. Thus it is with angels in heaven ; thus it was with man before his apostasy. But alas ! the "carnal mind" of fallen man, "is enmity against God ;" and as we all are by nature destitute of this love of God ; we all love ourselves, the world, and our favourite sinful indulgences and pursuits, with all our heart, our mind, our soul, and strength, and therefore sacrifice every thing to these idols. But in regeneration an internal revolution takes place ; the usurpers are dethroned, the Lord himself takes possession of the heart, and becomes the supreme object of our love ; yet so long as sin dwelleth in us, we never love God according to the full perfection of this precept ; but our love in all the exercises and effects of it, is often interrupted, and at best comparatively languid. All, however, that comes short of this perfect love, is sin, and needs forgiveness ; and therefore our best obedience can do nothing towards our justification. Yet this law is our standard ; by progressive sanctification we are renewed in conformity to it ; and "the spirits of just men made perfect" are, in this respect, already made equal to the angels in heaven. (Notes, Ex. 20:3. Matt. 22:37. Mark 12:28—34.)

V. 6. In thine heart. That is, "Let these words be treasured up in thy memory, rooted in thy judgment, and reigning in thy affections ; that they may become habitually the subjects of converse and meditation, to the exclusion of all such as are of a contrary or inferior nature."

V. 7—9. The Israelites were commanded to take every method of making the knowledge of the divine law familiar to them and to their families ; that every object which they beheld might serve as a memorial of it. Some think, that the subsequent directions should be considered only as figurative language, strongly enforcing the grand principle : but several of them at least seem to have been intended literally, according to the circumstances of those times ; though the Jews in latter ages have run into a most frivolous superstition, by resting in the outward observance. Such external methods, however, may be less necessary at present, where copies of the Bible are cheap and numerous : but the duty of diligently teaching children from the word of God, and frequently and openly conversing together concerning it, remains the same. (11:18—21. Note, Matt. 23:5—7.)

V. 13. As an act of religious worship, on important occasions, the Israelites were commanded to appeal to JEHOVAH by a solemn oath; and not to any of the imaginary deities of the nations around them. V. 25. If the Israelites attended on the typical ceremonies and sacrifices in a penitent and believing manner, and showed that they were "without guile" in this respect, by a conscientious regard to all the other parts of the divine law; they would be accepted through the promised Redeemer, as if their obedience had been complete, though in itself it would be imperfect. On the other hand, by habitually neglecting any part of the law, their obedience in other respects would be rendered useless, and their partiality would evince their hypocrisy. (Notes, Matt. 7:21-27.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The knowledge of the spirituality and excellence of the holy law is suited to show sinful man his need of a Saviour, and to prepare his heart to welcome a gratuitous salvation; and the gospel is calculated to magnify and honour the law, not only in the perfect obedience of the Son of God to its holy precept, and in his willing subjection to its awful curse; but in bringing back apostate rebels and enemies, by repentance, faith, forgiveness, and renewing grace, to love God supremely in this world, and perfectly, even as angels love him, in the world above. In proportion as we possess that "faith which thus worketh by love." (Note, Gal. 5:1-6.) we shall delight in his commandments, ordinances, and people, we shall savour heavenly converse and heavenly exercises; and "our meditation of him will be sweet."—But alas! that very conduct, which this chapter prescribes to Israel, could scarcely be reduced to practice among men called Christians, without exciting almost universal contempt and disgust! To be continually speaking of the truths and commands of God, upon our journeys, in our families, and in company; to make religion our first subject in the morning, and our last at night; and to quote Scripture on every suitable occasion, without reserve or apology, as those who glory and delight in it, would certainly bring upon us the charge of affectation, of enthusiasm, or of hypocrisy. This lamentably discovers to how low an ebb religion has fallen among professed Christians! but unless the truths and precepts of the sacred volume are indeed written in our hearts, and practised in our lives, all our profession or conversation will be but lip-labour, and justly condemned as hypocritical.—Though every condition in life exposes us to peculiar snares; yet none is so dangerous, and so commonly ruinous, as prosperity and affluence; for pride, love of the world, forgetfulness of God, and disregard to eternal things, like poisonous weeds, naturally grow from our wicked hearts, when fattened (so to speak) with the manure of wealth. So that the greater favours we receive from a bountiful Providence, the more ungratefully we generally behave! Let none of us then be desirous or in haste to be rich. (Note, 1 Tim. 6:6-10.)—Let those who are rich, or growing rich, tremble, "and beware lest they forget the LORD." Their danger is great, but "with God all things are possible;" let them seek to him for grace sufficient. If poor, let us learn to be content, and thankful for our safer lot; and instead of being anxious to get wealth for our children, (which is like building a wall to keep them out of heaven,) let us be careful to explain the scriptural truths, precepts, ordinances, and history to them, and to all committed to our care; to make edifying observations to them on the occurrences of Providence; and to encourage their inquiries, by giving them plain, familiar, and full answers; endeavouring by every means to show them the nature, reasonableness, and advantage of true religion; confirming the whole with the example of serious godliness, in every part and in every occurrence of life; united with an affectionate exercise of our authority, and fervent prayers for and with them. Thus will it be well with us and them; and we may hope for an incorruptible inheritance for them, and for ourselves, when all the wealth of this world shall be no more.

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1-4. The number and names of these nations, here vary from those which had been before mentioned. (Note, Gen. 15:18-21.) In a long course of years many revolutions would take place; some tribes would be extinct, or incorporated with others, and some would have changed their names. But they were the posterity of the same people, inhabiting the same land; and they had now filled up the measure of their iniquities. Israel was therefore commissioned to execute divine vengeance; and they were not only justified in all they did; but they actually offended, and were themselves punished for not more entirely extirpating them. Yet they would by no means have been justified, if they had, from love of conquest and thirst of dominion, carried on such bloody wars against any nation not expressly included in their commission; their conduct therefore can form no precedent to others, nor in the least excuse the murder and rapine, which mad ambition has in all ages been committing. (Notes, Num. 21:21-25. 31:2.)—The Lord was pleased in this solemn transaction, not only to show his abhorrence of sin; but, by thus executing vengeance upon guilty nations, to teach all, who regard the Scriptures utterly destroy them: thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them:

3 Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son.

4 For they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods: so will the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly.

5 But thus shall ye deal with them: ye shall destroy their altars, and break down their images, and cut down their groves, and burn their graven images with fire.

6 For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth.

7 The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; (for ye were the fewest of all people;)

8 But because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt.

9 Know, therefore, that the Lord thy God he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him and keep his commandments, to a thousand generations;

10 And repayeth them that hate him to their face, to destroy them: he will not be slack to him that hateth him, he will repay him to his face.

11 Thou shalt therefore keep the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which I command thee this day to do them.

12 Wherefore it shall come to pass, if ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, that the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the statutes which he swore unto thy fathers.

13 And he will love thee, and bless thee, and multiply thee: he will also bless the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy land, thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep, in the land which he swore unto thy fathers to give thee.

14 Thou shalt be blessed above all people: there shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle.

15 And the Lord will take away from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt, which thou knowest, upon thee: but will lay them upon all them that hate thee.

16 And thou shalt consume all the people which the Lord thy God shall deliver thee: thine eyes shall have no pity upon them; neither shalt thou serve their gods; for that will be a snare unto thee.

17 If thou shalt say in thine heart, These nations are more than I, how can I dispossess them?

18 Thou shalt not be afraid of them; but shalt well remember what the Lord thy God did unto Pharaoh, and unto all Egypt;

19 The great temptations which thine eyes saw, and the signs and the wonders, and the mighty hand, and the stretched-out arm, whereby the Lord thy God brought thee out; so shall the Lord thy God do unto all the people of whom thou art afraid.

20 Moreover, the Lord thy God will send the hornet among them, until they that are left, and hide themselves from thee, be destroyed.

21 Thou shalt not be affrighted at them: for the Lord thy God is among you, a mighty God and terrible.

22 And the Lord thy God will put out those nations before thee by little and little: thou mayest not consume them at once, lest the beasts of the field increase upon thee.

23 But the Lord thy God shall deliver them unto thee, and shall destroy them with a mighty destruction, until they be destroyed.

24 And he shall deliver their kings into thine hand, and thou shalt destroy their name from under heaven; there shall no man be able to stand before thee, until thou have destroyed them.

25 The graven images of their gods shall ye

V. 6-8. (Notes, Ex. 19:5,6.) The Lord chose Israel in the single person of Abraham: from him they were multiplied to seventy persons, when they went down into Egypt; and though they were very numerous in proportion when he brought them from thence, yet they were far less so than many other ancient nations; and probably than the Egyptians from whom they were delivered, or the Canaanites whose land they inherited. V. 15. The Israelites, if obedient, would have been subject to no maladies but those common to fallen men, and generally very healthy and long-lived; being graciously exempted from pestilential diseases, which often most tremendously scourge guilty nations; and from such maladies in particular, as they had witnessed in Egypt, by which God afflicted their cruel oppressors, but of which we know nothing with certainty. (Ex. 15:26.) This must be referred to the national covenant: for though godliness commonly secures the most solid temporal advantages; yet temporal blessings were not even among them, uniformly dispensed to individuals according to their obedience: but they were to the nation, with an exactness, which is not observed towards any other people. (Note, Lev. 26:3,4.)

V. 22. (Note, Ex. 23:29,30.) The Israelites had been repeatedly commanded to attempt the immediate and entire extirpation of the devoted nations: as far as sloth, cowardice, or unbelief induced them to spare them, they sinned; and to punish this and their other sins, as well as to prove them, the Lord was pleased to permit a considerable remnant of these nations to remain among them. (Notes, Judg. 2:1-5. 3:1-4.) His conduct was the result of a settled plan, not duty, nor motive.—Thus he commands the entire mortification of every sin, which is our rule of duty; and yet many intimations are given in Scripture, that sin is never totally destroyed in this world, even in the best of saints: but it actually prevails much more, perhaps in all Christians, than it would, if they were more watchful and diligent.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

All the commandments of God are equally the result of infinite wisdom, justice, and goodness; but not all alike level to our comprehension, and suited to our ideas. Assured, therefore, that the righteous Lord will not do unrighteously, but exercise his sovereignty with perfect equity, whether we can perceive it or not; when he commands, it is our duty unreservedly to obey; and this is the never-failing effect of true and strong faith. (Notes and P. O. Gen. 22:)—As the rebellion, ingratitude, and wickedness of man are so atrocious; it is more admirable that so many are spared, than that others are punished: and a proper understanding of the evil of sin, and of the mystery of a crucified Saviour, will enable us to perceive, in some measure, the justice of God in all the punishments, temporal and eternal, which he inflicts. We should, however, be thankful to be employed, not as executioners of his vengeance, but as the messengers of his love and compassion. We are called to exercise our severity against our own lusts; and with these enemies we must wage unremitting war, and give them no quarter. Indeed this chapter strongly inculcates two most important lessons: namely, that being obedient we have no occasion to fear any enemies or events whatever; for our Redeemer from the dominion of sin and Satan will, "as a mighty and terrible One," fight for us till all our foes be destroyed, and our victory and felicity be completed: but, on the other hand, we are most emphatically warned of the danger resulting from disobedience. This we must ever keep in mind amidst our greatest success, and even progress in grace; for we still continue frail and depraved, and liable to be baffled by temptation, and have therefore always need for vigilance and circumspection. Indeed, we shall not be able, after all, to extirpate our sins, except by little and little; nor must we expect that the conflict will cease, till we drop our bodies in the grave. But the more we live by faith, and watch and pray diligently, the less will they prevail and interrupt our enjoyments.—Not our merit or loveliness, but the Lord's free love, (of which he has assigned no reason, but because he would love us and choose us for Christ's sake,) forms the source of our salvation, and of all our consequent blessings; and therefore "he will never leave us, nor forsake us." (Notes, Rom. 5:6—10. 8:28—31. Eph. 2:4—10. Tit. 3:5—7. 1 John 4:9—12.) But if we belong to this chosen remnant, (which hitherto hath been "the fewest of all people," we shall by this very consideration be induced to render him the more unreserved, disinterested, and self-denying obedience, to the contempt of gold, and every earthly good, when they come in competition with his precept, or his glory. And should we ever be tempted, through covetousness, (that common idolatry which God abhors,) to do otherwise, we shall find that we have "brought an accursed thing and an abomination into our house," which must be cast out with detestation, if we would not be an accursed thing like unto it. (Note, Zech. 5:1—4.) For we are continually reminded that the Lord is no more "slack in repaying them that hate him," than willing to "show mercy to those who love him and keep his commandments;" nor will he be more severe with any, than with avaricious, fraudulent, hypocritical professors of our holy faith.—We cannot be too compassionate to sinners, but we may easily be too complaisant to them: nor can we stand too much aloof from intimacies, alliances, or intermarriages with them; for that has ever been, and ever must be, a snare to the people of God. (Notes, 2 Kings 8:26. 11:1, 2. 2 Chr. 18:1. 19:2.) Indeed all occasions of sin must be shunned; for our hearts are so inflammable, that we should fear every spark which may light upon them: nor can we be losers by renouncing such sources of gain, as expose us to those temptations, which experience shows to be too strong for us. For we shall enjoy the present felicity of the Lord's holy people, above all other people of the earth, in proportion to the number and value of those things, which we renounce for his sake: as Christ has promised his suffering disciples "a hundredfold which the LORD thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments, or no.

3 And he humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know, that he might make thee know, that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the LORD doth man live.

4 Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell, these forty years.

5 Thou shalt also consider in thine heart, that as a man chasteneth his son, so the LORD thy God chasteneth thee.

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1. All the commandments.] Note, Matt. 19:16—22.

V. 2. The Israelites were afflicted and proved, in order that they might be humbled. They were not previously aware of the wickedness of their own hearts, and never suspected that they were capable of such crimes as they actually committed; but the Lord well knew all their latent evil propensities: and for their good, and that of multitudes in every age to the end of the world, he was pleased to put them to the proof; that upon full and fair trial their real character might be ascertained. (Notes, Prov. 17:3. Jer. 17:9, 10.) They were therefore led through a variety of difficult circumstances; and were favoured by manifold miraculous evidences of the Lord's special presence with them, and regard to them. They were sometimes thwarted, at other times indulged: they were brought into dangers and straits, and miraculously delivered: they were disappointed in many expectations, and favoured in many things beyond expectation: they were sometimes severely punished for their sins, that they might take warning; and at other times mercifully pardoned, that they might take courage. But the result of the trial undeniably was, that they were always prone to distrust, to murmur, and to be ungrateful: they were invariably disposed to depreciate their mercies, and to magnify their trials and difficulties as intolerable and insuperable; to limit the power and suspect the loving-kindness of the Lord, after all their experience of both; to lust, envy, and rebel; to mutiny, apostatize, and fall into idolatry. In short, it appeared that they were so stiff-necked and hard-hearted, that no patience, but the infinite patience of God, could have borne with them: nor could they be restrained from the most desperate rebellions, but by the terrible examples of thousands struck dead by the avenging hand of divine justice. All this had a direct tendency, when reflected on, to convert their self-admiration into self-abhorrence; to render them sensible of their guilt, folly, and weakness; and to bring them to a suitable conviction of their entire dependence upon the mercy of God for every thing, and their manifold obligations to him for his goodness to them in times past: and finally to produce and preserve that poverty of spirit, which is radically necessary to the life of faith and the walk with God. (Note, Matt. 5:3).—They should likewise be considered as a fair specimen of human nature: any other people, any individual proved as they were, would appear as rebellious as they do, were the result as impartially recorded. And every one's own experience will have the same effect upon him, except he view himself through a false medium, or be lulled asleep by carelessness, or intoxicated by pride: for none of us live one week, without renewed evidences of our own weakness, folly, and depravity.

V. 3. When all ordinary means of sustenance failed, and the people must have perished with hunger; at the word of the Lord the manna descended, and afforded them a suitable, sufficient, and constant supply. Their frequent murmurs and ingratitude, and their inability to help themselves, were calculated to humble them; and the unexpected method in which they were provided for, served to teach them, that the Lord was not confined to ordinary means, and that they needed not to use sinful methods of obtaining the necessities of life: for when he speaks the word, a supply will be sent in one way or another; and that word alone can entirely be depended on. (Note, Matt. 4:3, 4.)

V. 4. The Israelites, doubtless, brought out of Egypt more raiment than what they had upon them; they might manufacture the fleeces of their flocks in the wilderness; and they might be favoured in Providence with other supplies: yet when we consider their immense numbers, their situation, and long continuance in the wilderness, and the strong expressions here made use of; that seems no reason to question the constant and most extraordinary miraculous of the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, and to fear him.

7 For the LORD thy God bringeth thee into a good land; a land of brooks of water, of fountains, and depths, that spring out of valleys and hills;

8 A land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig-trees, and pomegranates; a land of olive and honey;

9 A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack any thing in it; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass.

10 When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the LORD thy God, for the good land which he hath given thee.

11 Beware that thou forget not the LORD thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day:

12 Lest, when thou hast eaten and art full, and hast built goodly houses and dwelt therein;

13 And when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied;

14 Then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the LORD thy God, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage;

15 Who led thee through that great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents and scorpions, and drought, where there was no water; who brought thee forth water out of the rock of flint.

16 Who fed thee in the wilderness with manna, which thy fathers knew not, that he might humble thee, and that he might prove thee, to do thee good at thy latter end;

17 And thou say in thine heart, My power, and the might of mine hand, hath gotten me this wealth.

18 But thou shalt remember the LORD thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant, which he swore unto thy fathers, as it is this day.

19 And it shall be, if thou do at all forget the LORD thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them, I testify against you this day, that ye shall surely perish.

20 As the nations which the LORD destroyeth before your face, so shall ye perish; because ye would not be obedient unto the voice of the LORD your God.

interposition of God in this respect, as well as in others.—We may, however, safely reject the Jewish tradition, that the garments grew along with the bodies of the young people; not because it is too difficult to be credited, but because it wants the warrant of scriptural testimony, and does not appear to have been in the least necessary: for the grown persons might wear the clothes of those who died, and the young might take theirs.

V. 5. The punishments inflicted upon the Israelites, though destructive to individuals, were national blessings, salutary to the survivors, and suited to warn them, and conducive to their preservation and prosperity: even as a father chastises his son, not for his hurt, but that he may escape ruin, and be wise and happy. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our obedience cannot be sincere, unless we "observe to do all the commandments of the LORD" so that whilst any one is broken, with allowance and habitually, that is a conclusive proof of hypocrisy.—In order to sinful man's rendering to God acceptable obedience, he must be humbled, and proved, and made sensible of his weakness, sinfulness, and misery. And when the severest chastenings and the most painful experiences, effect this conviction, they are evidences of the Lord's special love, and of his merciful intention "of doing us good at the latter end," which should make us thankful for them. Indeed, it is impossible that we can be truly penitent, or believe in Christ and love him, or become meek, patient, and forgiving, or attain to any part of the Christian temper and character, without humiliation. Nothing indeed can render even the most suitable outward dispensations, and inward conflicts, effectual for these ends, without the sanctifying influences of the Spirit of God: but it is our duty to be often employed in "remembering all the way in which the LORD hath led us;" in recollecting the many evidences we have even of our own ingratitude and perverseness, and of the deceitfulness and wickedness of our hearts; and in considering the proofs which we have had of his power and love, in supplying our wants, extricating us out of difficulties, preventing the bad effects of our misconduct, and overruling for our good, events which appeared fraught with ruin and destruction. Hence we may learn to cease from self-confidence, and to trust in the Lord for every thing; hence we may draw arguments against sin, and motives to obedience; and learn to watch against pride, unbelief, and forgetfulness of God.—The food out of the earth, the water from the clouds, and the raiment new from year to year, which our God provides, calls for no less gratitude from us, than the miraculous provision did from Israel: and perhaps he does not suffer us previously to hunger, nor confine us to the same provision; but indulges us in a vast variety, which he was pleased to deny them.—The word of the Lord first gave to the earth its fertility, and still continues it; his blessing renders our food nutritional: and did he command the air to sustain us, it would be equally obedient. He appoints the measure of our support, however sent; and his promise, that they who "fear him shall not want any good," is our only security for a future sufficient supply, till we arrive at our journey's end.—But in this respect, the believing poor have the advantage: as they more easily perceive their provision coming from the Lord, in answer to prayer, and find less difficulty in simply trusting him for daily bread: so that they taste a sweetness in it, generally unknown to the affluent, while they are exempt from many of their temptations. For when men possess large estates, or are engaged in extensive and productive commerce; when their herds and flocks, and gold and silver, are multiplied; they find it very difficult to expect and receive their daily bread in simple dependence, prayer, and thankfulness; and to remember that the Lord alone gives them the power to get wealth, so as to give him all the praise, and to use it all to his glory. When "they have eaten and are full, and have built goodly houses, and dwelt therein," they find the temptation to pride, to forgetfulness of God, and to love of the world, very strong: they are apt to fail in reducing to practice the humbling lessons which they had before learned; and are prone to grow careless, to spend their riches on themselves, and to neglect the one thing needful. (Notes, Jer. 2:31, 32. Hos. 13:8-11.)—This is a "slippery place," whence many are "cast down into destruction." (Ps. 73:18.) let those who are placed on it "rejoice with trembling;" and let them "watch and pray always," that they may escape the fate of those multitudes, who have "utterly perished through their prosperity." Let us all be sober and vigilant, and persevere in prayer; for we tread a dangerous path: let us beg of God that we may rather be chastened with his children, than be left to grow secure in sin with his enemies; and may we be taught to hunger after, and feast upon the hidden Manna, and drink of the waters of life from the wells of salvation; encouraged to active, self-denying obedience by the prospect of "an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeeth not away, reserved in heaven for" all, "who are kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation." (Note, 1 Pt. 1: 3-5.)

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1. It is generally supposed that Moses here began a new discourse; which he introduced, as he had done the first, with referring to some parts of the history of Israel: and afterwards, in the following chapters, he practically applied it to their consciences. But in the former discourse he mainly expatiated on the wonderful works of God; in this he dwells chiefly upon the wicked works of Israel.—By this day is meant, that the long-expected time was just at hand.

2 A people ^{of} great and tall, the children of the Anakims, whom thou knowest, and of whom thou hast heard say, 'Who can stand before the children of Anak?'

3 Understand therefore this day, that the LORD thy God is he which goeth over before thee; as ^a consuming fire, he shall destroy them, and he shall bring them down before thy face: so shalt thou drive them out, and destroy them quickly, as the LORD hath said unto thee.

4 'Speak not thou in thine heart, after that the LORD thy God hath cast them out from before thee, saying, 'For my righteousness the LORD hath brought me in to possess this land; but ⁴for the wickedness of these nations the LORD doth drive them out from before thee.

5 Not for thy righteousness, or for the uprightness of thine heart dost thou go to possess their land; but for the wickedness of these nations the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee, and ⁶that he may perform the word which the LORD sware unto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

6 Understand therefore, that the LORD thy God giveth thee not this good land to possess it, for thy righteousness; but for ⁷thy art ^a stiff-necked people.

7 'Remember, and forget not, how thou provokedst the LORD thy God to wrath in the wilderness: ⁸from the day that thou didst depart out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the LORD.

8 Also ⁹in Horeb ye provoked the LORD to wrath, so that the LORD was angry with you to have destroyed you.

9 When ¹⁰I was gone up into the mount, to receive the tables of stone, ¹¹even the tables of the covenant which the LORD made with you, ¹²then I abode in the mount forty days and forty nights; ¹³I neither did eat bread nor drink water:

10 And the LORD delivered unto me two tables of stone, ¹¹written with the finger of God; and on them was ¹²written according to all the words which the LORD spake with you in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly.

11 And it came to pass at the end of forty days and forty nights, that the LORD gave me the two tables of stone, ¹²even the tables of the covenant.

12 And the LORD said unto me, 'Arise, get thee down quickly from hence; for thy people which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt have ¹³corrupted themselves: they ¹⁴are quickly turned aside out of the way which I commanded them; they have made them a molten image.

13 Furthermore, the LORD spake unto me,

V. 15. The transgressions of the people rendered this second forty days' fasting necessary to Moses. Their pardon was indeed in some sense obtained, before he ascended the mount; yet probably much of the time which he spent there was employed in supplication: and when he descended the second time with the tables of the law in his hands, the pardon was, as it were, ratified and sealed. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 34:1—10, 27—35.) saying, 'I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiff-necked people.'

14 'Let me alone, that I may destroy them, and blot out their name from under heaven: ¹⁵and I will make of thee a nation mightier and greater than they.

15 So ¹⁶I turned and came down from the mount, and the mount burned with fire: and the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands.

16 And ¹⁷I looked, and, behold, ye had sinned against the LORD your God, and had made you a molten calf: ye had turned aside quickly out of the way which the LORD had commanded you.

17 And I took the two tables, and cast them out of my two hands, and brake them before your eyes.

18 And ¹⁹I fell down before the LORD, as at the first, forty days and forty nights: I did neither eat bread nor drink water, because of all your sins which ye sinned, in doing wickedly in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

19 For ²⁰I was afraid of the anger and hot displeasure wherewith the LORD was wroth against you to destroy you. ²¹But the LORD hearkened unto me at that time also.

20 And the LORD was very angry with Aaron to have destroyed him: and I prayed for Aaron also the same time.

21 And ²²I took your sin, the calf which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, and stamped it, and ground it very small, ²³even until it was as small as dust: and I cast the dust thereof into the brook that descended out of the mount.

22 And at ²⁴Taberah, and at ²⁵Massah, and at ²⁶Kibroth-hattaavah, ye provoked the LORD to wrath.

23 Likewise, ²⁴when the LORD sent you from Kadesh-barnea, saying, Go up and possess the land which I have given you; then ²⁵ye rebelled against the commandment of the LORD your God, and ²⁶ye believed him not, nor hearkened to his voice.

24 Ye have been ²⁵rebellious against the LORD from the day that I knew you.

25 Thus ²⁶I fell down before the LORD forty days and forty nights, as I fell down at the first: because the LORD had said he would destroy you.

26 I ²⁷prayed therefore unto the LORD, and said, O LORD God, destroy not thy people, and thine inheritance, ²⁸which thou hast redeemed through thy greatness, ²⁹which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand.

27 Remember thy servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: ²⁸look not unto the stubbornness of this people, nor to their wickedness, nor to their sin;

This verse is evidently a resumption of the subject after a digression; such as are commonly found, where the heart is much engaged, and the speaker is more solicitous to impress the hearers for their good, than to gain their applause. St. Paul's epistles abound in such digressions, which sometimes obscure the sense even to the at entire reader.

for his sake, not for our righteousness, but for "the praise of his glory," and according to the tenor of the covenant of grace, the Lord bestows these blessings upon us; and though we have the verdict of our own consciences as well as the testimony of God, against us, "that we have been rebellious" from the beginning of our lives, stubborn and stiff-necked; yet when we humbly call on him, he will save us, write his law in our hearts, and not suffer our enemies to triumph in our destruction.—Alas! that ever

V. 16. Moses here cautioned the people not to rest in the outward seal of circumcision, by which they were distinguished as the professed worshippers of JEHOVAH:

17 For the Lord your God is "God of gods, and "Lord of lords, a great God, a mighty, and a terrible, which regardeth not persons, nor taketh reward.

18 He doth execute the judgment of the fatherless and widow, and loveth the stranger, in giving him food and raiment.

19 Love ye therefore the stranger: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

20 Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, him shalt thou serve, and to him shalt thou cleave, and swear by his name.

21 He is thy praise, and he is thy God, that hath done for thee these great and terrible things which thine eyes have seen.

22 Thy fathers went down into Egypt with threescore and ten persons; and now the Lord thy God hath made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude.

Love and obedience to God enforced from his past kindnesses, and the good land prepared for the people, 1-12. Conditional promises, warnings, and exhortations, 13-25. A blessing and a curse set before the people, with orders to publish them from mount Gerizim and mount Ebal, 26-32.

THEREFORE thou shalt love the Lord thy God, and keep his charge, and his statutes, and his judgments, and his commandments always.

but to seek earnestly that inward renewal to the divine image, and mortification of all depraved affections, of which circumcision was the outward sign, and which distinguishes the spiritual worshipper. (Notes, Rom. 2:25-29. Phil. 3:1-7. 5:3.) The figurative language here used denotes the removal of that blindness from the understanding, that obstinacy and perverseness from the will, and that insensibility, carnal self-love, and idolatrous love of worldly things, which render us morally incapable of loving God according to his commandments, or profiting either by his mercies or his judgments. (Note, Gen. 17:9-12.) This change is therefore the subject both of promises and of precepts. As we ought to love God with our whole heart, it must be our duty to remove whatever prevents our thus loving him; and we are accordingly commanded to do so. (Ezek. 18:30-32. Acts 3:19-21.) But we are, as fallen sinners, of a contrary disposition: to this contrariety to God and his law is original sin, the source of all our actual transgressions, and the very essence of guilt and misery; "because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be: so then they that are in the flesh cannot please God." (Note, Rom. 8:5-9.) In this condition the gospel addresses us, with invitations, promises, and precepts: and when we are convinced of the reasonableness and necessity of the required change, and perceive our utter inability to effect it, we have recourse to the promises; and pleading them in prayer, as well as using all other means of grace, we wait on the Lord to work it in us; nor do we ever wait and trust in vain. (Notes, Ps. 51:10. Jer. 4:3,4. 17:14. 31:18-20. Ez. 11:17-20.)

V. 17. As the Lord did not "regard persons," the Israelites must expect, in case they imitated the crimes of the nations, on whom they were commissioned to execute the judgments of God, that he would find instruments at length to inflict similar vengeance on them; notwithstanding those outward distinctions which they disgraced, and religious advantages on which they presumed. (Notes, Acts 10:34,35. Rom. 2:1-11.)

V. 18, 19. The universal care and kindness of God, in his providence, to persons of all nations and characters, are expressed by this language. He is represented as the universal Patron of all those who are peculiarly exposed to oppression or ill-treatment; as strangers are in a foreign country, of which the Israelites had had painful experience in Egypt. They were therefore required to imitate the example of the Lord who had been so kind to them, not that of the Egyptians, who had been so cruel to them. (Marg. Ref.)—It is evident, that unproselyted Gentiles are meant; who were no more of the religion of Israel, than the Israelites were of the religion professed by the Egyptians. Notwithstanding these plain precepts, the Jews in after ages were remarkable for their contempt, hatred, and ill-treatment of other nations; and they deemed themselves justifiable in this conduct; which tended very much to their own ruin after the coming of Christ, as it hardened them against the gospel when preached to the Gentiles also.

V. 20-22. Marg. Ref.

7 But your eyes have seen all the great acts of the Lord, which he did.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The gospel of Christ, when truly believed, prepares the heart to receive, love, and obey the holy law of God; in imitation of him, who said, "I delight to do thy will, yea, thy law is within my heart." (Notes, Ps. 40:6-8. John 4:31-34. Rom. 7:22-25.) and this forms the conclusive proof that our sins are pardoned, and that God is reconciled to us. And "what doth the Lord require of us," even by the strictest precept of the law, as given to his redeemed people through the hands of the Mediator, which should hinder us from delighting in his service? Having received so many mercies and favours, and having such gracious promises of assistance and acceptance, we cannot say that we want either motive, ability, or encouragement for obedience. His majesty and purity, and his excellent loving-kindness and mercy, render it equitable and reasonable, that we should fear and love him with all our soul; and from the united influence of fear and love, that we should obey his commandments, worship him in his ordinances, and walk in all his ways. His commandments are also for our good, and restrain us from nothing, but what is destructive of our own happiness, and that of others; and require nothing, but what conduces to inward tranquility and present comfort.—In proportion as we obey his precepts, we bear his image, and reflect "the beauty of the Lord our God," the beauty of his holiness, of his equity, truth, and love; of his compassion and condescension (though he is so highly exalted,) to the mean, to the vile, to the oppressed and wretched. And what pleasure so divine, what honour so exalted, what privilege so desirable, what ornament, praise, or distinction so great, as to have "the God of gods, and Lord of lords" for our Father and our Friend, to walk with him, and be like him? "This honour have all his saints!" To this they are chosen: this is the fruit of his special love, the effect of his converting grace, and the earnest of eternal glory. Having had a delight in our believing ancestors, he has favoured us with his gospel above many of the nations of the earth; and he has continued the ministry of his word, and has had a remnant of believers, among us hitherto, which may be increased to an innumerable multitude! But let us fear coming short of his great salvation; for the Lord is terrible as well as merciful; and, "without respect of persons, he judgeth according to every man's work." (Note, 1 Pet. 1:17-21.) Let us use the means of grace, and pray earnestly that he may circumscribe our hearts, and wash them from every wickedness; let us, without delay or reserve, come to him and cleave to him as our reconciled God in Jesus Christ, that we may love, serve, and obey him acceptably; and be daily "changed into his image from glory to glory by the Spirit of the Lord."

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 1. This verse is the practical improvement of the conclusion of the foregoing chapter; while the next verse begins another view of the subject.

V. 2-9. Moses seems here to have addressed himself, particularly to the elders, who had in their youth witnessed the wonderful works which the Lord had wrought both for them and among them; and who were bound to remember them for their own warning, and likewise that they might 9 And that ye may ^{prolong} your days in the land which the LORD ^{sware} unto your fathers to give unto them, and to their seed, ^a land that floweth with milk and honey.

10 For the land, whither thou goest in to possess it, is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out, where thou sowdest thy seed, and wateredst it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs :

11 But ^{the} land whither ye go to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven ;

12 A land which the LORD thy God ^{careth} for : ^{the} eyes of the LORD thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year.

13 ¶ And it shall come to pass, if ye shall hearken ^{diligently} unto my commandments which I command you this day, ^{to} love the LORD your God, and to serve him with all your heart, and with all your soul, 14 That I will give you the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil.

15 And I will ^{send} grass in thy fields for thy cattle, that thou mayest eat and be full.

16 ^{Take} heed to yourselves, that ^{your} heart be not deceived, and ye turn aside, and serve other gods, and worship them ;

17 And then ^{the} LORD's wrath be kindled against you, and he ^{shut} up the heaven that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit, and lest ye perish quickly from off the good land which the LORD giveth you.

18 ¶ Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart, and in your soul, and bind them for ^a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes.

19 And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

20 And thou shalt write them upon the doorposts of thine house, and upon thy gates ; testify them to the rising generation who had not been eye-witnesses of them. (Notes, Ex. 14:26-30. 15:17. Num. 16.)

V. 10, 11. Rain seldom falls in Egypt, (Zech. 14:18, 19.) and the land is chiefly watered by the inundations of the river Nile; which generally cause great fertility, but also occasion the people much labour in digging trenches, and forming conveyances for the water into the different parts of the country, as if they were watering a garden. And especially the methods taken to prevent a famine, in case the Nile should not swell to its usual height, were indeed immensely laborious and expensive; but at the same time so successful, that entire famines have been seldom known since they have been used. In digging the canals and trenches, and in the various engines for raising the water, and pouring it out on the land, the foot as well as the hand must be frequently employed. But the Israelites in Canaan, "a land of hills and valleys, that drinketh water of the rain of heaven," would be entirely exempted from these labours.—Moses employs all kind of arguments to engage the people to obedience.

V. 12. These expressions imply that the fruitfulness of that favoured land arose from a special interposition of Providence for it, as the intended residence of his people. (Notes, 32:5.) At this day the same country is remarkably barren, that special favour being withdrawn.

V. 13-17. The Israelites were here reminded, that the fertility of the promised land depended entirely on God; and that they would have no ground to expect this favour, unless they cleaved to him in love and obedience. But in this case he would certainly send rain in due season and proportion; especially the former rain to prepare the ground for the seed, and the latter rain to bring forward the harvest: but if they ran into idolatry, they must expect to be punished by famine and desolating judgments. (Notes, 28:1-14, 24. Lev. 26:3, 4, 19.)

21 That ^{your} days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the LORD sware unto your fathers to give them, ^{as} the days of heaven upon the earth.

22 For ^{if} ye shall diligently keep all these commandments which I command you to do them, ^{to} love the LORD your God, to walk in all his ways, and ^{to} cleave unto him;

23 Then will the LORD ^{drive} out all these nations from before you, and ye shall possess greater nations, and mightier than yourselves.

24 ^{Every} place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours: from the wilderness, and Lebanon, from the river, the river Euphrates, even unto the uttermost sea shall your coast be.

25 There shall ^{no} man be able to stand before you: ^{for} the LORD your God shall lay the fear of you and the dread of you upon all the land that ye shall tread upon, ^{as} he hath said unto you.

26 ¶ Behold, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse ;

27 ^A blessing, if ye obey the commandments of the LORD your God, which I command you this day ;

28 And ^a curse, if ye will not obey the commandments of the LORD your God; but turn aside out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods which ye have not known.

29 And it shall come to pass, when the LORD thy God hath brought thee in unto the land whither thou goest to possess it, that thou shalt ^{put} the blessing upon mount Gerizim, and the curse upon mount Ebal.

30 ^{Are} they not on the other side Jordan, by the way where the sun goeth down in the land of the Canaanites, which dwell in the champaign over against ^{the} Gilgal, beside the plains of Moreh?

31 For ye shall pass over Jordan to go in to possess the land which the LORD your God giveth you, and ye shall possess it, and dwell therein.

32 And ye shall observe to do all the statutes and judgments which I set before you this day.

V. 18-21. (Notes, 6:6-9.)—The expression, "as the days of heaven upon the earth," denotes exceedingly long and prosperous lives to individuals, and the continuance of the nation in Canaan to the end of the world; which, doubtless, would have been the consequence of hearty, unreserved obedience. (Marg. Ref. Note, Is. 65:21-23.)

V. 22-25. Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 15:18-21. Ex. 23: 31. Num. 34:1-12.

V. 26-30. This significant ceremony is afterwards more explicitly commanded, and the blessing and curse enlarged on; and likewise the observance of it recorded. (Notes, 27: 12-27. Josh. 8:30-35.) Gilgal was on the west side of Jordan, not far from the place where Israel passed that river; and the Canaanites dwelt over against Gilgal, near the plain of Moreh (Gen. 12:6.) so that the blessing and the curse were to be pronounced nigh to the place, where Abraham the blessed had formerly resided. This appointment of it at this time was a pledge of Israel's passing over Jordan.—In this world we believe, and in part experience, that the righteous are blessed and the wicked are accursed: but beyond the grave the reality and extent of the blessing, and of the curse, will be more perfectly apprehended.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

There are certain grand principles in religion, which must be introduced upon every subject; and repetitions in respect of them are so necessary and becoming, that no learned ingenuity or eloquence can compensate for the omission. Such are repentance of sin; faith in Jesus Christ; whatever relates to his person, love, atonement, and grace; regeneration; love to God and man, and the future state of righteous and eternal retributions. The more full the heart of the speaker or writer is of "the good treasure," the more will he enlarge on these subjects; to the disgust of such as, under the influence of pride and worldly affections, savour not heavenly things. In one way or another they will be continually

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We cannot serve God and Mammon, nor worship the true God and idols, nor depend upon Christ Jesus and superstitious or self-righteous confidences. No coalition ought so much as to be attempted in these cases.—True religion springs from the subversion of every false dependence, and the dethroning of every idol, and tends to the extirpation of every rival and opponent, that the Lord may be our only Portion and Salvation, and receive all our worship and obedience. Nor can we ever approach him with acceptance, but in the way which he has revealed, and in the ordinances which he has appointed; for neither our wisdom nor our imagination, is in this case at all to be trusted. (Note, Ex. 25:40.) In Christ Jesus, as in the true Temple, "all the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily," to him we come by humble faith, and receive the pardon, the reconciliation, and the grace which he bestows from his mercy-seat: thus we learn to love him, to obey his commandments, and to present our spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise, and every work of compassion and kindness performed for his sake. There we find acceptance of our imperfect services, and learn to delight in obedience; for the ways of our reconciled Father are "ways of pleasantness and all his paths are peace," and the repeated calls to "rejoice before the Lord," here, as well as in the New Testament, should be peculiarly noticed. (Notes, Phil. 4:4, 1 Pet. 1:8, 9.) This holy joy will be excited in our hearts, and generally preserved and increased, in proportion as we abound in love and good works. But we must not be satisfied even with that measure of diligence, which passes current in the visible church; where too often many allow themselves, and are connived at by others, in "doing whatsoever is right in their own eyes." We must consider what the word of God requires: we must remember those primitive times, when "great grace was upon all" the company of Christians, and reflect how they lived; and we must by faith contemplate those who have arrived at their rest and inheritance, and endeavour to conceive how they love the Lord and rejoice in serving him, and be ourselves pressing forward after that perfection.—If we would have a comfortable use of our possessions, and be happy in domestic life, we should honour God with our substance, worship him in our families, and train up our children and servants to attend on all his ordinances. Nay, "whether we eat, or drink, or whatever we do, we should do all to the glory of God:" but this cannot be done, without observing the rules of strict temperance, and submission to Providence, in our use of his good creatures, and having all "sanctified by the word of God and prayer;" or without separating a portion for the poor, and for the provision of such as labour in the word and doctrine, and seek not an inheritance of temporal things among their brethren, and must therefore not be forgotten by them. We must likewise "do all in the name of Jesus Christ, giving thanks to the Father through him;" and exercise in every thing that dominion over our appetites which becomes his disciples, and those who savour heavenly things. And it behoves us to watch against being ensnared by the examples, maxims, fashions, and persuasions of the world; for if we yield at all to them, even in the desires of our hearts, they will draw us into further abominations. But "whatsoever the Lord commands, that must we observe and do, without adding to it, or diminishing from it," that "it may be well with us, and with our children after us for ever."

wonders," (that is, predict remarkable events which would come to pass accordingly, or work apparent miracles,) and then endeavour to seduce the people into idolatry. Thus a divine interposition would be pleaded in support of a practice directly contrary to the first principles of true religion, as stated in the sacred Scriptures. But those first principles having been sufficiently demonstrated, and it being impossible that God should contradict himself; the Israelites were commanded to treat the prophet as a deceiver, and his apparent miracles and prophecies as impostures; and to consider that the Lord permitted such things, in order to prove whether they were cordially devoted in love to his worship, or were glad of a pretence for turning aside to idolatry. (Note, 8:2.) Nay, they must put the deceiver to death without mercy.—The existence and perfections of the one living and true God are fully proved by the works of creation and providence; the revelation made to Israel by Moses had been authenticated by the most public and stupendous miracles; and the worship of JEHOVAH alone was the fundamental principle of that revelation. No miracles therefore could be admitted as a proof that the people might violate the first and great commandment of the law, just before given from mount Sinai: for it was impossible such miracles could be wrought by JEHOVAH, and if wrought by another, he must be the rival and enemy of JEHOVAH.—Those things indeed in the law given by Moses, which related to the external forms of worship, being changeable in their nature, might be superseded by a future revelation; and here the evidence of miracles, if public and incontestable, was admissible. Yet it is observable, that our Lord and his apostles did not rest the Christian revelation on miracles only, but they constantly appealed to the Old Testament; the prophecies and promises of which, when fairly interpreted, were suited to raise an expectation of exactly such a change in externals as they effected, and which at the same time fully established all the grand principles and requirements of preceding revelations. In all cases where the evident testimony of the sacred oracles is not evaded or contradicted, miracles may be considered as the seal of God, to the doctrine taught by those who work them: but when the grand principles of Scripture are opposed, they must be allowed insufficient to counterbalance the immense weight of evidence by which that has been authenticated.—We are too much in the dark to determine exactly what created power can effect, and what are its limits: and it seems undeniable that Satan, if permitted, could produce changes in nature which would to us appear miraculous: or give intimations of events speedily to take place, which would seem prophetic: though neither of them would be at all worthy to be compared with the stupendous miracles recorded in Scripture, or the system of prophecy herein contained. But as we may be sure this enemy will never interpose to confirm the holy truths of Christianity. (Note, Matt. 12:25, 26.) so we may rest satisfied, that God will not permit him to deceive his upright servants; though he may allow him to prove them, and to show the difference between them and plausible hypocrites. (Notes, Matt. 24: 23-25 Rev. 13:8-10.)—As the revelation of the truth and

8 Thou shalt not ^fconsent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither ^gshall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him;

9 But ^hthou shalt surely kill him: ⁱthine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people.

10 And thou shalt ^jstone him with stones, that he die; because he hath sought to thrust thee away from the LORD thy God, ^kwhich brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of ^lbondage.

11 And ^mall Israel shall hear and fear, and shall do no more any such wickedness as this is among you.

12 ¶ If thou ⁿshalt hear ^osay in one of thy cities which the LORD thy God hath given thee to dwell there, saying, off the yoke of the divine law; for this is only another name for the children of the devil. (Marg. Ref. y.)—In case a report prevailed, that a whole city in Israel had renounced the worship of God and established idolatry, the rulers and magistrates were required first fairly to investigate the case; and if the fact were fully proved, they were commanded to slay all the inhabitants, and burn the city with all the spoil of it "as an accursed thing," devoted to destruction, a sacrifice to the offended justice of God. Thus the same dreadful punishment was appointed for idolatrous Israelites, as they had been employed to inflict on the devoted Canaanites; and the city itself, like Jericho and the cities of Arad, must be so entirely destroyed, as never more to be rebuilt, except by an act of direct rebellion against God. (Notes, Num. 21:1—3. Josh. 6:17—21.)—Many distinctions have been made, both by Jewish and Christian expositors, to abate the severity of this law; but the text gives no countenance to any of them. It should not indeed be supposed that the crime was charged on the city, unless a majority of the inhabitants concurred in it; or that any individuals who had entirely escaped the general contagion, might not separate from their guilty neighbours; and perhaps space might on some occasions be allowed for repentance. The destruction of the spoil would evince, that the prosecution and execution were not the effect of avarice, but of zeal for the honour of God and religion; and nothing can be conceived more suited to restrain the people from idolatry than this statute. (Notes, 7:25, 26.) But we never read that it was carried into execution; (Notes, Josh. 22:12—16.) and have reason to think that this neglect was a national sin, which hastened the Babylonish captivity. Had some mortified limbs been cut off, the life of the state might have been prolonged. (Mic. 1:13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is of the greatest importance to be well acquainted with the truths and precepts of revelation, and well established in them: for we may expect to be proved, not only with that trial of our faith which requires us to suffer, or to renounce our worldly interests, for conscience' sake; but by such plausible temptations as "Satan transformed into an angel of light," can set before us, to impose upon us with evil in the guise of good, and with error in the appearance of truth: nor can any thing be effectually opposed to such temptations, but a plain, express testimony of Scripture. In order to render these temptations more dangerous, our crafty foe often sends them by persons, whom we have been accustomed to look up to as superiors, teachers, and men of God; or by those, for whom we entertain the most tender affection; the former we can scarcely think capable of deceiving, or of being deceived; to the latter, we can hardly find in our hearts to refuse any request. But we must remember, that in all this "the LORD our God doth prove us;" he is our Master, and we must call no man master upon earth: if therefore the servant contradicts the LORD, we must believe the latter and not the former.—The love and duty which we owe to God are so immensely superior to all other obligations, that we must act even towards our dearest friends, as though we hated them, when 'his command or his glory requires it. pitied, but be put to death, according to the law of God; surely we are called upon, not only to refuse compliance with those temptations which are enforced by our relations, but plainly to protest against the dangerous tempters, sharply to reprove them, and if we cannot reclaim them, to renounce their friendship.—Nor must we more regard the examples of multitudes, who establish fashions of ungodliness, and put piety out of countenance, as singularity, preciseness, or unnecessary scrupulosity. Still we must "cleave to the LORD, and love him, and walk after him," and not after the world; keeping his commandments, and attending on his worship, however others revile or ridicule us for our adherence to them.—The fear and service of God form the true interest of communities as well as of individuals; and the progress of ungodliness precedes the approach of public calamities, both in the nature of things, and in the just judgment of God. The magistrate, therefore, in good policy as well as in duty, is bound to employ his authority to repress wickedness and promote religion; which may be done by various means, without wielding the persecutor's sword, or violating the rights of private judgment and liberty of conscience; especially by countenancing and encouraging the faithful preaching of God's word. But the end of all human punishments, yea, of all the threatenings and judgments of God, is this; "that men should hear and fear," and repent, and forsake their sins, "that the fierce wrath of God" may be averted from individuals, and from nations.—However enormous any crime may be, and however necessary the punishment of it, none must be proceeded against without diligent investigation and full proof; and every one concerned in the prosecution of criminals, should be careful to make it evident, that he is influenced, not by selfish motives, but by a regard to public justice. Yet they who connive at and conceal those enormous crimes, which ought to be punished by the magistrate, become partakers of the guilt, and the obstinate in wickedness are near destruction: we must therefore separate from them if we would escape their doom.—But we should carefully observe, that we have even greater cause to fear the wrath of our holy Lord God, under the Christian dispensation, than the Israelites had; because those spiritual judgments, now inflicted, are infinitely more terrible than the most solemn execution of criminals by the sword of justice; and the more entirely the wicked escape punishment in this world, the greater will be their misery in the world to come.—Let us then fear the spiritual idolatry of covetousness, and the love of worldly pleasure; and be careful not to countenance them in our families, by our example, or by the education of our children; and may we also "abstain from all appearance of evil," and in every thing "do that which is right in the eyes of the LORD our God."

23 And thou shalt eat before the LORD thy God, in the place which he shall choose to place his name there, the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herds, and of thy flocks; that thou mayest learn to fear the LORD thy God always.

24 And if the way be too long for thee, so that thou art not able to carry it; or if the place be too far from thee, which the LORD thy God shall choose to set his name there, when the LORD thy God hath blessed thee:

25 Then shalt thou turn it into money, and bind up the money in thine hand, and shalt go unto the place which the LORD thy God shall choose.

26 And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink, or for whatsoever thy soul desireth: and thou shalt eat there before the LORD thy God, and thou shalt rejoice, thou and thine household;

27 And the Levite that is within thy gates, thou shalt not forsake him: for he hath no part nor inheritance with thee.

28 At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year, and shalt lay it up within thy gates.

29 And the Levite, (because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee,) and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doest.

CHAPTER XV.

On the seventh year the debts of the poor must be remitted; nevertheless the people must give and lend liberally, 1-11. Hebrews are not to be released in the seventh year, unless unwilling to depart, 12-18. The male firstlings of cattle are devoted to God, 19-23.

AT the end of every seven years thou shalt make a release.

2 And this is the manner of the release: Every creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbour shall release it; he shall not exact it of his neighbour, or of his brother; because it is called the LORD's release.

3 Of a foreigner thou mayest exact it again: but that which is thine with thy brother, thine hand shall release;

V. 21. The allowance to give the flesh of any animal, that died of itself, to a poor sojourner; or to sell it to an alien, either journeying through the country, or living on the borders of it; proves beyond controversy, that the law restricting diet was entirely ceremonial, though it conveyed moral instruction, and answered at that time valuable religious purposes: for, had the obligation to abstain from certain meats been of a moral nature, disregard to it would have been sinful in heathens as well as in Israelites; and these must no more be necessary to the commission of sin by others, than commit it themselves. It should also be observed, that as the blood was not separated from these animals, so this allowance likewise proves, that the restriction from eating blood is not of moral obligation. (Note, Lev. 17:10-16.)

V. 22-29. (Notes, 12:17, 18. 26:12-15.) These verses require a second tithe from the produce of the land, which, with that appropriated for the maintenance of the Levites, amounted to a fifth part. Two years together the people were commanded to bring this second tithe to Jerusalem, either in kind or in money; and to feast upon it religiously before the Lord, that they might be drawn to spend the more time at the temple, in the society of the priests, at the ordinances of God, and among their brethren. But the third year they were required to spend it in hospitably entertaining and relieving the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow; that is, in every kind of hospitality and charity. This appointment was evidently intended to counteract the covetousness, distrust, and selfishness of the human heart; to promote friendliness, liberality, and cheerfulness; to raise a perpetual fund for the use of the poor; and to teach the people that they would never so comfortably enjoy their worldly portion, as when they shared it with their necessitous brethren. They were taught to convert the common blessings of Providence into a sacred ordinance, by accompanying their most free use of them with the exercises of religion: and this was the way to learn to fear God always, and to obtain his blessing upon all the works of their hands.—Some vindicate feasting from these laws; and certainly such temperate, religious, and charitable feasting, is allowable and beneficial. (Note, Luke 14:12-14.) But what has this in common with sensual, luxurious, and ungodly banquets?

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Those whom God hath chosen to be his children, he will form to be a holy people, of a peculiar and heavenly disposition, and "zealous of good works." As they are so highly distinguished from other people, they must be careful to set an example of holy moderation in all their affections, and to avoid every thing which may disgrace their profession.—Having a Father in heaven, who ever liveth to supply all their wants and to make up every loss, they need not mourn for earthly friends disconsolately, as others do.—The Lord prohibits us nothing but in a wise and kind regard to our welfare. The language of his prohibitions, rightly interpreted, is, "Do thyself no harm;" do not wound thyself; do not ruin thy health, thy reputation, thy domestic comfort, thy peace of mind; especially do not murder thy soul; be not the vile slave of thy appetites and passions; do not render all around thee miserable, and thyself the most wretched of all; but aspire at that which is noble, excellent, permanent, and useful." Considering these prohibitions, in connexion with the manifold indulgences which he allows us, we must acknowledge that we should all be happy, if we consulted our own and each other's welfare, as much as the law of God does.—Making that our rule of enjoyment, we should use providential blessings in subserviency to religious edification, to our own inward peace and satisfaction, to the promotion of brotherly love, and to our mutual usefulness. That "Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness," is a truth, of which every man will have experimental proof in proportion to his devotedness to God. May we then choose and pursue this happiness, and compassionate and pray for those deluded millions who seek for pleasure in sin, which is the only cause of all the misery in the universe; and let us learn to value every earthly advantage, as enabling us to glorify God, by disseminating the knowledge of his truth, and by communicating to the relief of our distressed brethren and fellow-creatures.

NOTES.—CHAP. XV. V. 2. Exart. The debtor no doubt was bound in conscience to pay his debt, if able, at that or any future time; but the creditor was not allowed to sue for it, nor the magistrate to enforce the payment of it: at least if it appeared that the debtor could not without inconvenience part with the money. The word exact seems to imply such a limitation; and the law was evidently intended for the relief of the indigent, not for the security of the fraudulent. (Notes, Neh. 5:1-13. Is. 58:3-7. Matt. 6:12.)

6 For the LORD thy God blesseth thee, as he promised thee; and thou shalt lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow; and thou shalt reign over many nations, but they shall not reign over thee.

7 If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates, in thy land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother;

8 But thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth.

9 Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, saying, The seventh year, the year of release, is at hand; and thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou givest him nought, and he cry unto the LORD against thee, and it be sin unto thee.

10 Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him: because that for this thing the LORD thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto.

11 For the poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land.

12 ¶ And if thy brother, an Hebrew man, or an Hebrew woman, be sold unto thee, and serve thee six years; then in the seventh year thou shalt let him go free from thee.

13 And when thou sendest him out free from thee, thou shalt not let him go away empty:

14 Thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy floor, and out of thy wine press: of that wherewith the LORD thy God hath blessed thee, thou shalt give unto him.

15 And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, and the LORD thy God redeemed thee: therefore I command thee this thing to-day.

16 And it shall be, if he say unto thee, I will not go away from thee; (because he loveth thee and thine house, because he is well with thee);

17 Then thou shalt take an awl, and thrust it through his ear unto the door, and he shall be thy servant for ever: and also unto thy maid-servant thou shalt do likewise.

18 It shall not seem hard unto thee, when thou sendest him away free from thee; for he hath been worth a double hired servant to thee, in serving thee six years: and the LORD thy God shall bless thee in all that thou doest.

19 ¶ All the firstling males that come of thy herd, and of thy flock, thou shalt sanctify unto the LORD thy God: thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thy bullock, nor shear the firstling of thy sheep:

20 Thou shalt eat it before the LORD thy God, year by year, in the place which the LORD shall choose, thou and thy household.

21 And if there be any blemish therein, as if it be lame, or blind, or have any ill blemish, thou shalt not sacrifice it unto the LORD thy God:

22 Thou shalt eat it within thy gates: the unclean and the clean person shall eat it alike, as the roe-buck, and as the hart.

23 Only thou shalt not eat the blood thereof: thou shalt pour it upon the ground as water.

CHAPTER XVI.

The laws concerning the three great annual feasts recapitulated, with an injunction that every one should then offer according to his ability, 1-17. The appointment and duties of magistrates, 18-20. Groves and images prohibited, 21, 22.

OBSEVE the month of Abib, and keep the passover unto the LORD thy God: for in the month of Abib the LORD thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night.

2 Thou shalt therefore sacrifice the passover unto the LORD thy God, of the flock and the herd, in the place which the LORD shall choose to place his name there.

3 Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it: seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith, even the bread of affliction; (for thou camest forth out of the land of Egypt in haste;) that thou mayest remember the day when thou camest forth out of the land of Egypt, all the days of thy life.

4 And there shall be no leavened bread seen with thee in all thy coasts seven days; neither shall there any thing of the flesh, which thou sacrificedst the first day at even, remain all night until the morning.

5 Thou mayest not sacrifice the passover within any of thy gates, which the LORD thy God giveth thee:

6 But at the place which the LORD thy God shall choose to place his name in, there thou shalt sacrifice the passover at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt.

7 And thou shalt roast and eat it in the place which the LORD thy God shall choose: and thou shalt turn in the morning, and go unto thy tents.

8 Six days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, and on the seventh day shall be a solemn assembly to the LORD thy God; thou shalt do no work therein.

factor, and honour and adorn his holy religion. (Notes, Matt. 12:46-50, 25:31-46.) In proportion as faith and love prevail they will triumph over the selfishness of the heart, and over the ingratitude of the world; exclude those numerous excuses which result from unbelief, distrust, and covetousness; and lead us to abound in this grace also.—The aim of every Christian should be daily "to do good to all men, especially to them that are of the household of faith;" and to open his hand liberally in giving or in lending, according to his ability and according to the necessity of his brethren, that distressing poverty may have no place among the followers of Christ; especially searching out such as are most modest, humble, and backward to complain, or to obtrude upon the notice of others.—Though this is no more than a small acknowledgment of inestimable favours already received; yet it shall be considered as "lending to the LORD," and be abundantly recompensed. Let all then watch and pray against an envious, grudging, selfish heart. We need never fear being losers, when the Lord stands security for the debt; nor carrying matters to excess whilst we fall so far short of his measure of love to us: and that which the world often calls prudence, will be found the greatest folly. In the exercise of this loving-kindness, those ought especially to be provided for, who have been useful to us, and spent their strength in our service: and, instead of "it seeming hard to us," when we thus communicate to their comfort; we should be ambitious of rendering all who live in our families or are connected with us, so well satisfied, that they may love us and our houses, and count it their privilege to abide in their situation. Such a Master is our God: all who make trial of his service will account it perfect freedom, and consider it their happiness to join themselves to him, to serve him with all they have and are, and to dwell in his house as his willing servants for ever and ever.—But let us not leave this subject without noticing the benevolent spirit which pervades the sacred Scriptures. For where, in all the admired writings of the Greeks and Romans and other pagans, shall we find so much benevolence and kindness to debtors, slaves, and indigent persons inculcated, as in this single chapter?

NOTES.—CHAP. XVI. V. 1. By night. The Israelites did not actually set off on their journey till the approach 9 ¶ Seven weeks shalt thou number unto thee: begin to number the seven weeks from such time as thou beginnest to put the sickle to the corn.

10 And thou shalt keep the feast of weeks unto the LORD thy God with a tribute of a free-will-offering of thine hand, which thou shalt give unto the LORD thy God, according as the LORD thy God hath blessed thee:

11 And thou shalt rejoice before the LORD thy God, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are among you, in the place which the LORD thy God hath chosen to place his name there.

12 And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt: and thou shalt observe and do these statutes.

13 ¶ Thou shalt observe the feast of tabernacles seven days, after that thou hast gathered in thy corn and thy wine.

14 And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite, the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are within thy gates.

15 Seven days shalt thou keep a solemn feast unto the LORD thy God, in the place which the LORD shall choose; because the LORD thy God shall bless thee in all thy increase, and in all the works of thine hands; therefore thou shalt surely rejoice.

16 Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the LORD thy God, in the place which he shall choose; in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles: and they shall not appear before the LORD empty.

17 Every man shall give as he is able, accord-of morning; but, while eating the passover, and holding themselves in readiness during the night, the first-born of Egypt were destroyed, which made way for their release; and afterwards by night they passed the Red Sea, when their deliverance was completed.—Moses repeated these laws, as with his dying lips, to this new generation, just before their entrance into Canaan, to leave the deeper impression upon their minds. (Notes, Ex. 12:21-37, 14:19-31.)

V. 2. The word passover is here used for the various sacrifices offered at that festival, whether of the flock, (as the paschal lamb,) or of the herd. (Note, John 18:28-32, beginning.)—In the place, &c.] Note, 12:5-7.

V. 3-6. The use of unleavened bread was required to be general through the land, by which they, who were confined at home, testified their concurrence with those who ate the passover at the tabernacle: but that was appointed to be slain and eaten, only in the place where the tabernacle was situated. Thither the males were required to come, both at the passover and the two other great feasts, unless unavoidably prevented: and the women, though not commanded, frequently attended them.—The people when about to leave Egypt ate the paschal lamb in the posture of travellers: and therefore their departure seems to be dated from the time of eating it. (Notes, Ex. 12:23-20, 13:3-7, Lev. 23:5-8, Num. 9:1-14, 28:16-25.)

V. 7. In the morning. In case of urgent necessity, the Israelites might return home the next morning after eating the passover. Some, however, think this means the morning, after the conclusion of the feasts; and the celebration of them employed the day on which the passover was eaten, six intervening days, and the last concluding day of a solemn assembly; being eight in the whole, from the fourteenth to the twenty-first day of the month inclusive.

V. 9. To put the sickle. That is, to reap the sheaf of first-fruits, which was presented on the first day of unleavened bread. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 23:14-18, Lev. 23:15-21.)

ing to the blessing of the LORD thy God which he hath given thee.

18 ¶ Judges and officers shalt thou make thee in all thy gates which the LORD thy God giveth thee throughout thy tribes: and they shall judge the people with just judgment.

19 Thou shalt not wrest judgment; thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous.

20 ¶ That which is altogether just shalt thou follow, that thou mayest live, and inherit the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

21 ¶ Thou shalt not plant thee a grove of any trees near unto the altar of the LORD thy God, which thou shalt make thee.

22 Neither shalt thou set thee up any image, which the LORD thy God hateth.

V. 18, 19. Besides the judges of the principal court held near the tabernacle, to which in difficult and important cases appeals might be made; inferior magistrates must be appointed in every part of the land, who should execute their office in the gates, or most public places, in every city or considerable town, to administer justice in the simplest and cheapest manner. But the same integrity, impartiality, and disinterestedness, were required in them, as in the superior magistrates. (Notes, Ex. 18:17-23. 23:1-3, 9. 2 Chr. 19:3-11.)

V. 21. Groves having been generally adopted in the worship of idols, and made the scenes of the vilest abominations, were expressly and repeatedly prohibited in the worship of God. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The frequent repetition of the same laws, forms a humiliating reproach of man's unteachableness in spiritual things; for God does nothing in vain.—From the example of Moses, ministers and parents may learn to renew their instructions and admonitions with their latest breath, that the survivors may have them associated with every remembrance of them. * Note, 2 Pet. 1:12-15.—A believer should not forget, for one day, his original state of guilt and misery, his gracious deliverance, and the price which it cost the Redeemer; that gratitude and joy in the Lord may, during the residue of his life, be mingled with godly sorrow, mortification of sin, and humble patience under the tribulations which lie in the way to the kingdom of heaven.—Every one of our services must be performed in communion with the church of Christ, and in dependence on him, our Temple, Altar, Sacrifice, and Passover; “being accompanied with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.” We should indeed be thankful that our attendance on God's ordinances does not require such long and expensive journeys, as that of Israel did; but if our hearts be right with God, we shall so delight in his service, that the labour required in it will be our pleasure, or we shall be ashamed that it is not. The expense incurred in making the heart of the poor and destitute rejoice, according to the Lord's blessing upon us, will be our own heartfelt satisfaction: and we shall not so much as wish to “appear before the Lord empty” but shall desire to be “rich in good works, ready to distribute, and willing to communicate” in whatever can glorify God or do good to mankind. (Note, Heb. 13:15, 16.) For while the Lord so graciously even commands us to rejoice before him, we should desire to help the joy of all our brethren.—Let us likewise note that magistracy is the express appointment of God; as such we are bound to submit to it, with thankfulness for its advantages, patience under the inconveniences attending its undue administration, and prayers for more placed over us. (Notes, Rom. 13:1-8.) But magistrates likewise should consider their accountability to God for the use of their authority; and study to know and do their duty in uprightness, disinterestedness, and impartiality; that they may both be public blessings, and heirs of everlasting life, as the true disciples of him who “loveth righteousness, and hateth iniquity.” And none of us should fear any thing so much, as doing that “which the LORD our God hateth.”

V. 2-7. The expression “within any of thy gates,” denoted all residing in the cities, and all who went in and came out at the gates of them: so that it included the inhabitants of the whole land.—This law enjoined that those who committed idolatry should be stoned, as well as those who seduced others to commit it: for that crime especially “transgressed the covenant,” and would become a national forfeiture, if not thus punished.—Had men been commanded to worship creatures, however exalted, it might have been complained of as a degradation; much more if they had been required to worship beasts, inanimate figures, and stocks or stones. But God “had not commanded” such practices, nay, he had expressly forbidden them; and they were entirely man's own foolish inventions, and Satan's abominable suggestions.—This law was the magistrate's rule in administering justice to individuals; as that before considered regulated informations of idolatry, and the punishment of cities, which were guilty of that crime. (Notes, 13.) In both cases the witnesses were required to take the lead in the execution of the criminal, that they might be rendered more cautious in their testimony: for though the false witness was the actual murderer of the person put to death unjustly, yet perhaps he would not be so shocked by it, when another was the executioner of the sentence, as when he himself was required to perform that painful office.

Two witnesses, &c. (6) (Notes, 19:15-21. Num. 35:24-30. Matt. 18:15-17. 1 Tim. 5:19, 20.) Great weight is laid on this, throughout the Scripture; and is matter of serious inquiry, whether in any ordinary case, the testimony of one unsupported witness, even of fair character, should be depended on, especially when the life of man is at stake.

V. 8-13. This law is addressed to the magistrates before mentioned in the different parts of the land. (Note, 16:18, 19.)—In many cases of life and death, or of property, or concerning the law of retaliation, they might find perplexing difficulties. (Marg. Ref. o.) Such causes were therefore to be referred to the decision of the superior tribunals, which would be held at the place where the tabernacle would be fixed. (Ex. 18:22.)—The priests and Levites, having the most leisure, and being especially appointed to the study of the law, which was not only the rule of conscience, but likewise the law of the land, by their learning would be best qualified to act as judges; and probably the sanhedrim and other superior courts of justice were chiefly composed of them, though not without some persons of the other tribes. “The 10 And thou shalt do according to the sentence, which they of that place which the Lord shall choose shall show thee; and thou shalt observe to do according to all that they inform thee:

11 According to the sentence of the law which they shall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they shall tell thee, thou shalt do: thou shalt not decline from the sentence which they shall show thee, to the right hand nor to the left.

12 And the man that will do presumptuously, and will not hearken unto the priest that standeth to minister there before the Lord thy God, or unto the judge, even that man shall die; and thou shalt put away the evil from Israel.

13 And all the people shall hear, and fear, and do no more presumptuously.

14 ¶ When thou art come unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein, and shall say, I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me:

15 Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee whom the Lord thy God shall choose; one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee: thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother.

16 But he shall not multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses: forasmuch as the Lord hath said unto you, Ye shall henceforth return no more that way.

17 Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away; neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold.

18 And it shall be when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book, without that which is before the priests the Levites:

19 And it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life; that he may learn to fear the Lord his God, to keep all the words of this law, and these statutes, to do them:

20 That his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aside from the commandment, to the right hand or to the left; to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom, he and his children, in the midst of Israel.

judge" here mentioned (9) may mean either the high-priest, or such other supreme magistrate, as God from time to time should raise up among them. To these the appeal must be made: and, with all their advantages, it was not likely they would give a false sentence, while they continued free from gross apostasy in religion, and corruption in morals. As, however, the law related, not to matters of faith and conscience, but merely to the administration of justice in the land; it would be better that an individual should sometimes be aggrieved, than that the advantages of magistracy should be abridged: therefore he who presumptuously refused to submit, whether magistrate or private person, was ordered to be put to death. (Marg. Ref. v-z.)—In every state there must be some final award, from which there lies no appeal; and that must be submitted to, even though in some cases it should be unjust: but this gives no countenance to the monstrous claim, which some have made, of being absolute interpreters of doctrines and precepts, in matters of conscience, to which all ought to submit, however evidently their decisions contradict the word of God. In this case it suffices to say, "we must obey" and believe "God rather than man;" as Peter replied to the successors of those very persons, to whom this authority was originally given, and to whom it had at that time devolved. (Notes, Acts 4:13-22. 5:29-31.)

The priests the Levites. (9) The priests, who were also Levites, seem especially intended. Yet the ordinary Levites acted as magistrates in the days of David, (Notes, 1 Chr. 23:2-6. 26:29.) but probably in inferior situations.

V. 14. The appointment of a king is not here commanded, nor so much as counselled; nay, it is implied, that such a change in their government would originate from a desire of being "like the nations," to whom God would have his people unlike; and it is certain that they sinned when they asked a king. (Notes, 1 Sam. 8:1-9. 12:16-19.) Yet the Lord foresaw that this would take place, and he previously gave rules respecting it.—They therefore argue very inconclusively, who infer the lawfulness of slavery, polygamy, or divorces, from those laws which suppose their existence, and establish regulations concerning them: for all such questions must be determined by the plain precepts or general tenor of Scripture, and not by these judicial regulations. (Note, Ex. 21:2.)

V. 15. Though the people sinned in the days of Samuel, by desiring a king; yet they obeyed this law in referring the choice of one to God. (Notes, 1 Sam. 8:19-22. 10:17-22. 11:12-15. 2 Sam. 5:1,2.) * He first chose Saul: but rejecting him, he chose David, and then Solomon, whose posterity reigned till the Babylonish captivity. The Israelites were forbidden to set a stranger over them; not so much lest he should oppress them, as lest he should lead them into idolatry. This referred to a king whom they should appoint for themselves; not to a ruler which in providence might be placed over them, without their own concurrence, or, as a punishment for their sins: (Jer. 27:12,14,17. Note, Jer. 29:4-7.) but the interpreters of the law, in the days of Christ, deduced from this clause the unlawfulness of submitting to a foreign yoke, and incited the people to continual rebellions, which at length terminated in their ruin. (Note, Matt. 22:15-22.)

V. 16. Multiplying horses for chariots of war and cavalry, or for luxury, would increase the splendour of the monarch, and form a ground of confidence distinct from a proper confidence in God, and inconsistent with it, and with considering him as the glory of Israel. Egypt abounded in horses; and the desire of multiplying these would induce the prince to encourage a trade with that kingdom; and this might make way for the Israelites being again subjugated by the Egyptians, or at least corrupted by their idolatries and vices. Whereas, it was the command of God that they should no more return thither, but be totally detached from them.—Accordingly we find, that till the days of Solomon, horses were little used by the Israelites, and they had not much intercourse with Egypt: but afterward the horses of that kingdom proved a continual source of temptation and sin to them. (Notes, 1 Kings 10 24-29. Ps. 20:6-8. Is. 30:15-17. 31:1-3.)

V. 17. Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Sam. 5:13-16. 1 Kings 11:1-8.

V. 18-20. Some interpret this command, of the book of Deuteronomy alone: but it is most probable, that the whole law was intended: and if Moses, with his immense engagements, found time for compiling and writing the whole, it could not be an intolerable task imposed upon any future prince to transcribe it. This would have a very great effect in rendering him well acquainted with the law in every part, for writing not only assists the memory, but causes us to notice every single word of what we transcribe. It is probable, however, that this law was very seldom observed by the kings of Judah, and never by those of Israel. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are continually called on to remember the pure and spotless sacrifice of Christ, and reminded to serve God with the best of our abilities, time, and possessions; otherwise our professed obedience will be an abomination. To him all worship and love belong; and idolatry and irreligion of every kind will assuredly be punished, in this world or in the next, with at least as great severity as those crimes which disturb the peace of society.—We are also repeatedly cautioned against rashness in bearing testimony, or in punishing accused persons; that the innocent may not be involved in the same doom with the guilty.—Ministers and magistrates should, in their several places, give diligence to obtain exact and extensive knowledge, as well as to act with integrity and impartiality, that they may not mislead or injure those, who place confidence in their decisions. In both cases, however, there lies an appeal to the infallible Teacher and Judge of the world, who will set all right, and effectually redress all those that trust in him.—The presumptuous offender, who refused to submit to the award of human justice, with all its imperfections, was condemned to die: of what punishment then will the obstinate rebel against the righteous Governor of the universe be adjudged worthy? and with what vengeance will he be recompensed, who despises or abuses the grace of the gospel? (Note, Heb. 10:28-31.)—The Lord sees the hearts of his own people too much disposed to be like the world around them; and for their chastisement he frequently permits them to obtain the objects of their foolish desires; still regulating the whole ultimately for their good.—The higher any person is exalted, the more strongly must he be tempted to pride, covetousness, luxury, and lust, those fatal enemies to true

THE priests the Levites, and all the tribe of Levi, shall have no part nor inheritance with Israel: they shall eat the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and his inheritance.

2 Therefore shall they have no inheritance among their brethren; the LORD is their inheritance, as he hath said unto them.

3 And this shall be the priest's due from the people, from them that offer a sacrifice, whether it be ox or sheep: and they shall give unto the priest his shoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw.

4 The first-fruit also of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the first of the fleece of thy sheep, shalt thou give him.

5 For the LORD thy God hath chosen him out of all thy tribes, to stand in minister in the name of the LORD, him and his sons for ever.

6 And if a Levite come from any of thy gates out of all Israel, where he sojourneth, and come with all the desire of his mind unto the place which the LORD shall choose;

7 Then he shall minister in the name of the LORD his God, as all his brethren the Levites do, which stand there before the LORD.

8 They shall have like portions to eat, beside what which cometh of the sale of his patrimony.

godliness. Against those evils, princes especially need to watch, and ought to be cautioned by those who have access to them; lest the extensive influence of their example and authority should become ruinous to millions, who look up to them for protection and prosperity. But alas! who hath boldness, disinterestedness, and zeal, sufficient to venture the loss of their favour, and the consequences of their displeasure, by reminding them of such salutary but offensive truths? (Notes, 1 Kings 22:8, 13, 14, 26, 27.) Almost all men rather choose to occupy the more pleasing and profitable place of flatterers; and the remaining few either observe a timid silence, or soon are driven from the verge of courts. (Note, Amos 7:12, 13.) Kings themselves have therefore the more need to be employed in the daily study of the Scriptures, and of whatever can enable them to understand the Scripture; that they may become well acquainted with the truth and will of God; and learn that true wisdom, which begins in the fear of him, and in habitual regard to his authority, and to that great day of account, in which there will be no respect of persons. But alas! how much of God's word is overlooked by his professed people! One is almost induced to think that this chapter was omitted in Solomon's copy of the law, and in those of the other Kings of Israel and Judah. And might not an impartial and well-informed person suppose the same respecting some of our Bibles, with reference to those chapters which immediately instruct men in the duties of their several stations, and improvement of their talents, especially the highest and most important stations, in the community, and in the church of God? We all however ought more carefully and exactly to study the Scriptures, to examine ourselves, to watch our hearts, to avoid temptations, and to pray for faith and grace, by which we may be enabled to observe all the commandments of God; for "in keeping of them there is great reward."

NOTES.—CHAP. XVIII. V. 1, 2. Marg. Ref.

V. 3. The two cheeks, (probably the whole head with the tongue,) and the maw, are supposed to have been at this time first granted out of the peace-offerings, in addition to what had before been allotted the priests and Levites: for they are not mentioned in the preceding laws. (Note, Lev. 7:29-31.)

V. 4, 5. The proportion of each particular to be offered as first-fruits is nowhere fixed; and it seems to have been left to every man's own conscience, according to his circumstances, and as a test of his zeal and liberality.

V. 6—8. It seems that the Levites officiated by courses, or according to some rule, from their first establishment in Canaan: but if any one, out of his course, from cordial love of the ordinances and courts of the Lord, preferred officiating as a servant to the priests at the sanctuary, to living at his own city, he was to be encouraged by some addition to his maintenance. The words rendered "the sale of his patrimony" are variously interpreted, and are obscure to us; but probably they mean, that the Levite must not be deprived of any part of what would otherwise accrue to him, whether from the sale

9 ¶ When thou art come into the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations.

10 There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch,

14 For these nations, which thou shalt possess, hearkened unto observers of times, and unto diviners: but as for thee, the LORD thy God hath not suffered thee so to do.

15 The LORD thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken:

16 According to all that thou desiredst of the LORD thy God in Horeb, in the day of the assembly, saying, Let me not hear again the voice of the LORD my God: neither let me see this great fire any more, that I die not.

17 And the LORD said unto me, They have well spoken that which they have spoken.

of his portion of the tithes, or the rent of houses in the cities allotted to that tribe, or any private property which he had acquired.—Some indeed suppose, that the priests exclusively are meant; because the expression, "minister in the name of the LORD" properly belongs to them; and because the Levites had no portions out of the sacrifices. But in performing their services at the tabernacle they ministered to the Lord, though as servants to the priests. (1 Sam. 2:18. 3:1.) And as the people were repeatedly enjoined to be liberal to them, they would doubtless, at the sanctuary, frequently share the peace-offerings, and all other oblations; except the holy things, of which none but the priests and their families might eat. (12:12, 18, 19. 14:29. 16:1.) Both priests and ordinary Levites indeed seem to be intended.

V. 12—13. The several terms here employed, must include every species of that superstition or idolatry, which consists in seeking such information or help from invisible beings, real or supposed, as cannot be obtained from God; or in establishing other rules of conduct than his precepts, explained by the sober use of our rational faculties. And we can expect no instruction or help from him except in the use of such means as are naturally efficacious, or in attending on his instituted ordinances. The translation itself, without criticising the original terms, indisputably proves that the venerable translators supposed all calculations of lucky or unlucky days for undertaking any enterprise, all attempts to charm away diseases by unmeaning observations, all amulets or spells by way of preservative, as well as every kind of fortune-telling, to be prohibited.—Not only would such practices be abominable in the Israelites; but they were so offensive, even in the Canaanites, as to form a chief cause of their dreadful extirpation: being all of them either human imposture, or diabolical delusion; and either way conducive to the gratification of that ambitious spirit, who aspires, in every form, to be the god and prince of this world. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 22:18. Lev. 18:21, 24-30. 19:26. 20:2-5.)

V. 13. Be perfect. That is, Be singly dependent on the Lord, and devoted to him. (Notes, Job 1:1. Matt. 5:43-48.)

V. 15—19. In order to counteract the temptation, to which the Israelites would be exposed, to imitate the Gentiles in the various arts of divination: the Lord gave them intimations, that he intended to afford them supernatural information, as far as profitable for them.—Many expositors, both Jewish and Christian, suppose that a succession of prophets, till the times of the Messiah, is intended in the promise. But if this be well grounded, (as the context may seem to give some countenance to it,) they must be considered as speaking by the Spirit of Christ, and as preparing the way for his coming; without which all the rest would by no means have been an adequate completion of it. This however is certain, that it is a prediction which has had its main accomplishment in our blessed Saviour. As the great Antitype, he resembled Moses more than any other prophet ever did; and with much greater exactness, than he did any of 18 I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him.

19 And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words, which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him.

20 But the prophet which shall presume to speak a word in my name which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die.

the prophets or typical persons mentioned in the Old Testament.—Born in the reign of a persecuting tyrant, his life was sought in his infancy, and wonderfully preserved whilst many other infants were destroyed. (Notes, Ex. 2: 2; Matt. 2: 1.) At the entrance of his work, he rejected the proposal of "the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them;" as Moses did the prospect of honour and affluence in Egypt; and preferred a suffering, poor, and despised life. (Notes, Matt. 4:8-11. Heb. 11:24-26.) He was opposed by those very persons, for whose sake he had thus voluntarily impoverished himself; yet, in the appointed time and manner, he accomplished the redemption of his people. (Note, Acts 7:30-36.) His meekness and patience far exceeded those by which Moses was distinguished. He united in one person the offices of Prophet, Priest, and King. His transfiguration reminds us of Moses's face shining when he came down from the mount. He feeds his people with the true manna, and gives them living water to drink. Many of his miracles resembled those of Moses; but especially his commanding the winds and waves, and walking upon the sea, remind us of the Red Sea divided at the word of Moses, that Israel might pass through. He was opposed by his brethren as well as by the people; and was especially objected to for espousing the Gentiles as his church. All the prophets and apostles spake as his delegates; even as all the former enforced the law of Moses: the whole Scripture is his word, and all ministers obtain their authority and receive their instructions from him. His knowledge of the Father, and his intimate fellowship with him, are unexampled and appropriate. His life was spent, and laid down, for the benefit of his people, and for their sins; and his resurrection precluded the exact knowledge of his sepulchre, and should have prevented the superstitious veneration for it. When he left his disciples he promised them another Teacher and Comforter, as Moses, before he left Israel, promised them a Prophet like unto himself. And it will most awfully be required of those who reject his salvation, who will not hearken to his instructions, or who refuse to have him to reign over them. (Notes, Acts 2:22, 23. 7:37-43.) But the grand point in which this resemblance calls for our attention, is that marked out to us in the sixteenth verse. Moses acted as mediator between God and Israel, when the people, appalled at the terrors of mount Sinai, said, "Let us not hear again the voice of the LORD our God, neither let us see this great fire any more, that we die not;" and when the LORD said, "They have well spoken that which they have spoken." (Notes, 5:22-29. Ex. 20:18-20.) Thereforth the LORD put his words into the mouth of Moses, through whose intervention they were instructed, in a manner more suited to their character and circumstances; and through whose intercession they were specially favoured as the people of God. But Christ is the "One Mediator between God and man." He was "raised up from the midst of his brethren;" yea, he assumed our nature for that very purpose. "No man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him." (Note, Matt. 11:27.) To these "it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven;" but to such as as refuse to hear him, "all things are spoken in parables." "No man cometh to the Father but by him:" for "he is able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him; seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." No one of Adam's fallen race can know God, or learn his truth and will, or approach him with comfort and acceptance, except through Christ; any more than Israel could have endured the revelation of God, and his words from Sinai's fiery top, without the typical mediation of Moses. This is unspeakably the most important resemblance, and so decided and unambiguous a divine declaration on this infinitely important subject, in this ancient book, is peculiarly worthy of observation.—In other things a lively fancy might trace some specious similitude between several prophets and Moses; but in this, none except Jesus Christ ever bore the most remote resemblance to him. At the same time this prediction was a plain intimation, that the dispensation of Moses, and the law which he gave, (except as coincident with the preceptive part of all divine revelation,) were to endure only for a time: for not only would prophets arise to enforce his law; but another Prophet also like to him, who, as a Lawgiver and Mediator, would introduce a new and more spiritual and permanent dispensation. (Notes, Heb. 7:11-17. 8:7-13.)

V. 20-22. These verses contain a clear prediction, that there should "also arise false prophets among the people," and at length deceivers pretending to be the promised Messiah; and they constitute a direct command to the rulers to punish them with death, as presumptuous transgressors of the divine law. If such impostors spake in the name of any other God than JEHOVAH, the case was clear, and no further proof of guilt was needful; and accordingly Elijah ordered the immediate execution of all Baal's prophets. (Note, 1 Kings 18:40.) If the pretended message from God was evidently contrary to the grand principles of the law, the case coincided with that before stated. (Note, 13:1-5.) If a man only exhorted the people to obey the commands of God, he certainly needed no other credentials: but if his message was doubtful in this respect; and being required to give some proof of his divine mission, he should declare that such or such an event would take place at a certain time, (as Moses had done repeatedly to Pharaoh,) and the event did not take place; the people might be sure he was a deceiver, and need not fear his denunciations.—When a prophet threatened judgments on the people for their sins, there was always an implied hope of mercy in case they repented: and in some instances, general promises of prosperity might be connected with the supposition of continued good behaviour. (Note, Jer. 18:7-10.) But when made absolute, and when the time was fixed, (as in Hananiah's prediction, Jer. 28:) the failure was full proof of imposture. The Jews, in demanding of our Lord a sign from heaven, after all the undeniable and beneficent miracles which he had performed, seem to have had this law in mind. But his doctrine perfectly accorded to the preceding Scriptures rightly understood; he appealed to the testimony of Moses and the prophets, as well as that of John the Baptist, in connexion with his own miracles; every thing in the preceding dispensations was suited to lead the impartial and pious mind to expect such a Messiah as he was, and such a change as he showed an intention to effect; and finally, it was foretold, that he should be put to death by the teachers and rulers of Israel: he would therefore give them no other sign than that of Jonah, which being answered in his death and resurrection on the third day, was in all respects perfectly satisfactory. (Notes, Matt. 12:38-42.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ministers of the gospel should, by a decent provision, be preserved from pressing temptations to entangle themselves with the affairs of this life, that they may be at leisure for their proper employment; and they are absolutely inexcusable, if covetousness, and other carnal principles, engage them in contentions, lawsuits, or selfish projects. (Note, 2 Tim. 2:3-7.)—We do nothing to good purpose, that we do not engage in "with all the desire of our mind." It is well when this influences us "to leave all for the sake of Christ, and the gospel." He will not suffer such disciples to "lose their reward;" and it is his appointment, that those ministers, who "labour most in the word and doctrine" should be best provided for. Yea, they who will do no more in God's service than man will pay them for, are not worthy of being called the ministers of Christ at all. (Note, Mal. 1:9-11.)—Christians are required simply to trust the Lord, and submit to him; and cannot want any information, security, or assistance, which he will not afford them: and the Lord their God not only doth not suffer them to do such things as he abhorred in the Canaanites, and will much more abhor in them; but he calls upon them to bear testimony against every evil work. We have a Prophet like unto Moses, but infinitely superior to show us the truth and will of God, the way of acceptance and of holiness; nay, to "show us the Father;" for "he hath seen him hath seen the Father;" "he dwelleth in the Father, and the Father in him." (Note, John 14:7-14.) Yet is he raised up from among his brethren, and dwells likewise in human nature. That view of God which he gives, will not terrify or overwhelm, but encourage us: he speaks with fraternal affection and divine authority conjoined. We then be to those who refuse to hearken to his voice, to accept of his salvation, or yield obedience to his sway. But

2 Thou shalt separate three cities for thee in the midst of thy land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee to possess it.

3 Thou shalt prepare thee a way, and divide the coasts of thy land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee to inherit, into three parts, that every slayer may flee thither.

4 And this is the case of the slayer which shall flee thither, that he may live: whose kill he his neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not in time past;

5 As when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the helve, and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die; he shall flee unto one of those cities and live:

6 Lest the avenger of the blood pursue the slayer, while his heart is hot, and overtake him, because the way is long, and slay him; whereas he was not worthy of death, inasmuch as he hated him not in time past.

7 Wherefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt separate three cities for thee.

8 And if the Lord thy God enlarge thy coast, as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, and give thee all the land which he promised to give unto thy fathers;

9 (If thou shalt keep all these commandments to do them, which I command thee this day, to love the Lord thy God, and to walk ever in his ways;) then shalt thou add three cities more for thee, beside these three:

10 That innocent blood be not shed in thy land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and so blood be upon thee.

11 But if any man hate his neighbour, and lie in wait for him, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally that he die, and flee into one of these cities;

12 Then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die.

13 Thine eye shall not pity him; but thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Israel, that it may go well with thee.

14 Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's land-mark, which they of old time have set in thine inheritance, which thou shalt inherit in the land that the Lord thy God giveth thee to possess it.

15 One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth: at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall the matter be established.

16 If a false witness rise up against any man, to testify against him that which is wrong;

17 Then both the men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the Lord, before the priests and the judges which shall be in those days.

18 And the judges shall make diligent inquisition: and, behold, if the witness be a false witness, and hath testified falsely against his brother;

19 Then shall ye do unto him, as he had thought to have done unto his brother: so shalt thou put away the evil from among you.

20 And those which remain shall hear, and fear, and shall henceforth commit no more any such evil among you.

21 And thine eye shall not pity; but life shalt go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIX. V. 2-10. (Notes and P. O. Num. 35:9-34. Josh. 20:) Three cities of refuge had already been allotted on the east of Jordan; (4:41-43.) and the other three were ordered to be set apart, as soon as the people were settled in the country west of Jordan: and in case their boundaries should in after ages be enlarged, three more were to be added. In selecting these cities they were commanded to be careful to proportion the distances, "that the way might not be too long" to some one of them, from any part of the land: and the way was also to be prepared; "that innocent blood should not be shed in their land," by the avenger of blood overtaking the unfortunate manslayer, before he arrived at a place of refuge.—The promise of still further enlarging the possessions of Israel, was conditional; and by their disobedience they so far forfeited it, that these additional cities of refuge seem never to have been appointed. The Jews flatter themselves with the expectation of a future accomplishment of these promises, when this addition will be made.

V. 11-13. Notes, Ex. 21:12-14. Num. 35:16-23.

V. 14. As landmarks constituted the customary method of distinguishing landed property in those days; removing them would be a crime among the Israelites, similar to forging, altering, destroying, or concealing the title-deeds of estates at this day; and it would occasion atrocious injustice, and make way for dispute and lawsuits. (Mar. Ref.)

V. 15-21. One witness was insufficient to prove a crime against any person; (Notes, 17:2-7. 1 Tim. 5:19, 20.) and if his evidence was suspected to be false, he would himself be liable to a prosecution. But as it might be difficult to decide such a cause, it must be referred to the supreme court: and if on strict inquiry he was found guilty, the law of retaliation must be adopted and strictly executed, as the impartial rule of the magistrates in punishing him, without yielding to pity; that the fatal effects of false and malicious testimony might be prevented. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In conveying instruction, familiar examples and illustrations, though taken from the most ordinary occupations or scenes of life, are of very great use, to give determinate ideas of the thing to be inculcated: and in laws especially, precision should be studied, that the distinction between the innocent and the guilty, and between a man's crime and his calamity, may be as plainly specified as it is possible. For whether the criminal escape unpunished, or the innocent suffer, injustice is committed; and in case of bloodshed, guilt is brought upon the land where it takes place. On such occasions compassion for the offender may become cruelty to numbers: it must therefore be moderated; or counteracted by the fear of God, the love of justice, and general benevolence. But to avoid the horrid crime of murder, we must watch and pray against the first emotions of hatred and anger: and to be preserved from injustice, we must beware of covetousness, which is wonderfully ingenious in devising such methods of defrauding as may escape detection, censure, or human punishment. (Notes, Ex. 26:13, 15, 17.)—Alas! what a reproach is it to the whole human species, that God himself forbids the testimony of any one man to be taken in things of consequence! Verily he judges all men to be liars, and none absolutely and in all cases to be trusted; which is not only a caution to judges and juries, but a reason for watchfulness and humiliation to us all.—Few crimes are more atrocious in their nature, pernicious in their effects, or affronting to God, than bearing false witness in matters of great importance; and with us especially, since it is always connected with perjury. It is greatly to be wished that it was more commonly and severely punished by man, according to this most excellent and equitable law; but it will assuredly meet with its due punishment from a righteous God! Let all Christians however be cautious not only in bearing public testimony, but also not to propagate private slanders; and let the battle, that the priest shall approach, and speak unto the people,

3 And shall say unto them, Hear, O Israel; Ye approach this day unto battle against your enemies; let not your hearts faint; fear not, and do not tremble, neither be ye terrified because of them:

5 ¶ And the officers shall speak unto the people, saying, What man is there that hath built a new house, and hath not dedicated it? let him go and return to his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man dedicate it.

6 And what man is he that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not yet eaten of it? let him also go and return unto his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man eat of it.

7 And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her? let him go and return unto his house, lest he die in battle, and another man take her.

8 And the officers shall speak further unto the people, and they shall say, What man is there that is fearful and faint-hearted? let him go and return unto his house, lest his brethren's heart faint as well as his heart.

9 And it shall be, when the officers have made an end of speaking unto the people, that they shall make captains of the armies to lead the people.

10 ¶ When thou comest nigh unto a city to fight against it, then proclaim peace unto it.

11 And it shall be, if it make thee answer of peace, and open unto thee, then it shall be, that all the people that is found therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and they shall serve thee.

those whose consciences accuse them of these or other crimes, without delay flee for refuge to the hope set before us in Jesus Christ.

NOTES.—CHAP. XX. V. 1-4. In all the wars which Israel waged according to the will of God, they might assuredly expect his special assistance. This should have been their only confidence; of this his former wonderful works were their assurance; and of these the priests were required to remind them for their encouragement. It is generally thought, that one of the most considerable of the priests always accompanied their armies, to perform the service there stated.

V. 5-9. The Israelites were accustomed to enter on their houses when finished, by making a cheerful feast for their friends; accompanied, as it seems reasonable to conclude, with a solemn act of devotion, by which their habitations were put under the immediate protection of God, and the blessings of his grace and peace were supplicated, that they might prove houses of harmony and piety. (Note, Ps. 30: title.)—It is probable that these regulations were not intended to take place in the first wars of Canaan, in which all who were able were required to enlist; but in those in which the nation might afterwards engage. They however contain a remarkable illustration of the Lord's condescension to all the allowable affections of human nature, and were calculated to compose armies constituted of persons whose minds were free from discomposure and dismay. Some suppose that the fearful were such as were intimidated by a guilty conscience; and thence infer that atrocious sinners are an encumbrance and a curse to armies, as well as churches. (239. Notes, Josh. 7:10-12. P. O. 10-15. Judg. 7:2, 3.) This is indeed very different from the principles of modern tactics, and the practice of modern statesmen and commanders.—However, until the cowards were dismissed, the subordinate officers must not be appointed.

V. 10-18. We must suppose, in the cases here intended, that the Israelites had some warrantable cause of levying war; which covetousness, ambition, and the thirst of dominion could not be. When, therefore, they had been injured or assaulted by any foreign nation, they were required to proceed in the manner here prescribed; for the Lord purposed by these means to enlarge their dominions, whilst they consumed unnecessary blood. There were doubtless various ways by 12 And if it will make no peace with thee, but will make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it.

13 And when the Lord thy God hath delivered it into thine hands, thou shalt smite every male thereof with the edge of the sword.

14 But the women and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof shalt thou take unto thyself; and thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which the Lord thy God hath given thee.

15 Thus shalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of these nations.

16 But of the cities of these people, which the Lord thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth:

17 But thou shalt utterly destroy them, namely, the Hittites and the Amorites, the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee:

18 That they teach you not to do after all their abominations, which they have done unto their gods; so should ye sin against the Lord your God.

19 ¶ When thou shalt besiege a city a long time, in making war against it to take it, thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof by forcing an axe against them: for thou mayest eat of them, and thou shalt not cut them down (for the tree of the field is man's life) to employ them in the siege.

20 Only the trees, which thou knowest that they be not trees for meat, thou shalt destroy, and cut them down; and thou shalt build bulwarks against the city that maketh war with thee, until it be subdued.

they were not only allowed, but, as it seems, commanded, to put to death all the males who were capable of resistance. The lives and property of all men are the Lord's, forfeited to his justice to be disposed of at his pleasure and for his glory. These regulations, however, are not the rule of our conduct, which must be directed by the general law of love; and that prohibits unnecessary bloodshed and plunder, in war as well as in peace.

—One reason of this severity might be, to shadow forth the fatal consequences of persisting in rebellion, and enmity against God, and in contempt of the proposal of peace and reconciliation set before men in the gospel.—Some are of opinion that no terms of peace might, in any case whatever, be offered or allowed to the devoted inhabitants of Canaan; because their measure of wickedness was filled up, and they would be a constant temptation to the Israelites: but we shall meet with events in the course of this history, which will not easily comport with the absolute interpretation. (Notes, Josh. 2:8-16. 6; 22:23. 9; 11:19, 20.) Others, therefore, suppose the meaning to be, that in case the Canaanites rejected peace and servitude, this entire extirpation was to take place: whereas only the grown males were to be put to death, in other cities, in similar circumstances; and the rest of the inhabitants reduced to subjection, as tributaries under the rulers of Israel, but not to personal slavery.—The Jewish writers assert that they might not be spared unless they renounced idolatry: but this would introduce a law enacting persecution, which is nowhere to be found in Scripture, nor any thing like one. The Canaanites, as condemned criminals, were ordered for execution; and it is doubtful, whether peace were to be offered them on any terms; and idolatrous Israelites were to be capitally punished: but the nation had no commission to use the sword in propagating religion; though some Christian writers express themselves as if they had.

V. 19, 20. The original words rendered "for the tree of the field is man's life," are variously interpreted; (marg.) but our translation probably gives the true meaning. The instruction evidently is, that the Israelites should not make unnecessary waste of things useful to man's life, as fruit-trees were; and therefore in sieges they should form their machines of timber-trees only.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

War is an express appeal to the righteous Governor of the world, and should be undertaken and conducted upon such 2 Then thy elders and thy judges shall come forth, and they shall measure unto the cities which are round about him that is slain.

3 And it shall be, that the city which is next unto the slain man, even the elders of that city shall take an heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke.

4 And the elders of that city shall bring down the heifer unto a rough valley which is neither eared nor sown, and shall strike off the heifer's neck there in the valley:

5 And the priests the sons of Levi shall come near: for them the LORD thy God hath chosen to minister unto him, and to bless in the name of the LORD, and by their word shall every controversy and every stroke be tried;

6 And all the elders of that city, that are next unto the slain man shall wash their hands over the heifer that is beheaded in the valley.

11 And seest among the captives a beautiful woman, and hast a desire unto her, that thou wouldest have her to thy wife;

12 Then thou shalt bring her home to thine house, and she shall shave her head and pare her nails;

13 And she shall put the raiment of her captivity from off her, and shall remain in thine house, and bewail her father and her mother a full month: and after that thou shalt go in unto her, and be her husband, and she shall be thy wife.

14 And it shall be, if thou have no delight in her, then thou shalt let her go whither she will; but thou shalt not sell her at all for money, thou shalt not make merchandise of her, because thou hast humbled her.

principles, and such only, as he approves. When the cause warrants this awful appeal, our confidence should be placed, not in chariots and horses, not in fleets and armies, not in experienced commanders and brave soldiers, but in the Lord of hosts himself.—Though the faithful ministers of religion are generally slighted by those who "jeopardy their lives in the high places of the field:" yet in reality none so much want their instructions, counsels, and prayers, both individually, and with respect to the common cause. Nor is any valour rational, but that which springs from faith, a good conscience, a sense of duty, reliance on God, and a hope of heaven: for he who neither "fears those who kill the body, nor him who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell," is not valiant, but absolutely mad.—In war itself, justice and the love of peace should dictate every measure: the voice of humanity should be heard distinctly, even in the noise of battle; and wanton cruelty or waste should never sully the soldier's reputation.—Yet in all cases and with every possible mitigation, the horrors of war must, when reflected upon, give pain to the feeling heart: and can only be considered as evidences of the depravity of man, and the power and malice of Satan; and of the just vengeance of God, who thus scourges a guilty world. May he hasten the time when "swords shall be beaten into ploughshares, and men shall learn war no more!"—But how dreadful is the case of those, who are engaged in unequal contest with their Maker, who refuse his proposals of peace, and who will not submit to be his servants and render him the easy tribute of worship and praise, and subjection to his easy yoke, and kind commandments! Inevitable ruin awaits them. May we follow peace with God and man; and wage war against our lusts and the powers of darkness, with undaunted courage and unrelenting severity. In this contest, neither the number nor power of our enemies should dismay us; nay, our own weakness should not cause us to tremble or faint: for the Lord himself will fight for us, and save us; and all his wonders wrought for his church ensure our victory. But none can fight this good fight, whose hearts are inordinately attached to worldly objects, or who are afraid of the cross, or the conflict; for they will themselves desert, and discourage others. Above all, ministers should be valiant in the cause, and by their example, as well as exhortations, animate the people for the contest. Finally, whilst we show no mercy to any sin, and will have no friendship with any tempter; let us show a spirit of peace, forgiveness, and benevolence towards all mankind.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXI. V. 1-9. This law was enacted to increase the horror of murder, and to promote the detection of the criminal, by a public and solemn transaction, under the management of the magistrates of the nearest city, associated with the priests; by putting numbers upon inquiry; by calling upon every one to clear himself; and by warning all men not to conceal the criminal.—The "heifer which had not drawn in the yoke," represented the murderer, the son of Belial, who refused to bear the yoke of God's law; and the "rough valley" might denote the worthlessness of the criminal's character, or the disagreeableness of the transaction. "Striking off the neck of the heifer," not by the priests but by the elders, expressed the desert of the criminal, and their readiness thus to punish him if they could detect him. "Washing their hands," was an external sign of the protestation of innocence and ignorance concerning the murder, which they were required to make: (Note, Matt. 27:24, 25), the prayer, which the priests are supposed to have added, strongly declared that murder contaminates, and leaves guilt upon every land and every person, that does not endeavour by all proper means to bring the criminal to condign punishment: (Note, Num. 35:31-34.) and the whole shadowed forth the atonement and intercession of Christ, through which iniquity is pardoned by a merciful God to his redeemed people.

V. 10-14. The case here regulated would inevitably take place on some occasions: and this statute implies no approbation of an Israelite's marrying a heathen captive, induced merely by her beauty; especially as it does not exclude the case of those who were previously married. If, however, a man became enamoured of his captive, he was not allowed to use force or authority to gratify his inclination, or to proceed with precipitation; but to take time for reflection. (Note, Num. 31:14-18.) By taking the captive into the house, and there keeping her retired, her disposition would be discovered more easily, and if that proved disagreeable, the passion might abate. The becoming attire and ornaments, in which she might be taken captive, being changed for the mean habit of a mourner, might tend to diminish her attractions. "Shaving her head" would certainly have this effect; and the words rendered paring her nails, seem rather to mean, letting them grow. Some, however, think she was in this interim to be instructed in the law; and that these were external tokens of her renouncing idolatry and embracing the religion of Israel. Her grief also for the death of her parents if slain, or for her separation from them would subside, and her mind be more reconciled to her condition; and if at last the Israelite continued in the same mind, he might marry her.—But in case he humbled her, and afterwards did not choose to continue her as his wife, he must not keep her as a slave, or sell her, but must give her her liberty, and act towards her according to the regulations made concerning women when divorced by their husbands. (Notes, 24:1-4.) All these circumstances would help to increase the caution of the Israelites, and tend to prevent them from rashly entering into these improper connexions.

V. 15-17. This law does not appear exclusively to apply to the case of polygamy, but to him also who had two wives in succession. In either case, the double portion, which according to custom was allotted to the heir, must be given 17 But he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the first-born, *by giving him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the beginning of his strength; the right of the first-born is his.

18 ¶ If a man have a stubborn and rebellious son, which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and that, when they have chastened him, will not hearken unto them;

19 Then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him, and bring him out unto the elders of his city, and unto the gate of his place:

20 And they shall say unto the elders of his city, This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice; he is a glutton and a drunkard.

21 And all the men of his city shall stone him with stones that he die: so shalt thou put evil away from among you; and all Israel shall hear, and fear.

22 ¶ And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be to be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree;

23 His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day; (for he that is hanged is accursed of God;) that thy land be not defiled, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

to the eldest son, though not the son of the best beloved wife; which would counteract the effect of unjust and unreasonable partialities, and be a sort of compensation to her who had the misfortune to be comparatively slighted and hated. (Notes, Gen. 29:30-35. 49:3, 4. 1 Chr. 5:1, 2.)

V. 18-21. This law has great wisdom and mercy couched under its apparent severity; and it could not fail of producing most salutary effects, as far as any regard was paid to it. The parents were the only prosecutors; both must concur in the prosecution, and the elders of the city must decide the cause. The prosecution could not be admitted, but for stubbornness and rebellion, connected with gluttony and drunkenness, and persisted in after rebukes and corrections; and these vices tended directly to ruin families and communities. The offender must be convicted, and proved incorrigible, by evidence sufficient to induce the judges to denounce sentence, and the men of the city to execute it. Natural affection would seldom be so overcome, even by the basest crimes, as to admit both parents thus to join in prosecuting a son, much less to do so without sufficient cause; and in the very few instances, in which hasty rage, or implacable resentment might induce parents to attempt such a horrid, unnatural murder, as a needless prosecution must imply; the most effectual precautions were taken to prevent the consequences. The execution of the law must of course very seldom take place; and if ever it did, it could not fail to excite general attention and alarm, and prove a salutary warning to tens of thousands.—Its very existence, as far as known, would exceedingly strengthen the authority of parents; give weight to their commands, reproofs, and corrections; and create an additional fear of provoking their deep resentment. It would fortify young men against the enticements of bad companions, and the force of strong temptations, and thus check the progress of wickedness. Moreover, it would be a constant admonition to parents to watch over their children, and not improperly to indulge them, or withhold correction; but to establish their authority over them while young, to pray for them, to check the first budgings of vice, and to set them a good example. This statute therefore, so harmless and beneficial in its operation, yet so contrary to human policy, rather proves than invalidates the divine authority of the book in which it stands recorded.—No impostor would ever have thought of enacting such a law.

V. 22, 23. The Israelites did not execute criminals by strangulation, as among us, or by crucifixion; yet after they were dead, in detestation to their crimes, their bodies were sometimes ignominiously suspended, or gibbeted, on a tree, or piece of wood. But in honour of human nature, (at first formed after the image of God, afterwards made the Temple in which "all the fulness of the Godhead dwells," and hereafter in innumerable instances to partake of a glorious resurrection;) the body of an Israelite might not hang all night in this situation, whatever his crimes had been; as that would even defile the land. (Notes, Josh. 8:29. 2 Sam. 21:9-14. John 19:31-37.) In the current opinion, they who were thus suspended, were deemed accursed of God, and devoted to utter destruction; but the Holy Spirit doubtless dictated this expression with reference to him who "was made a curse for us." (Note, Gal. 3:10-14.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Those laws are framed most wisely, which have the most effectual tendency to prevent crimes and punishments; and by this rule let the reader judge of the laws before us, compared with the municipal laws of other countries. For whatever can increase our horror of enormous wickedness, or cause the conscience to recoil at the thought of it, must counteract the violence of the passions and the force of temptations, and excite watchfulness against the occasions and inlets to disobedience. The dread of murder should especially be deeply impressed on every heart: and in detecting and punishing all who in any form are guilty of it, magistrates, ministers, old and young, ought to concur; and that man should be adjudged a public enemy, not only who is accessory to the commission of this crime, but who assists the criminal in eluding or escaping justice, by which the guilt of innocent blood rests upon the land.—But alas! all that most of us can do, in preventing the increase of this national guilt, is by our earnest prayers.—Reason and religion, with combined force forbid us to lay the reins upon the neck of our headstrong lusts, and command us to teach our strongest inclinations to brook denial or delay, and to view the objects of our inordinate affections, as strip of all their adventitious charms, and with all their defects and deformities, in order to abate the vehemence of passion. Considering things thus coolly, we may, perhaps before it be too late, have our admiration change into disgust, and many fatal consequences may be prevented. But inhumanity, treachery, and injustice, can in no case be palliated or excused, though called by soft names, and varnished over with plausible pretences.—Irregular indulgences frequently end in dislike and ill-treatment of the very object that was inordinately loved; thus, instead of compensation for an injury, (for which indeed no adequate compensation can be rendered,) more injuries are committed.—The Lord will plead the cause of the oppressed, and will not allow that injustice should be done to anyone, either from partiality or covetousness. And let it not be passed over slightly, that great iniquity is frequently committed by men, in disposing of their substance by will; and sometimes this forms the last action of their lives.—Disobedience to parental authority must be extremely criminal, when so severe a punishment of it was denounced by God himself; nor is it less provoking to him now, though it generally escapes punishment in this world.—But when young people early become slaves to their appetites, the heart soon grows hard, and the conscience callous, and we can expect no other: than obstinate rebellion and utter destruction. They who would escape ruin, must flee youthful lusts, listen to the instructions of their parents, and submit to reproof and correction; and if parents would not have their children their greatest sorrow, they should "train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—What then do we deserve for our rebellion against "the Father of our spirits?" We were indeed under an awful curse; but Christ hath purchased redemption by becoming a curse for us; yet, whilst we continue in sin, no benefit will thence accrue to us; but rather our condemnation will thus be aggravated. Let us then fear adding obstinacy to rebellion; and let us remember, that though the human body after death ought not to be treated with degradation by man; yet God will doom both the bodies and souls of the wicked, "to depart accursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels;" while "the righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

NOTES.—CHAP. XXII. V. 1-4. (Note, Ex. 23:4, 5.) The nature of the case here leads us to understand by brother, any human being; as our Lord explains the word neighbour. When the owner of lost goods is not known, the finder at least knows that they are not his; nor can be, unless after diligent search and waiting no owner can be found.

V. 5. The prohibition no doubt was intended to exclude the customs of the heathen worshippers, who shamefully violated it for the worst of purposes; yet it is of mortal tendency, and of general obligation; as it is added, "for all that do so are an abomination unto the LORD," which is never annexed to a merely ceremonial institution. The practice prohibited is not only indecent and of bad appearance, but has in all ages been made subservient to lewdness, and to until thy brother seek after it, and 'thou shalt restore it to him again.

3 In like manner shalt thou do with his ass, and so shalt thou do with his raiment; and with all ~~lost~~ things of thy brother's, which he hath lost, and thou hast found, shalt thou do likewise: thou mayest not hide thyself.

4 Thou shalt not see thy brother's ass or his ox fall down by the way, and hide thyself from them; 'thou shalt surely help him to lift them up again.

5 ¶ The *woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for all that do so are ~~fabomin~~ation unto the Lord thy God.

6 If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, in any tree, or on the ground, whether they be young ones, or eggs, and the dam sitting upon the young, or upon the eggs, 'thou shalt not take the dam with the young:

7 But thou shalt, in any wise, let the dam go, and take the young to thee: 'that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days.

8 When thou buildest a new house, 'then thou shalt make a battlement for 'thy roof, that 'thou bring not blood upon thine house, if any man fall from thence.

9 Thou 'shalt not sow thy vineyard with diverse seeds; lest the 'fruit of thy seed which thou hast sown, and the fruit of thy vineyard, be defiled.

10 Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together.

11 Thou shalt not wear a garment of diverse sorts, as of woollen and linen together.

12 Thou shalt make thee "fringes upon the four 'quarters of thy vesture, wherewith thou coverest thyself.

13 ¶ If any man take a wife, and "go in unto her, and hate her,

14 And give 'occasions of speech against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and when I came to her, I found her not a maid:

15 Then shall the father of the damsel and her mother take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity, unto the elders of the city in the gate:

16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her;

17 And lo, he hath given occasions of speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity: and they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city.

18 And the elders of that city shall take that man, and chastise him;

19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel, and she shall be his wife: 'phe may not put her away all his days.

20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel;

21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall 'stone her with stones that she die; because 'she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: 'so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

22 ¶ If 'a man be found lying with a woman married to an husband, then they shall both of them die, both the man that lay with the woman, and the woman. So shalt thou put away evil from Israel.

23 If a damsel that is a virgin be 'betrothed unto an husband, and a man find her in the city, and lie with her:

24 Then ye shall bring them both out unto the gate of that city, and ye shall stone them with stones that they die; the damsel, because she cried not, being in the city; and the man, because he hath humbled his neighbour's *wife: 'so thou shalt put away evil from among you.

25 But if a man find a betrothed damsel in the field, and the man 'force her, and lie with her; then the man only that lay with her shall die:

26 But unto the damsel thou shalt do nothing; there is in the damsel 'no sin worthy of death: for as when a man riseth against his neighbour, and slayeth him, even so is this matter:

27 For he found her in the field, and the betrothed damsel 'cried, and there was none to save her.

28 If a man find 'a damsel that is a virgin, which is not betrothed, and lay hold on her, and lie with her, and they be found;

29 Then the man that lay with her, shall give unto the damsel's father fifty shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife; 'because he hath humbled her, he may not put her away all his days.

30 A 'man shall not take his father's wife, nor 'discover his father's skirt.

obtain opportunities of perpetrating the grossest crimes; to prevent which it is of great importance, that the distinction of the sexes should be visibly marked in their garments, without variation.—Let stage-players and others of similar occupations well consider, (among many other and great evils connected with their line of life,) how they will answer to God, for their continual violation of this express commandment. And they who encourage and reward them for this disobedience, should ask themselves how far they are accessories to their guilt: and let young people remember that this change of apparel is not to be considered as a frolic, but as an act of rebellion against God.—The spirit of the commandment also requires the distinction of the appearance, deportment, and occupations of the sexes. A man appearing effeminate, and affecting the appropriate employments of women; and a woman of a masculine appearance and behaviour, who engages in the exercises of men; are unnatural and offensive characters. (Note 1 Cor. 11:2—16.)

V. 6, 7. The design of this law might be to enjoin the exercise of tenderness and compassion, and to prevent the destruction of any species of animals. But perhaps some of these requirements were intended for tests, by which it would be proved, whether the people would prefer the will of God to their own inclination, when the reason of the command was not obvious. (Note, Gen. 2:16, 17.)

V. 8. The roofs of the houses in those countries were generally flat, and used for various purposes, as may be seen by consulting the marginal references. If therefore no battlement were made, the builder would fail of taking proper precautions, and might occasion the death of some person who chanced to fall from it; and this would in a measure render him guilty, and his house defiled. (Notes, Ex. 21:28—36.)

V. 9—12. Marg. Ref. Notes. Lev. 19:19. Num. 15:38—40.)

V. 13—21. This law, like many others, was intended to prevent wickedness, by the fear of detection and punishment. The dread of a future discovery, productive of such tremendous consequences, could not fail to increase the natural barriers of chastity, and counteract the effects of sinful passions and strong temptations, among the young women of Israel. And it would also prevent a hard-hearted husband from robbing his injured wife of her reputation, when his affections were transferred to another object. The imposition practised by a woman upon the man she married, was considered in this case as equivalent to infidelity to his bed after marriage.

V. 23—27. In these laws, the betrothed damsel was considered as the wife of the man to whom she was engaged, though they had not come together; and therefore the crime was adjudged adultery. (Notes, Matt. 1:18—21.) But a charitable supposition is admitted in the damsel's favour, in case she was found in a solitary place. (24. Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If we duly regarded the golden rule of "doing to others as we would they should do unto us," many particular precepts of God's word might be omitted. Equity and benevolence would teach us, not to regard trouble and expense in doing a kind action to our neighbour; and would remind us, that we can have no property in any thing that is found, so long as there is a probability of discovering the owner. If a merciful man would assist another's beast that was fallen down, much more should we should we hasten to the relief of a brother, who is fallen into distress or poverty: and above all we should be ready to restore in the spirit of meekness, him who has been overcome by temptation, and has fallen into sin; conscious that we may soon want the same gentleness and assistance.—If we would approve ourselves to be the peculiar people of God, we must have respect to his will and glory, and not to the vain fashions of the world. Even in putting on our garments, as well as in eating and drinking, all must be done with a serious regard to the preservation of our own and others' purity in heart and action; that our garb may testify whose servants we are, and remind us what our conduct ought to be. (Notes, Rom. 12:1-2, 1 Cor. 10:29-33, Col. 3:16, 17, 1 Tim. 2:8-10.) Our obedience should also be universal, and not only to the weightier, but even to the minuter matters of the law, that it may be well with us. Yea, our eye should be single, our heart simple, and our behaviour in all things consistent.—The violation of chastity, being so great a wickedness, and in females especially of such fatal consequences; how cautious should they be what company they keep, what places they frequent, to what language they listen, what books they read, and into what situations they venture! Indeed both men and women should seriously and daily meditate on God's abhorrence of unchastity; on the certain detection and punishment of the wicked in a future state, and the fatal effects which will probably follow in this world: that their minds may be fortified against temptation, by a dread of sin and of its consequences. How carefully should parents keep out of the sight and way of their children, whatever can pollute their imaginations or inflame their passions! and how should all join in execrating those wretches, who wantonly bring ruin upon their fellow-creatures for the sake of gratifying a mean sensual inclination! Nor is the cruelty of those much less to be abhorred, who rob the innocent of their reputation by infamous slanders, from malice or any other base passion.—We should never forget the peculiar atrociousness of adultery in every form, and the punishment which awaits those who are guilty of it. We may also recollect, that all deception in contracting marriage is both very wicked, and a source of future misery; that the nearer we stand related to God, the more inexcusable are our crimes, "folly in Israel" being worse than elsewhere; and that the most favourable construction should be put on doubtful actions, and a discrimination made between different degrees of criminality. Finally, our purity should be dearer to us than our life; and our cry to God for help in temptation should be no less earnest, than the cry of a person in danger of being murdered. When we thus call upon him, he is ever near and ready to assist us, and his grace will be always sufficient for us.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIII. V. 1. It is evident that this law was not meant to exclude mutilated Israelites, either from the common benefits of civil society, or any essential religious advantages; but merely to lay them under a disgraceful distinction. This would tend to discourage parents from thus mutilating their children; a practice which was exceedingly common in those ages and countries. To this they might often be induced by the custom which prevailed, of employing eunuchs in the houses of the great and the courts of princes: so that they often rose to the highest posts of honour and authority. (Notes, 2 Kings 20:17, 18. Dan. 1:3-7.) Some expositors therefore consider the phrase, "shall not enter into the congregation of the LORD," as meaning, that they should be incapable of bearing any office in that government, which was placed over the people of God, who must thus enter a protest against this custom, and deliver selfish parents from this temptation. But others think that the persons intended might not enter the inner court of the sanctuary, or join in celebrating the sacred feasts, as in full communion with the congregation of the LORD; but must be contented to worship

4 "Because they met you not" with bread and with water in the way, when ye came forth out of Egypt; and "because they hired against thee Balaam the son of Beor, of Pethor of Mesopotamia, to curse thee.

7 Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite; for "he is thy brother: thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian; "because thou wast a stranger in his land.

without it, as uncircumcised Gentiles were allowed to do. Indeed it is probable that the exclusion related to both these particulars: for, as the blemished priests might not officiate at the altar, it is reasonable to conclude, that the blemished Israelite must neither enter the inner court of the sanctuary, nor fill up any public office in the congregation; in order that the people and ordinances of God might be preserved in purity and honour.

V. 2. The word "bastard" must be understood according to the judicial law, which does not regard the children of a concubine, when owned by the father as spurious; but only those which sprang from such connexions as were expressly prohibited with an annexed penalty, and who would therefore be often disowned and always disgraceful; or the offspring of harlots, whose fathers were not known. The exclusion of such persons, and their posterity, from the court of the sanctuary, and from public offices, would not be a hardship on them, worthy to be put in competition with the advantage arising from the tendency of this law, to restrain men from such practices as would disgrace their offspring from age to age.—Some expositors, especially the Jewish, suppose that by "not entering into the congregation of the LORD" we should understand, not marrying an Israelitish woman; but, as the bastards, being Israelites, were forbidden to intermarry with the Gentiles, this interpretation would leave them scarcely any opportunity of marrying; which the mention of their posterity supposes them to do. For the allowance to marry Hebrew slaves, or proselyted Gentile slaves, seems only made to avoid the difficulty; and the distinction has no foundation in Scripture: for Hebrew slaves, and gentiles when fully proselyted, were a part of the congregation of the LORD, and admissible to all sacred ordinances; with only the exception made in the next verses.

V. 3-5. It is supposed that the Ammonites were the more criminal, in refusing to assist the Israelites; though nothing is recorded concerning it: as the Moabites were in hiring Balaam to curse them. They were both descended from an incestuous connexion: (Note, Gen. 19:31-38.) yet that is not here mentioned, but merely their enmity to Israel. It was therefore settled by a perpetual ordinance "for ever," that the descendants of an Ammonite or Moabite, who had been proselyted, should not enter into the congregation to the tenth generation: and some interpret this to mean, that their posterity must never be admitted. (Note, Neh. 13:1-3.)—As Ruth the Moabitess was married to Boaz, and from her David and the kings of his race descended; it has been thought that the law only related to males, and not to females: of this however no sufficient proof seems to be given. It does not appear that intermarriages were particularly intended; and the conduct of Boaz, being required by another law, was not faulty: (Note, Ruth 4:1-8.) perhaps the excellent character of Ruth might be supposed to except her and her posterity from the general rule; and in respect to David and the kings of his line, they were not chosen by Israel, but appointed by God himself. Had the law been intended to prohibit intermarriages with the several persons mentioned, no doubt that would have been expressly stated: as it is, when intermarriages with the Canaanites and other idolaters are forbidden.

V. 6. This did not prohibit the Israelites from showing kindness to individuals among the Moabites and Ammonites, especially when proselyted; much less did it allow them to make war on them without reason, or to refuse them terms of peace: but it merely forbade them to enter into any strict alliance with the nations so long as they existed, or intimate connexions with individuals while they continued idolaters. This was the more requisite, as that part of Israel, which dwelt east of Jordan, bordered upon the Ammonites and Moabites, and they were continually liable to be seduced or injured by them.

V. 7, 8. The Edomites were more nearly related to Israel, than the Moabites and Ammonites were; and therefore, though they had in some degree seen unfriendly, they must 12 Thou shalt have a place also without the camp, whither thou shalt go forth abroad.

13 And thou shalt have a paddle upon thy weapon: and it shall be when thou wilt ease thyself abroad, thou shalt dig therewith, and shalt turn back, and cover that which cometh from thee:

14 For the LORD thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee: therefore shall thy camp be holy, that he see no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee.

15 ¶ Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant which is escaped from his master unto thee:

16 He shall dwell with thee, even among you, in that place which he shall choose, in one of thy gates where it liketh him best: thou shalt not oppress him.

17 ¶ There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, nor a sodomite of the sons of Israel.

be regarded more favourably, and not shunned and excluded from them, as the nations before mentioned. And as the Israelites had, at first in their extreme distress, been hospitably entertained in Egypt; they were required to forgive the subsequent oppression which they had suffered, and to requite the preceding kindness: so that the descendants of a proselyte, either of Edom or Egypt, in the third generation must be allowed to become entitled to all the privileges of a native Israelite.

V. 9-14. These precepts not only related to the camp of Israel, previously to their conquest of the promised land, and settlement in it; but at all times when they went forth to fight their enemies. They were first reminded to use vigorous measures for reformation, and to pay a strict attention to their ceremonial purifications; (Notes, Lev. 15:) and then not to forget a due regard to natural cleanliness, not only from decency and for health's sake, but from respect to that God of purity, who, as it were, headed their armies and encamped among them; and also as an emblem of their inward purity.

V. 15, 16. We cannot suppose, that this law required the Israelites to entertain slaves, who had robbed their masters, or left their service without cause; but such only as were cruelly treated, and fled to them for protection, especially from the neighbouring nations. (Marg. Ref.) To such they were commanded to afford shelter and show great kindness; both in order to recommend their religion, and to give them an opportunity of learning it.

V. 17, 18. The magistrate was commanded not to connive at, (much less to license,) houses of prostitution and uncleanness; and not to allow any person openly to carry on the infamous trade of a prostitute or sodomite, but to expel and extirpate such nuisances to the uttermost.—The words used denote persons dedicated, or consecrated, that is, to the basest kinds of lewdness; according to the infamous licentiousness and unnatural vices of an openly perpetrated at the temples of idolaters, from which much of the gains of the priests and priestesses arose. For neither in this, nor any other place, where the word sodomite is used in our translation, is there, in the original, any allusion to Sodom, or its inhabitants. (Marg. Ref., x Heb.)—The priests must not receive any oblations or sacrifices brought by persons of such vile characters: for God would not accept them; though they should attempt to cloak their wickedness, or compensate for it, by making and performing religious vows. (Prov. 7:14.) If the price of a dog be understood literally, not only the meanness of the animals, but their greediness, and resemblance of shamelessly lewd persons, should be considered as the reason of the restriction, and the extraordinary association. (Marg. Ref.) Many, however, understand it of the hire of unnatural crimes: yet figurative language seems hardly admissible in statutes.

V. 21-23. Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 28:20-22. Num. 30:2. Ez. 5:4-7

18 Thou shalt not bring the hire of a whore, or the price of a dog, into the house of the LORD thy God for any vow: for even both these are abomination unto the LORD thy God.

19 ¶ Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother: usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of any thing that is lent upon usury.

20 Unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury, but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury; that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all that thou settest thine hand to, in the land whither thou goest to possess it.

21 ¶ When thou shalt vow a vow unto the LORD thy God, thou shalt not slack to pay it: for the LORD thy God will surely require it of thee; and it would be sin in thee.

22 But if thou shalt forbear to vow, it shall be no sin in thee.

23 ¶ That which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt keep and perform; even a free-will-offering, according as thou hast vowed unto the LORD thy God, which thou hast promised with thy mouth.

24 ¶ When thou comest into thy neighbour's vineyard, then thou mayest eat grapes thy fill, at thine own pleasure; but thou shalt not put any in thy vessel.

25 ¶ When thou comest into the standing corn of thy neighbour, then thou mayest pluck the ears with thine hand: but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbour's standing corn.

V. 24, 25. This law was a valuable kindness to the labourer, the poor, the widow, and the traveller; it was a pledge to the Israelites of the fruitfulness of the land, whilst they continued obedient; it inculcated liberality, and at the same time instructed them not to encroach upon each other.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We ought to value the privileges of the Lord's people, both for ourselves and for our children, above all other advantages; and should carefully avoid whatever may throw a hindrance in the way of their possessing them. No personal blemishes, no crimes of progenitors, no difference of nations, can exclude us from these blessings: but an unsound heart will deprive us of them; and a bad example, an improper education, and even unsuitable marriages, may occasion the loss of them to our children.—The conduct of God, as the righteous Governor of the universe, is not recorded for the imitation of private persons; but all men ought to follow the example of his patience, lenity, readiness to forgive, and kindness to his enemies.

Nor should we ever forget how he turns the curses of opposers into blessings, in behalf of those whom he loves, and teaches to love him.—The more imminent and evident the danger we are exposed to, the greater should be our watchfulness, diligence, in self-examination, and earnestness in prayer for forgiveness, peace with God, and protection from him: and the scourge of war should remind the governors of kingdoms, and the commanders of armies, to exert themselves for reformation, and an attendance upon the ordinances of God. Nor can the help of the Lord be warrantably depended on by societies, or by individuals, while iniquity is indulged and connived at.—No natural filthiness is so loathsome to our senses, as the uncleanness of the heart is offensive to a holy God: in vain therefore do men, by pompous forms of godliness, costly oblations, or multiplied acts of showy beneficence, strive to compensate for their iniquity, while they indulge unlawful inclinations. Such services are an attempt to bribe the Judge of the earth to "acquit the wicked;" but he abhors the blasphemous endeavour. It is the bounden duty of legislators and magistrates, to do all in their power, to prevent, to repress, and extirpate, the recesses of licentiousness here forbidden; and surely immensely more might be done, than is so much as attempted in Christian countries, or in this land, and its great cities: but whether they can or cannot banish such pernicious criminals, God will exclude for ever from the holy city, and shut up for ever in the lake of fire, all who persist in or encourage them.—The people of God must also keep at a distance from cruelty and oppression: and ever be ready to patronise the cause of the oppressed. Fidelity to their engagements, and liberality without grudging to all around them, should mark their characters; for God is able to make all sufficiency to abound towards them: and at the same time they should be the last persons to encroach upon others. In fine, temperance, chastity, purity, equity, mercy, and truth, are the necessary fruits of

CHAPTER XXIV.

The law of divorces, 1-4. Newly married men exempted for one year from war and public services, 5. Laws for the punishment of men-stealers; concerning pledges, and the separation of lepers, 6-13. The hire of servants not to be detained, 14, 15. Parents and children not punishable for each other's crimes, 16. Justice must be done to the friendless, 17, 18. Liberal dealings to be left for the poor, 19-22.

WHEN a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her; then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house.

2 And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife.

3 And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and giveth it in her hand, and sendeth her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife:

4 Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the LORD: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

5 ¶ When a man hath taken a new wife, he shall not go out to war, neither shall he be charged with any business, but he shall be free at home one year, and shall cheer up his wife which he hath taken.

6 ¶ No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge: for he taketh a man's life to pledge.

7 If a man be found stealing any of his brethren of the children of Israel, and maketh merchandise of him, or selleth him; then that thief shall die, and thou shalt put evil away from among you.

8 ¶ Take heed in the plague of leprosy, that thou observe diligently and do according to all that the priests the Levites shall teach you: as I commanded them, so ye shall observe to do.

9 Remember what the LORD thy God did unto Miriam by the way, after that ye were come forth out of Egypt.

10 ¶ When thou dost lend thy brother any thing, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge.

11 Thou shalt stand abroad; and the man, to whom thou dost lend, shall bring out the pledge abroad unto thee.

12 And if the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge.

13 In any case thou shalt deliver him the pledge again when the sun goeth down, that he may sleep in his own raiment, and bless thee; and it shall be righteousness unto thee before the LORD thy God.

14 Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy strangers that are in thy land within thy gates:

15 At this day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it; for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it; lest he cry against thee unto the LORD, and it be sin unto thee.

that spirit, which dwells in all the true disciples of Jesus Christ.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIV. V. 1-4. Divorces were always a deviation from the original institution of marriage, consequent upon man's depravity as a fallen creature, arising from the inconstancy of his mind and the impetuosity of his passions. This customary device God did not please, in the judicial law, the magistrate's rule, totally to prohibit; lest it should occasion the cruel treatment, or even the murder, of those women, who were become disagreeable to their husbands.

The uncleanness, on account of which the Israelites were "suffered, for the hardness of their hearts, to put away their wives," was not adultery, or any suspicion of it; for both these cases were otherwise provided against: (22:22. Lev. 20:10. Notes, Num. 5:12-31.) but some ceremonial uncleanness, or diseases, or some natural or moral objection which formed a real grievance.—In the days of Christ, the Jewish teachers, having construed the permission into a commandment, extended it to the most frivolous matters; so that a licentious mind could not desire more allowance. Hence divorces prevailed to the disuse of polygamy, and to the still greater hard-ship of the women, who were sent away, one after another, under colour of this law, on various pretexts, to make way for a new object of the roving affections. This accounts for the discourses of Christ being more explicitly against divorces; though the reason of them equally determines against polygamy; "for from the beginning it was not so." Notes, Matt. 5:31, 32. 19:3-9. Mark 10:2-12.)—But whilst divorces were allowed, they were also regulated.

A man could not be in a fit of anger send away his wife, but must have time for reflection, while the legal instrument was preparing. For he must give her a bill of divorce properly authenticated, and properly specifying the reason; and we may suppose some provision was also made her out of her husband's substance. And it was no part of God's law to prohibit either party from marrying again; which restraint, when imposed by an absurd policy, is often no better than authorizing fornication. The woman might marry again and again, if set at liberty; but she must never more return to her former husband. This restriction, while it would operate as a check to inconstancy and rashness in the husband, would prevent the shameful practice of exchanging and lending wives, which prevailed in many nations. Israel would be preserved from that national guilt which such crimes enhance; and, as far as these regulations were adhered to, some of the worst effects of divorces would in good measure be prevented.

V. 5. This most condescending exemption would operate in fixing the affections of married persons, and in preventing divorces; for early or long separations tend to alienate the affections, and form temptations to inconstancy.

V. 6. Hand-mills were then generally used, and men would be deprived of the means of preparing their necessary food, if their millstones were taken from them. The same reason holds good against receiving in pledge, or distraining for debt, any of those instruments of labour, by which men are accustomed to earn their livelihood. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. 22:25-27.)

V. 7. Christianity has annihilated that distinction of nations, which for typical and political reasons, was during a time established; and in this respect every man is now our brother, whatever be his nation, complexion, or creed. How then can the merchandise of men and women be carried on, without transgressing this commandment, or abetting those who do? An inhabitant of England, if he stay at home, and steal a horse, or a sheep, is condemned to death; but if he take a voyage to Africa, he may steal, or purchase of those who do steal, hundreds of men and women, and not only escape with impunity, but grow great like a prince. According to the law of God, whoever stole cattle restored four or five fold, whoever stole one human being, though an infant or an idiot, must die. May we not call upon British legislators to rectify this flagrant abuse?—Since this was written, the author, with tens of thousands more, has to bless God, that this expectation has been answered, in the abolition of the slave-trade, by an act of the legislature; but further powerfully coercive measures are still needful, fully to accomplish the benevolent design. (Notes Ex. 21:15-17. Rev. 18:11-19.)

V. 9. The leprosy of Miriam was inflicted by the Lord, and she humbled herself under the rebuke, notwithstanding her rank and character; yet she was excluded from the camp during seven days; but was restored upon her submission at the request of Moses. Hence the people might learn how to submit themselves in similar circumstances. (Notes and P. O. Lev. 13:14. Num. 12.)

V. 10, 13. Though the Israelites might not take increase of their brethren, they might take a pledge; provided it were something which the borrower could conveniently part with, and which he willingly proposed. But if, in his necessity, he brought what he could not well spare, they were commanded from conscience towards God, to restore it by sunset; and this, when done from a right motive, would be accepted as an act of righteousness by a merciful God, and rewarded accordingly; and he would also punish the neglect of it. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 22:25-27. Ez. 18:5-9.)

Not go into his house, &c. (10.) "As if the legislator said, Intrude not into his abode, if he is not willing to expose to the stranger's eye the humiliating circumstances of want and nakedness, which attend his destitute state; or perhaps there is some little monument of his better days, which he reserves to console his misery, which he would not wish the person to whom he implores aid, to see, lest he should demand that in pledge, and either, if denied, refuse relief, or by tearing away this almost sacred relic, to which his heart clings, to 19 When thou cuttest down thine harvest in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go again to fetch it: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow; that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the works of thine hands.

Not more than forty stripes must be inflicted on malefactors, 1-3. Oxen treading out the corn not to be muzzled, 4. The widow of him who died childless to be married by his brother, who, if he refused to take her, must be divorced, 5-10. The punishment of an immoral woman, 11, 12. Just weights and measures to be used, 13-16. The memory of Amalek to be blotted out, 17-19.

IF there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment that the judges may judge them, then they shall justify the righteous, and condemn the wicked.

2 And it shall be if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, that the judge shall cause him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face, according to his fault by a certain number.

3 Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed: lest, if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should seem vile unto thee.

4 Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn.

5 ¶ If brethren dwell together, and one of them die and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger: her husband's brother shall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of an husband's brother unto her.

6 And it shall be, that the first-born which she beareth, shall succeed in the name of his brother, which is dead, that his name be not put out of Israel.

7 And if the man like not to take his brother's wife, then let his brother's wife go up to the gate unto the elders, and say, My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel, he will not perform the duty of my husband's brother.

8 Then the elders of the city shall call him, and speak unto him: and if he stand to it, and say, I like not to take her:

9 Then shall his brother's wife come unto him in the presence of the elders, and loose his shoe from off his foot, and spit in his face, and shall ambitter his distress. No, says the law, the hovel of the poor must be sacred as a holy asylum: the eye of scorn and the foot of pride must not dare to intrude: even the agent of mercy must not enter abruptly and unbid, without consulting the feelings of its wretched inhabitant.—Graves on the Pentateuch, Vol. ii. p. 27.—It need scarcely be said, how worthy these well-grounded remarks on the humane requirements of the divine law are of the serious consideration of all concerned in granting or refusing relief to paupers in this Christian land; and in respect of the conditions, on which relief is generally granted or withheld.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The impetuous lusts and selfish hardness of men's hearts, if not restrained by a constant miracle, or subdued by divine grace, will inevitably occasion manifold abuses in every society, contrary to the moral law of God; nor can the best human laws, or their most impartial and steady administration, wholly prevent them. But these abuses proportionably mar all our comforts, and neither conscience nor prudence will permit a true Christian to join in them.—Even where Providence, or indiscreet choice in marriage, hath allotted a Christian a trial, instead of a useful and pleasant companion; he will from his heart prefer this affliction, to such relief as tends ultimately to licentiousness, confusion, and misery: and divine grace will sanctify it, support him under it, and teach him so to behave as will gradually render it more tolerable. But every method should be used to cement the affections of married persons, and to exclude temptations to inconstancy. While we leave those to the tribunal of God, who prosper by the most horrible oppression, or most infamous traffic; it suffices here to observe, that there are readers who would be disgusted, were we to follow the inspired writer, in his repeated exhortations to humiliation before God, to purity, piety, justice, mercy, kindness, impartiality, and beneficent consideration of the poor and destitute, the fatherless, the widow, and the stranger, and to enlarged liberality in every thing.—It is not hard to prove that these things are calculated to ensure from our merciful and gracious God, in answer to the prayers of those who partake of our kindness, a blessing upon every work of our hands, instead of the curse which is brought down by the cry of the oppressed; the only difficulty is, to bring our minds habitually and steadily to attend to them in our daily walk and conversation.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXV. V. 1. Marg. Ref. a. Notes, Job 29:7-17. Ps. 82:2-4. Prov. 31:8, 9. Is. 1:16-20.

V. 2, 3. Many crimes had been mentioned, for which no punishment was specified. In all these cases it is supposed that scourging was used at the discretion of the magistrates, and according to the degree and aggravations of the crime. This punishment was inflicted in open court, under the inspection of the judge; and without respect to the rank of the criminal. (Marg. Ref.) But lest the malefactor should seem vile, as a slave or a beast, the number of forty stripes must not be exceeded; and lest they should miscount, the Jewish magistrates always confined themselves to thirty-nine, which St. Paul repeatedly endured. (2 Cor. 11:24.)—If petty offences were more generally thus chastised, and capital punishments were less frequent among us, it might be immensely more advantageous to the community. But the excessive severity of inflicting several hundred lashes for one crime, tends, among other things, to prejudice the minds of Englishmen against this punishment; though it is peculiarly salutary, when prudently and moderately inflicted on young offenders especially.

V. 4. The Israelites and most of the ancients, were accustomed to beat out their grain with the feet of oxen or with instruments drawn by them. (Notes, Hos. 10:9-11. 1 Cor. 9:7-12. 1 Tim. 5:17, 18.)

V. 5-10. The custom here regulated had long prevailed; (Notes, Gen. 38:14-16.) and was probably introduced to preserve some remembrance of those who died childless. It seems to have been adopted in the Mosaic law, mainly to keep the inheritances separate, as allotted to each family, and to preserve the genealogies distinct until the coming of Christ; as well as to provide for the destitute widow, when the estate devolved on the next heir. If a married man died without issue, his brother or near kinsman was required to marry the widow; and the eldest son of this marriage inherited the estate of the deceased, and thus preserved his name in the genealogies.—If any one refused to comply with this custom, being averse from the person or character of the widow, he must be publicly disgraced. By pulling off the shoe he was rendered like the slaves, who generally went barefoot; and the widow even spit in, or before, his face, in contempt of the man who had thus disgraced her, and shown such disrespect to the memory of the deceased.—It is not agreed among commentators, whether married men were concerned in this law or not; and it is not material to . . . as if answer and say, "So shall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brother's house."

10 And his name shall be called in Israel, The house of him that hath his shoe loosed.

11 ¶ When men strive together, one with another, and the wife of the one draweth near for to deliver her husband out of the hand of him that smiteth him, and putteth forth her hand, and taketh him by the secrets;

12 Then thou shalt cut off her hand, "thine eye shall not pity her."

13 ¶ Thou shalt not have in thy bag "diverse weights, a great and a small."

14 Thou shalt not have in thine house "diverse measures, a great and a small."

15 But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have; "that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee."

16 For all that do such things, and "all that do unrighteously, are an abomination unto the LORD thy God."

17 ¶ Remember "what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt;

18 How he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary: and the feared not God."

19 Therefore it shall be, "when the LORD thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that had reference to a particular case which no longer exists, and our duty is not in the least affected by the determination.—(Notes, Ruth 4:1-10. Matt. 22:23-33.)

"thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; thou shalt not forget it."

V. 13-16. The Israelites were not only forbidden to use diverse weights and measures, a large one to buy with, and a small one to sell with; but they were not allowed to keep such in their houses. It is observable that these too common practices are branded as "an abomination to the LORD" equally with idolatry, adultery, and other most scandalous crimes. (Marg. Ref. p. r.)

V. 17-19. (Notes, Ex. 17:8-16.) The Lord commanded Moses to write the sentence against Amalek, "as a memorial" in a book: and accordingly he here again repeats it almost at the close of the whole law, that it might not be forgotten by posterity. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In administering justice, impartiality in distinguishing between the innocent and the guilty, and proportioning punishments to crimes, is peculiarly requisite; but it is generally advisable to incline towards the side of lenity rather than that of severity, aiming at the reformation, and not the destruction of the criminal, as far as public security will admit. Every punishment should be inflicted with solemnity, and in most cases publicly, that all the spectators may be impressed with dread, and be warned not to offend in like manner.—And though criminals must be put to shame, as well as to pain, for their warning and humiliation; yet care should be taken, if possible, that they do not appear totally vile: lest having no further reputation to lose they should become desperate.—Kindness is due not only to men, but even to the beasts; and every living creature which contributes to our ease, pleasure, or advantage, should receive from us such reciprocal satisfactions as it is capable of, in proportion to the benefits conferred: much more then should servants and labourers be suitably recompensed; and, by parity of reason, ministers, who are instrumental to men's salvation, should be maintained comfortably at their expense.—In all our actions we ought to aim at the good of those around us, especially of the Lord's people; and to promote the continuance of true religion in the next generation, and its diffusion into those places which are at present destitute of it: and in contracting marriage particularly we should "seek a godly seed," who may preserve the name of deceased believers, and fill up their places in the church; in every way showing respect to dead, and kindness to living relatives: for whatever disgrace we, without cause, put upon others, will in the event rebound upon ourselves.—A solemn and testified ratification ought to distinguish the honourable relation of marriage from all illicit connexions; and married persons should be known as such, to preserve them and others from temptation: and though affections cannot be forced, yet they should be subordinated to reason and religion.—The customs and manners of different ages may render that consistent with female delicacy at one time, which would not be deemed so at another: but there are certain outrages to modesty, which no age can tolerate, no provocation or extremity palliate; but which must ever be branded with infamy, and should be punished with un pitying severity.—Every kind and degree of fraud is abhorred by the righteous God, and should be dreaded by us; for dishonest gain always brings a curse upon men's property, families, and souls; and the day of judgment will bring strange things to light in this respect. Happy they who now judge themselves, and thus repent, and forsake their sins, that they may not be condemned at that awful season.—Let every persecutor and injurer of the Lord's people hear, and take warning from the example of the Amalekites; however they now cast off the fear of God, and behave with cruelty and despite to the meek and poor; he will one day plead the cause of his servants, avenge all the injustice done them, and "blot out the name of every enemy from under heaven;" and the longer judgment tarries, the more dreadful will be its execution at last.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVI. V. 1-4. All the people, when settled in Canaan, were required to present annually some part of its several kinds of fruits, and the first ripe of each; of which the priests had the use, after it had been solemnly offered to God with a thankful acknowledgment of his faithfulness, and after it had been placed before the altar. The quantity was not prescribed; (Note, 15:13-15.) for it was a free-will-offering, to the denial of their own appetite, which would especially crave the first ripe fruit. (Mic. 7:1.) Every production would not be ripe at the same time, and some could not be preserved till the rest were ready. It is, therefore, generally thought that these first-fruits were presented at the feast of Pentecost, by those who went up together to worship; but we must suppose, that the best and choicest, and such as could be preserved were thus presented, and the rest, as occasion required, were offered to the priests in their several cities; or, as others think, carried to the sanctuary at some other time. (Note, Jer. 24:1.)

V. 5-11. Jacob is called "a Syrian," because he lived many years in Padan-aram, or Mesopotamia, which was one division of Syria. His mother also was a Syrian by birth. (Marg. Ref. g.)—He was greatly distressed when he went to Laban; and when he returned, his life was endangered, both from him, and from his brother Esau. (Notes, Gen. 28:32-33.) He was afterwards ready to perish by famine in Canaan, which occasioned his removal into Egypt, where his posterity were miserably enslaved: (Notes, Gen. 46: Ex. 1:2.) yet, notwithstanding all these straits and dangers, the Lord's promises to him had been punctually performed. These mercies the Israelites were directed to acknowledge annually, in this public and solemn manner, in order to humble them; to remind them of their obligations to love and serve God, and to offer him their tribute of praise and gratitude; and thus to render them more cheerful and liberal in the enjoyment of his bounty.

V. 12-15. This related to the second time before considered. (Note, 14:22-29.)—Two years together they paid the Levites' tithe, and the festival tithe: but in the third year, they paid the Levites' tithe, and the poor man's tithe: that is, what was wont in other years to be spent in feasting, was wholly spent every third year upon the poor. Mede, quoted by Bp. Patrick.—Once in three years this solemn protestation was required from every proprietor of land in Canaan, probably in the presence of the priests at the tabernacle. They all declared, that the whole of this second tithe had been employed to those purposes for which it was appropriated: and that no part had been used by them in mourning, or at funerals, which rendered them unclean; or in any superstitious ceremony, in imitation of the idolaters around them. As the matter lay very much between God and their conscience, this protestation was the more suitable, and would tend both to remind them of their duty and render them afraid of neglecting it. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 12:5-7, 18:6-8.)

V. 17-19. By thus personally acceding to the national covenant, every Israelite openly professed himself the servant and worshipper of JEHOVAH, and engaged to walk obediently in his commandments: and by admitting each into it individually, as well as the nation as an incorporated society, the Lord avouched himself to be their God, their Protector, and Portion; and engaged that while they were obedient he would prosper them, and advance them to honour and distinction above all other nations, as well as continue to them the religious advantages by which they were distinguished from all others. This was a figure of that covenant-relation which subsists between a reconciled God and every true believer; and of the privileges and duties belonging to it and resulting from it.

Peculiar people. (18) עַם סֵּלִיחַ. Note, Ex. 19:5.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whatever God at any time has promised, will assuredly in due season be fulfilled, notwithstanding obstacles, improbabilities, and delays: and in all our comforts we should observe 15 'Look down from thy holy habitation, from heaven, and bless thy people Israel, and the land which thou hast given us, as thou swarest unto our fathers, a land that floweth with milk and honey.

16 ¶ This day the LORD thy God hath commanded thee to do these statutes and judgments: thou shalt therefore keep and do them with all thine heart, and with all thy soul.

17 Thou hast avouched the LORD this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways, and to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and to hearken unto his voice:

18 And the LORD hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as he hath promised thee, and that thou shouldst keep all his commandments;

19 And to make thee high above all nations which he hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honour; and that thou mayest be an holy people unto the LORD thy God, as he hath spoken.

his faithfulness as well as his goodness.—It is advantageous to meditate frequently on the Lord's dealings with us, and to consider from how low an estate, and through what impediments, he hath brought us to our present comforts and prospects: and it is so edifying to others, on proper occasions, to speak on these humiliating and enlivening subjects, that whatever leads us to them is well worthy of regard.—It is surely most reasonable, both by word and deed, to ascribe unto God the glory due unto his name. We should honour him with our first and best in every thing, to the denial of our own appetites and passions. On some occasions it is honourable to God, and edifying to the church, when it is done publicly: it is always a source of rejoicing to ourselves when it is done properly.—At the day of judgment we must render an account of every thing committed to our stewardship; it is therefore our wisdom to be frequently calling ourselves to a previous account, how we employ our time, possessions, or endowments.—We must be watchful, not only to avoid dishonesty; but that "our conversation may be without covetousness," that pious and charitable uses have their portion, and that temperance and beneficence be duly regarded by us, in obedience to the commandments of our God. Thus shall we evince that, according to the covenant of grace in Jesus Christ, the Lord is our God, and we are his people; and that we are waiting, in his appointed way, for the performance of his gracious and glorious promises.—It may at some times consist with humility, and tend to edification, openly to protest our integrity; and the consciousness of it is always matter of rejoicing, and of confidence at the throne of grace: and in all our applications we should remember to plead for peculiar blessings on our fellow-Christians, and for the extending of those blessings to our fellow-sinners even to the ends of the earth.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVII. V. 1. In the foregoing chapter, Moses closed his repetition and explanation of the law, with such additions as were requisite; and here, in conjunction with the seventy elders, he proceeded to enjoin two solemn observances to be attended to, after the entrance of Israel into Canaan: the former was done to assist their memories, the latter to affect their hearts.

V. 2. This command was given by Moses, in his lifetime but it must be obeyed, when, after his death, Israel had entered Canaan. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3, 4. Some expositors think, that the whole book of Deuteronomy was written on these plastered stones.

thy God giveth thee, a land that floweth with milk and honey, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath promised thee.

4 Therefore it shall be, when ye be gone over Jordan, that ye shall set up these stones, which I command you this day, in mount Ebal, and thou shalt plaster them with plaster.

5 And there shalt thou build an altar unto the Lord thy God, an altar of stones: thou shalt not lift up any iron tool upon them.

6 Thou shalt build the altar of the Lord thy God of whole stones; and thou shalt offer burnt-offerings thereon unto the Lord thy God.

7 And thou shalt offer peace-offerings, and shalt eat there, and rejoice before the Lord thy God.

8 And thou shalt write upon the stones all the words of this law very plainly.

9 And Moses, and the priests the Levites, spake unto all Israel, saying, Take heed, and hearken, O Israel; this day thou art become the people of the Lord thy God.

10 Thou shalt therefore obey the voice of the Lord thy God, and do his commandments and his statutes, which I command thee this day.

11 And Moses charged the people the same day, saying,

12 These shall stand upon mount Gerizim to bless the people, when ye are come over Jordan; Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Joseph, and Benjamin.

13 And these shall stand upon mount Ebal to curse; Reuben, Gad, and Asher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali.

that they were twelve in number, according to the tribes of Israel. Others restrict the writing to the preceptive part of it; others to the ten commandments only; while many are of opinion that the latter part of this chapter alone was meant. Indeed, as the stones were placed upon mount Ebal, whence the curses were denounced, it is probable that these were added: but we may conclude, that at least the ten commandments, and the great outlines of the whole law, were likewise inscribed in the most legible manner. (8.)

V. 5—7. In ordinary cases no altar might be used, except the brazen one at the door of the tabernacle: but on this occasion, the Lord directed an altar of rough stones to be formed, in order to a renewed confirmation of the covenant, similar to that used when it was first ratified at mount Sinai. (Notes, Ex. 20:21—25. 24:3—8.) This altar built upon mount Ebal, and the sacrifices of burnt-offerings on this occasion offered, aptly taught the people that the curse of the law could be removed by him alone, who gave himself an atoning sacrifice for sinners; and the peace-offerings with the sacred feast implied, that joyful communion with a reconciled God may be maintained through Jesus Christ, notwithstanding the most tremendous curses of the law.

V. 8—10. Marg. Ref. Notes, Matt. 28:19, 20. 1 Thess. 4:1—5.

V. 12, 13. Mount Gerizim and mount Ebal lay near together with a valley between; and what was spoken in a loud voice on the one might be heard on the other. (Note, Judg. 9:7.) No doubt the blessings, as well as the curses, were audibly pronounced and ratified in a general manner, by the tribes appointed for that purpose: so that by this solemnity all Israel deliberately consented to the national covenant; declared that they expected the blessings stipulated to them, only in a way of obedience; and confessed that, individually and nationally, they should merit, and might expect, to be accused of God, if they were disobedient to his commandments. But some priests and Levites were chosen to pronounce from mount Ebal the subsequent particular curses; (14) though the tribe of Levi stood on mount Gerizim. No mention is made of any special acts of obedience, on account of which blessings were pronounced; as the blessings do not belong to those who obey some and neglect others of God's commandments; "for he that keepeth the whole law, and offendeth in one point, is guilty of all." (Notes, Matt. 19:16—22. Jam. 2:8—13.) No man therefore can claim the recompense of his obedience as a debt; but all must receive it as an unmerited favour: and the silence of the Scriptures is

14 And the Levites shall speak, and say unto all the men of Israel with a loud voice, 15 Cursed be the man that maketh any graven or molten image, an abomination unto the Lord, the work of the hands of the craftsman, and putteth it in a secret place: and all the people shall answer, and say, Amen.

16 Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother: and all the people shall say, Amen.

17 Cursed be he that removeth his neighbour's landmark: and all the people shall say, Amen.

18 Cursed be he that maketh the blind to wander out of the way: and all the people shall say, Amen.

19 Cursed be he that perverteth the judgment of the stranger, fatherless, and widow: and all the people shall say, Amen.

20 Cursed be he that lieth with his father's wife; because he uncovereth his father's skirt: and all the people shall say, Amen.

21 Cursed be he that lieth with any manner of beast; and all the people shall say, Amen.

22 Cursed be he that lieth with his sister, the daughter of his father, or the daughter of his mother: and all the people shall say, Amen.

23 Cursed be he that lieth with his mother-in-law: and all the people shall say, Amen.

24 Cursed be he that smiteth his neighbour secretly: and all the people shall say, Amen.

25 Cursed be he that taketh reward to slay an innocent person: and all the people shall say, Amen.

26 Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them: and all the people shall say, Amen.

to be considered in such cases, as conveying important instruction.—It is observable, that all the tribes appointed to bless were descended from Leah and Rachel the free-women; and Reuben who had been disgraced for his misconduct, with Zebulun the youngest of Leah's sons, were added to the four tribes descended from the bond-women, to complete the number of tribes, which stood on mount Ebal to ratify the curses. (Note, Josh. 8:30—35.)

V. 15. The curses here denounced were specially intended in every case, as a restraint from secret wickedness. Several of the crimes specified, if proved against any one, exposed him to capital punishment; as idolatry, incest, murder, and others. But in many cases the criminal might elude detection, and punishment by the magistrate: yet let him not hope to escape with impunity; for the dreadful curse of God would rest upon him; and at length vengeance would certainly overtake him, if he continued impenitent. (24)—The word Amen, which the people were required to add, after each of these curses, implied their express assent to it, or confirmation of it: not as desiring that they or their brethren should be accused; but as declaring their conviction that the guilty would be accused; that they deserved to be so; and that they expected to be themselves accused, if they committed the crimes thus openly protested against. (Marg. Ref. Note, Num. 5:22. 1 Kings 1:36, 37. Jer. 28:7.)—The objection often made to the solemnity prescribed by the church of England on Ash-Wednesday, that people go to church to curse their neighbours, is very frivolous: for the Amen, now spoken by Christians, means neither more nor less, than that which God commanded the Israelites to annex to the same curses; and under every dispensation, they who live in the practice of gross wickedness are accused, and should be reminded of it.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Blessings promised to Israel, while obedient, 1-14: and awful curses, of every kind imaginable, denounced if they were disobedient, 15-68.

AND it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to observe and to do all his commandments which I command thee this day, that the LORD thy God will set thee on high above all nations of the earth:

2 And all these blessings shall come on thee and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God.

3 Blessed shalt thou be in the city, and blessed shalt thou be in the field.

4 Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattle, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep.

5 Blessed shall be thy basket and thy store.

6 Blessed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and blessed shalt thou be when thou goest out.

7 The LORD shall cause thine enemies, that rise up against thee, to be smitten before thy face: they shall come out against thee one way, and thence before thee seven ways.

8 The LORD shall command the blessing upon thee, in thy store-houses, and in all that thou settest thine hand unto; and he shall bless thee in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

9 The LORD shall establish thee an holy people unto himself, as he hath sworn unto thee, if thou shalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, and walk in his ways.

10 And all people of the earth shall see, that thou art called by the name of the LORD; and they shall be afraid of thee.

11 And the LORD shall make thee plentiful in goods, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground, in the land which the LORD sware unto thy fathers to give thee.

12 The LORD shall open unto thee his good treasure, the heaven to give the rain unto thy land in his season, and to bless all the work of thine hand: and thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow.

13 And the LORD shall make thee the head, and not the tail: and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; for that thou hearken unto the commandments of the LORD thy God, which I command thee this day to observe and to do them:

14 And thou shalt not go aside from any of the words which I command thee this day, to the right hand or to the left, to go after other gods to serve them.

15 But it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God to observe to do all his commandments and his statutes which I command thee this day; that all these curses shall come upon thee, and overtake thee.

my view, better to render the verse literally, if it had been merely to prevent cavils and objections; such as modern Jews make against both them and the apostle. (See Answer to Rabbi Crooll, by the Author, pp. 227, 228.) The cavil indeed is ignorant; for the word all was inserted by the Greek translators, called the LXX, long before even St. Paul's days; who took it for substance as he found it. The meaning is exactly the same with it or without it. (28:1.) Hence we learn, that continual obedience is the confirmation here spoken of; and are likewise taught, that these curses were intended not only to deter the Israelites from sin, but to show them their need of mercy, and to establish the distinction between "the righteousness of faith," and "the righteousness of works." This especially must be the meaning of the last verse, by which all the Israelites were evidently called on to condemn themselves, as deserving of the curse denounced; and this truth, properly perceived, forms the grand preparation of heart for understanding and valuing the salvation of the gospel.—All these curses were denounced against transgressors, not of the ritual law, but the moral; each of the special instances being referable to one or other of the ten commandments. (Notes, Gal. 3:6-14.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As our fallen nature is entirely indisposed to retain suitable impressions of heavenly things; we ought to use every proper means of assisting our memories, awakening our consciences, and affecting our hearts with them. But, blessed be God, the numerous copies of the Scriptures among us, if properly studied, and thus familiarized to our minds, may supersede the necessity of such methods as were prescribed to Israel: and the end of the gospel ministry is, and the aim of all preachers ought to be, to make the word of God as plain as possible to the meanest capacities. Yet, unless the Holy Spirit efficaciously prosper their labours, men will not, even by these means, be "made wise unto salvation;" we should therefore continually and earnestly beseech the Lord to bestow this blessing upon us. But without the interposition of the atoning blood of Christ, we sinners can neither have communion with a holy God, nor perform any acceptable obedience to him: for his righteous law peremptorily requires an uninterrupted, spiritual, and persevering obedience to every precept; and condemns all without exception, who at any time, or in any instance, transgress it. Under its awful-curse we transgressors remain, till the redemption of Christ be applied to our hearts: and under that curse every unbeliever will perish for ever, and be constrained to acknowledge the justice of his condemnation. Happy they, who now "submit to the righteousness of God," and, being self-condemned, seek salvation from his mercy through Jesus Christ, according to that new covenant, of which he is Surety: for them "there is no condemnation," their "salvation is for ever, and their righteousness shall not be abolished;" and every blessing is ensured to them by promise, by covenant, and by oath. But none, who live in the habitual practice of known sin, are partakers of these privileges; and, however they may conceal their wickedness from the cognizance of the magistrates, or the censures of ministers and the church, the curse of God will fall upon them, with weight proportioned to their abused privileges and hypocritical profession.—Wherever "the grace of God bringeth salvation," it teaches the believer to "deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world;" confirming all the words of the divine law, and delighting in them, after the inward man, though he cannot render it a perfect and unflinching obedience. In this evangelical dependence and conscientious walk, true peace and solid joy are to be found. Thus God may be glorified and man benefited; and magistrates, ministers, and persons of every rank, should unitedly employ all their authority, influence, and example, to promote this our holy religion.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXVIII. V. 1, 2. This chapter greatly resembles the twenty-sixth chapter of Leviticus, which was addressed, almost forty years before, to the forefathers of this generation of Israel at mount Sinai. It contains a very copious and affecting exposition of the blessing and the curse mentioned in the foregoing chapter, with many things evidently prophetic of the events, which have befallen the nation to this very day. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3-14. (Notes, Lev. 26:3-12.) In a variety of expressions, every kind of prosperity, personal, relative, and public; in their property and enjoyments; in their temporal advancement and spiritual privileges; are engaged to the Israelites, while they continued obedient; and their succeeding history furnishes full demonstration, that, as long as they adhered to the worship and service of God, it was uniformly thus with them as a nation, and in some degree individually. Their remarkable prosperity in every thing, while obedient, convinced the surrounding nations, that they were immediately protected and assisted by the Lord, whose name they worshipped, and whose people they professed to be; inasmuch, that they were often afraid to assault them. Consulting the marginal references will lead to the best exposition of the terms employed, and frequently point out the fulfilment of the promises and threatenings.

The head, &c. (13) That is, they should be more honourable than other nations, and have dominion over them as in the days of David and Solomon. (Notes, 13, 44 Is 9:13-17.)

V. 15. All the terrible curses which were denounced against the Israelites when disobedient, have indeed uniformly "overtaken them," in every situation, and in every country, from that day to this; as it must be evident to all those who are in the least acquainted with their history 16 Cursed shalt thou be in the city, and cursed shalt thou be in the field.

17 Cursed shall be thy basket and thy store.

18 Cursed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy kine and the flocks of thy sheep.

19 Cursed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and cursed shalt thou be when thou goest out.

20 The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto for to do, until thou be destroyed, and until thou perish quickly; because of the wickedness of thy doings whereby thou hast forsaken me.

21 The Lord shall make the pestilence cleave unto thee, until he have consumed thee from off the land whither thou goest to possess it.

22 The Lord shall smite thee with a consumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation, and with an extreme burning, and with the sword, and with blasting, and with mildew; and they shall pursue thee until thou perish.

23 And thy heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron.

24 The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon thee, until thou be destroyed.

25 The Lord shall cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies: thou shalt go out one way against them, and flee seven ways before them; and shalt be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.

26 And thy carcass shall be meat unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beasts of the earth, and no man shall fray them away.

27 The Lord shall smite thee with the botch of Egypt, and with the hemoroids, and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed.

28 The Lord shall smite thee with madness, and blindness, and astonishment of heart.

29 And thou shalt grope at noonday, as the blind gropeth in darkness, and thou shalt not prosper in thy ways; and thou shalt be only oppressed and spoiled evermore: and no man shall save thee.

30 Thou shalt betroth a wife, and another man shall lie with her: thou shalt build an house, and thou shalt not dwell therein: thou shalt plant a vineyard, and shalt not gather the grapes thereof.

31 Thine ox shall be slain before thine eyes, and thou shalt not eat thereof: thine ass shall be violently taken away from before thy face, and shall not be restored to thee: thy sheep shall be given unto thine enemies, and thou shalt have none to rescue them.

32 Thy sons and thy daughters shall be given unto another people; and thine eyes shall look and fail with longing for them all the day long: and there shall be no might in thine hand.

33 The fruit of thy land, and all thy labours, shall a nation which thou knowest not eat up; and thou shalt be only oppressed and crushed always;

34 So that thou shalt be mad for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see.

35 The Lord shall smite thee in the knees, and

V. 23. The language is remarkable: "Thy heaven;" that part of the heaven, which was over the country of Israel, should have no more moisture in it than brass has; and consequently their land would become hard "as iron," for want of rain; while the clouds might give showers in abundance, and the earth be moist and fruitful in other regions.

V. 24. Instead of the rain in its appointed seasons, the Lord declared that he would visit the people with such extreme drought, as should render their land dry dust and barren sand; which, rising in the air in vast quantities, would thence descend in hot showers, destroying the remnant of vegetation, and almost suffocating all living creatures. A drought of this kind occurred in the time of Ahab. Jeremiah also laments one that was very terrible. (Notes, Jer. 14:) and it is remarkable that this formerly fertile land is at present noted for its sterility; and is so thinly inhabited, as scarcely to contain a hundredth part of its ancient inhabitants, even according to the largest computation!

V. 25. This prediction was in some degree verified, when the Assyrians carried away the ten tribes; and by the Babylonish captivity, and its consequences: but it has been receiving a more singular accomplishment for almost eighteen hundred years, in the dispersion of the Jews all over the earth, subsequent to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans.

V. 26. To be deprived of burial was in general accounted by the Israelites a dire addition to other calamities. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2 Sam. 21:9-14.)

V. 28. In the siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans this was the case, as it appears from the history: but in that by Titus and the Romans, and in the subsequent conduct of the miserable relics of the Jews, their infatuation was so evident, that every one who reads of their conduct must be convinced, they were given up to judicial blindness and madness, or they never could have been so bent upon their own destruction. While, by their obstinate resistance to the Roman power, without the least prospect of escaping, they ensured their own miseries; by their intestine rage they became the executors of the wrath of God upon themselves, almost saved their enemies the trouble of destroying them, and absolutely put it out of their power to preserve them. and cruel exactions and oppressions, accompanied by every token of contempt and abhorrence, with which the Jews have been treated, in almost every nation, and during every age, since the times of Christ, can scarcely be conceived, except by those who are conversant in their history: but it is impossible, within the limits of this exposition, fully to elucidate so compendious a prophecy; and it must suffice to say, that no people on earth have been so long and so generally insulted, oppressed, and crushed, as they have been, according to the testimony both of their own writers and of others.

V. 30, 31. Marg. Ref.

V. 32. No might.] Neither power to resist the violence done them, nor money to redeem their enslaved offspring.—'In several countries, in Spain and Portugal particularly, their children' [those of the Jews] 'have been taken from them, by order of the government, to be educated in the popish religion. . . . The fourth council of Toledo ordered, that all their children should be taken from them for fear they should partake of their errors, and that they should be shut up in monasteries, to be instructed in the Christian truths. . . . And when they were banished from Portugal, 'the king, says Mariana, 'ordered all their children under fourteen years of age, to be taken from them, and baptized: a practice not at all justifiable,' adds the historian—'because none ought to be forced to become Christians, nor children to be taken from their parents.' Bp. Newton.

V. 34. (Marg. Ref. Note, 28.) 'After the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, some of the worst of the Jews took refuge in the Castle of Masada; where, being closely besieged by the Romans, they, at the persuasion of Eleazar, their leader, first murdered their wives and children; then ten men were chosen by lot to slay the rest; this being done, one of the ten was chosen in like manner to kill the other nine; which having executed, he set fire to the place, and then stabbed himself. There were nine hundred and sixty who perished in this miserable manner: and only two women and five boys escaped, by hiding themselves in the aqueducts under ground.' Bp. Newton.

V. 35. Marg. Ref. (Notes, Job 2:7, 8.)

V. 36. (Marg. Ref.) The former clause of this verse was especially accomplished, when Zedekiah and his people were carried captives to Babylon. Without doubt the Israelites in general, who were carried captives by the Assyrians, and many of the Jews in Chaldaea, were finally incorporated with the nations among whom they lived, and were given up in the legs with as swift that cannot be healed, from the sole of as swift foot unto the top of thy head.

36 The LORD shall bring thee, and thy king which thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and there shalt thou serve other gods, wood and stone.

37 And thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word, among all nations whither the LORD shall lead thee.

38 Thou shalt carry much seed out into the field, and shalt gather but little in: for the locust shall consume it.

39 Thou shalt plant vineyards and dress them; but shalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes: for the worms shall eat them.

40 Thou shalt have olive-trees throughout all thy coasts, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil: for thine olive shall cast his fruit.

41 Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, but thou shalt not enjoy them: for they shall go into captivity.

42 All thy trees and fruit of thy land shall the locust consume.

43 The stranger that is within thee shall get up above thee very high: and thou shalt come down very low.

44 He shall lend to thee, and thou shalt not lend to him: he shall be the head, and thou shalt be the tail.

45 Moreover all these curses shall come upon thee, and shall pursue thee, and overtake thee, till thou be destroyed; because thou hast hearkened not unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which he commanded thee.

46 And they shall be upon thee for a sign and for a wonder, and upon thy seed for ever.

47 Because thou servedst not the LORD thy God with joyfulness and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things;

48 Therefore shalt thou serve thine enemies, which the LORD shall send against thee, in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things: and he shall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck, until he have destroyed thee.

49 ¶ The LORD shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand;

50 A nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor show favour to the young:

51 And he shall eat the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy land, until thou be destroyed: which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil, or the increase of thy kine or flocks of thy sheep, until he have destroyed thee.

52 And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustedst, throughout all thy land: and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, throughout all thy land which the LORD thy God hath given thee.

53 And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters, which the LORD thy God hath given thee, in the siege, and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee:

54 So that the man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eye shall be evil toward his brother, and toward the wife of his bosom, and towards the remnant of his children which he shall leave:

55 So that he will not give to any of them the flesh of his children, whom he shall eat; because he hath nothing left him in the siege and in the straitness, wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee in all thy gates.

56 The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground, for delicateness and tenderness, her eye shall be evil towards the husband of her bosom, and towards her son, and towards her daughter.

57 And towards her young one that cometh out from between her feet, and towards her children which she shall bear: for she shall eat them for want of all things, secretly, in the siege and straitness, wherewith thine enemy shall distress thee in thy gates.

58 ¶ If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD; to their idolatry. But some think, that the violence frequently done the Jews in popish countries, through which they are compelled by severe persecutions to conceal their religion, and to worship the images of saints and angels, was also predicted. (Note, 63.)

V. 37. The name of Jew has long been a proverbial mark of detestation and contempt, among all the nations whither they have been driven; and is so to this day: so that Christians, Mohammedans, and Pagans join in it. 'You use me like a Jew.... None but a Jew would have done this.... I would not have done so to a Jew.' Bp. Patrick.—This is fact; but doubtless it is wicked, thus to reproach those who are under the divine rebuke, and who are living, though reluctant, witnesses of the truth of our holy religion, and of the Lord's indignation against those who reject or oppose it; and they, who thus reproach them, are generally too closely copying this part of their example. have endured, and which in some measure they still endure, without apparent prospect of redress, are unparalleled in the history of mankind, both for their weight, their number, and their duration; yet after all their oppressions and massacres with which they have been wasted, and the long-continued dispersion by which they have been scattered, they still remain a distinct and very numerous people! (Notes, Num. 23:9. Jer. 30:10, 11.) These events, compared with the favour of God in ancient times manifested towards them, and with the predictions concerning them, should not only excite our astonishment, but turn unto us for a testimony; and should serve, instead of successive miracles, to assure us of the truth of the Scriptures. And when the predictions likewise, concerning their conversion to Christ, shall be accomplished, the whole taken together will indeed be a sign and a wonder to all the nations of the earth, and become the forerunner of a general success of true Christianity. V. 49—57. Though the Chaldeans are often described under the similitude of an eagle, yet it is generally agreed, that these verses especially predict the desolations brought on the Jews by the Romans, the last and most terrible enemies of that nation; who came from a country far more distant than Chaldea; whose standard was an eagle; who spake a language to which the Jews were then entire strangers, being wholly unlike the Hebrew, of which the Chaldean was merely a dialect; whose victories were rapid; whose appearance was terrible; whose yoke was an iron yoke, and the havoc which they made of the nation was most tremendous. By their armies Jerusalem was at length besieged, sacked, and utterly desolated: and during this siege, the famine was so extreme, that even rich and delicate persons, both men and women, ate their own children, and concealed the horrible repast lest others should tear it from them. ⁱ Women snatched the food out of the very mouths of their husbands, and sons of their fathers, and (what is most miserable) mothers of their infants. ^j Josephus. *Wars of the Jews. Ch. iii. Sect. 4.—Perhaps the histories of all other nations on earth together, do not contain so many well-authenticated instances of this most horrid effect of desperate hunger, as are found in that of the Jews, according to this most extraordinary ancient prediction of their celebrated lawgiver. (Marg. Ref. on 53—57. Notes, Lev. 26:29. 2 Kings 6:28, 29. Lam. 4:10.)—After Jerusalem had been utterly desolated by the Romans, they were continually so provoked by the insurrections and daring crimes of the Jews, that they persecuted them even almost to extirpation: so that when the numbers destroyed in the siege, (not less than 1,100,000,) and the tens of thousands which were afterwards slaughtered year after year in every country, are considered, it appears wonderful that there were any remains of them left.

^m Young one. (57) Marg.

V. 55. (Marg. Ref.)—[Written.] Moses here as a preacher, appeals to the law, as at this time written in a book.

V. 59. The plagues of the Jews have been indeed made wonderful: and the Babylonish captivity, the punishment of their complicated idolatries, was so inconsiderable, either for the misery or continuance of it, compared with their sufferings since they rejected and crucified their Messiah. That the superior malignity of that crime, above all which went before it, is legibly written in the punishment. (Marg. Ref. Note, Gen. 49:10.)

V. 61. After this tremendous catalogue of curses, lest there should be any possible temporal misery, which had not been mentioned, the whole is comprised in one general denunciation; that every species and every degree of misery should come upon them, if they still continued disobedient.

V. 63. The miseries of his creatures are not in themselves pleasing to the Lord; but he is pleased with that display of his justice, truth, wisdom, and power, which become him as the Judge of all the earth. (Note, Jer. 32:39—41.)—ⁿ Adrian, . . . after a strange desolation before mentioned, prohibited by a public decree, ratified with the Senate's consent, any Jew to come within sight of Judea. ^o Bp. Patrick. Thus the Jews were totally expelled from the land of promise and very attempt to settle them again in it has hitherto been ineffectual: so that to this day fewer of them are found in that country, than almost in any other.

V. 64. A Jewish writer, quoted by Bp. Patrick, has these words: 'In the Roman captivity, the Jews were dispersed and dissipated through all the regions of the east and of the west. For every nation of which the Roman army consisted, when they returned to their own countries, carried some of them along with them, into Greece, Germany, Italy, Spain, France, and all other countries, which either Christians or Mohammedans now possess.' Indeed it is certain they have been ever since scattered abroad throughout the earth: so that, as to their national existence, the judgments of God have pursued them even to their destruction.—It is too common for the Jews, in popish countries to comply with the idolatrous worship, . . . and to bow down to stocks and stones, rather than their effects should be confiscated. ^p Bp. Newton.—The Spanish and Portugal inquisitions reduce them to the dilemma of being either hypocrites, or burnt.—The number of these dissemblers is very considerable. . . . They are so much the more dangerous, for not only being very numerous, but confounded with the ecclesiastics, and entering into all the ecclesiastical dignities. . . . The most surprising thing is, that this religion spreads from generation to generation, and still subsists in the persons of dissemblers in a remote posterity. In vain the great lords of Spain make alliances, change their names, and take ancient scutcheons; they are still known to be of Jewish race, and Jews themselves. The convents of monks and nuns are full of them. . . . Orobio, who relates the fact, knew these dissemblers: he was one of them, and bent the knee before the sacrament.—Moreover he brings proofs of his assertion, in maintaining, that there are in the synagogue of Amsterdam, brothers and sisters, and near relations, to good families in Spain and Portugal; and even Franciscan monks, and Dominicans, and Jesuits who come to do penance, and make amends for the crime they have committed in dissembling. ^q Basnage's History of the Jews.—As the latter part of this prophecy evidently relates to the present state of the Jews; (and this even their own writers allow:) the prediction, that in their dispersed state "they should serve other gods, which neither they nor their fathers had known, even wood and stone," seems so evidently to mark out this hypocritical compliance with the new idolatry of the antichristians, in the worship of the images of saints and angels, as even to add to the credibility of the extraordinary facts here stated by their historian.

V. 65—67. The dispersed Jews would find no alleviation or respite from misery. Accordingly they have hitherto found no country, in which they are treated as denizens; all suspect them as enemies, and behave to them as aliens; if they do not harass, oppress, and persecute them. It may be useful to state a fact or two, out of very many, in illustration of these verses.—A dreadful massacre was made of the Jews at Lisbon, in the year 1506, for three days together; 'where men were not suffered to die of their deadly wounds, but were dragged by their mangled limbs into the market-place, where the bodies of the living and the slain, with others half alive and half dead, were burnt together in heaps. The spectacle was so horrible, that it quite astonished the rest of this wretched people, two thousand of which perished in this barbarous manner. Parents durst not mourn for their children, nor children sigh for their parents; . . . so that their hearts no doubt were ready to break with grief.' . . . 'A decree was made,' . . . (in Spain 1493,) 'that all the Jews should either change their religion, or quit the country in three months. . . . Three hundred thousand, old and young, men and women, went away on foot in one day, not knowing whither to go. Some went into Portugal, others into Navarre, where they conflicted with many calamities: for some became a prey, or perished by famine and pestilence. And therefore others committed themselves to the sea: . . . but there they met with new disasters: for many were sold for slaves when they came on any coast, many were drowned, many burnt in the ships that were set on fire.—After this a plague . . . swept away the rest of the miserable wretches, who were hated by all mankind; so that all that vast number perished, . . . except a very few.' ^r Bp. Patrick.—Nothing seems more suited to confirm a sensible but hesitating inquirer concerning the truth of revelation, than a careful comparison of this chapter, and of the prophecies of the New Testament respecting the Jews, with their actual history to the present day: this appears to be capable of effecting every thing, which any external evidence imaginable can effect; and the demonstration thence deduced

CHAPTER XXIX.

Moses reminds Israel of the Lord's wonderful works, in order to their again ratifying the covenant, 1-9. He addresses all who were required to do this, 10-17. He tremendously denounces the doom of presumptuous transgressors, 18-28. He distinguishes between things secret, and things revealed, 29.

THESE are 'the words of the covenant, which the LORD commanded Moses to make with and which may be continually re-examined at leisure, and with deliberation, seems more convincing than miracles: for these are transient acts, and can only be reviewed in the testimony with which they are authenticated. 'What stronger proofs can we desire of the divine legation of Moses?—How these instances may affect others I know not, but for myself I must acknowledge, they not only convince, but amaze and astonish me beyond expression.' Bp. Newton.

V. 68. Many of the Jews rebelliously went into Egypt after the Babylonian captivity, and there miserably perished. (Notes, Jer. 41:—44:) Multitudes went thither, and settled under the successors of Alexander. But this verse seems especially to point out an event, which took place subsequent to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, and the desolation made by Adrian. Numbers of the captives were sent by sea into Egypt, (as well as into other countries), and sold for slaves at a vile price, and for the meanest offices; and many thousands were left to perish from want: for the multitude was so great, that purchasers could not be found for them all at any price. God had brought the nation out of Egypt triumphantly, and had forbidden them to return; and had not their sin incurred the severest vengeance, he would never have permitted them to be forced thither: but, by their iniquities, they provoked him to reduce them to as abject a condition, as that from which he had redeemed them; nay, more abject and wretched.—Mr. Henry closes his comment upon this most awful chapter, with mentioning a wicked man, who was so enraged at the threatenings contained in it, that he tore the leaf out of his Bible. 'But,' says this pious author, 'to what purpose is it to deface a copy, whilst the original stands upon record, in the divine counsels, by which it is unalterably determined, that "the wages of sin is death," whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear?'

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In vain doth human language exhaust its powers, in attempting to express the whole meaning of these important ERMS, THE BLESSING, AND THE CURSE OF ALMIGHTY GOD. All events are absolutely at his disposal, all creatures are his servants, and he can make us as happy, or as miserable as he pleases. If he determine to bless us, he can command a confluence of health, riches, and reputation; and will give fruitful fields, flourishing families, and peaceful habitations, in case these be good for us. He can advance men above their neighbours, and cause them to triumph over their enemies: he can communicate every temporal good, along with the ordinances of his courts, and the graces of his Spirit. He can even connect great honour with deep humility; and give success in every undertaking, comfort in every connexion, and abundance of all things, with a thankful, liberal, and spiritual mind: yet all this is very little compared with that future, everlasting, and complete felicity, in the contemplation of which our thoughts and our language are absolutely swallowed up.—On the other hand, if the Lord purpose to inflict vengeance, what miseries can his curse inflict even in this present world! An assemblage of direful diseases, rackings, pains, pinching poverty, and dreary famine, with armies of victorious enemies, exercising every cruelty enhanced by galling insult, are ready to obey his mandate. At his word too, remorse seizes the conscience, and anguish and despair possess the heart; yea, maddening rage, envy, and impotent revenge, join with disappointed ambition, avarice, and lust, to render the whole soul one wild tumult of conflicting passions, to obliterate every tender feeling, and to infatuate the devoted wretch, by depriving him of all power to extricate himself, and plunging him still deeper into utter ruin. His own wretchedness will be also aggravated by witnessing the distress of friends, relatives, and children, rendered miserable through his crimes: and all this, and far more than words can describe, may with accumulating weight press upon him, for wearisome weeks, and months, and years, without prospect of relief but from death, the thought of which appals the soul with still deeper horrors. But this is only "the beginning of sorrows" to those, who are under the curse of God: what will then be their un-abating and everlasting misery in that world, where "their worm never dieth, and the fire is not quenched?" Yet to such wretchedness is every one exposed, who lives in disobedience to God's commandments; and his wrath is revealed from heaven expressly for our warning, "that we may fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD OUR GOD." None will suffer any misery above his deserts: but indeed we are all exposed to this awful curse for breaking the law of God. Yet, blessed be his name, we are under so gracious a dispensation, that nothing but obstinate impenitence can expose us to the more tremendous part of it. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us," and having borne, in his own person, the substance of all that agony and anguish, which our sins had merited, and which we must otherwise have endured for ever. To those who believe in him, "there is no condemnation;" all temporal calamities are converted into salutary chastisements; whatever be their proportion of temporal blessings, every thing is given or withheld, as most conduces to their final and eternal felicity; and even in this present world, their comfort and happiness is far superior to that of the most prosperous sinner. To this Refuge and Salvation let sinners flee; in these privileges let believers rejoice, and serve their reconciled God with gladness of heart, for the "abundance" of all spiritual blessings with which he has blessed them; while gratitude to the Saviour, meditation on his sufferings, and a consciousness of their own deserts, reconcile them to every cross and self-denial. But let none call these blessings their own, who do not endeavour to observe and do all the commandments of God, with uprightness of heart: for even the believer can enjoy the present comfort of them, no further than he "exercises himself to have a conscience void of offence towards God and man."—As "all things work together for good to them who love God;" so all things concur in ruining his enemies, and in enslaving to the vilest of masters those that refuse to obey him, whose 'service is perfect freedom.' Even prosperity increases their pride and insolence, their table becomes a snare, the curse of God imbibers their blessings; and it will pursue them, until it overtake and sink them into final destruction.—As these predictions concerning the Israelites, compared with their accomplishment, demonstrate the divine inspiration of the Scriptures; how should the example of that people warn all who see and hear these things, not to provoke the Lord to anger by disobeying his commands, and despising his gospel!—But let all who love the truth and word of God, remember to pity and pray for the conversion of the benighted Jews; and likewise to beseech the Lord in behalf of our much favoured, but most offending land; that reformation, and the revival of true religion, may preserve us from being bereaved of our distinguished mercies, and feeling those miseries, from which we have hitherto been graciously exempted.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXIX. V. 1. The covenant ratified with this new generation, (like the law given them,) was substantially the same, as that before ratified with their fathers at mount Sinai.—In this chapter the covenant is proposed, and the consequences of violating it are declared: but a more explicit ratification of it was afterwards made, from mount Gerizim and mount Ebal. (Notes, 27: Josh. 1:13-35.)

V. 2, 3. Numbers of the persons addressed had, in their youth been eye-witnesses of the miracles referred to, and could attest the reality of them to their children and juniors. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4. Fallen man never makes a proper use of his senses and faculties, and of religious instruction and outward advantages, without the special preventing grace of God. An entire indisposedness to that which is spiritually good, and a strong propensity to evil, the effects of our fall in Adam, are the sources of all actual wickedness, and render us the objects of the Lord's holy abhorrence, and righteous displeasure. No doubt Omnipotence could overcome these hindrances in every man: but the exercise of the power of God is directed by infinite wisdom, and regulated as most conducive to his glory. No sinner can deserve so valuable a benefit from his offended Creator; but every man might righteously have been left to the effects of his corrupt propensities, which are never in the holy Scriptures admitted as an excuse for sinful actions. Indeed men in general perceive no occasion for renewing grace: they have no desire after it, and will use no means to obtain it. But on the contrary, by their voluntary wickedness, they do violence to natural conscience and the common sense of mankind, and thus often provoke God judicially to leave them to themselves. (Notes, 2 Thes. 2:8-12.) He has, however, appointed certain methods to be employed, to convince sinners that the change is absolutely necessary: and they are commanded and encouraged to seek it. Thus the path of duty and safety is made plain; and they who attend to these instructions, "receive the blessing from the God of salvation," the Giver of "every good and perfect gift." (Notes, Jam. 1:13-18.) who at last will convince all his enemies that they alone were to blame for their sins.—The faithful minister will be thankful when any receive "hearts to perceive and eyes to see." (Notes, Matt. 13:16, 17.) but while so many remain blinded to their own character, interest, and duty, he must wait, with earnest expectation and prayer, for a more extensive blessing, and will seem to think nothing done, as long as so much remains undone. This appears to have been precisely the feeling of Moses at this time. There were doubtless many exceptions; yet the bulk of the people still remained insensible to the real design and tendency of all that the Lord had spoken and done among them; and multitudes had provoked him to give them up to their own hearts' lusts. This grieved the pious and affectionate spirit of Moses, who used this language, not only to reprove their hardness of heart, but also to warn, instruct, and excite them: for if "God had not given them a heart to perceive, and eyes to see," it was undeniable that they had wilfully hardened their hearts, and stupified their consciences against every thing which they had seen and heard.—Maimonides rightly and judiciously explains these words, when he saith, "They had not disposed themselves to receive this grace from God." Bp. Patrick. It may, however, be worth the reader's while to compare this statement with the words of the apostle: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do, of his good pleasure." And also with the language of our Liturgy, and Articles; "Lord, have mercy upon us, and incline our hearts to keep this law."—We have no power to do good works, pleasant and acceptable to God, without the grace of God by Christ preventing us that we may have a good will, and working in us when we have that good will. Article x.

(Notes, 8:2, 3.) By the special blessing of God on the manna, which the people despised as light bread, that immense multitude had been preserved as healthy and fit for their various exercises, as any other people on the productions of the corn-field and vineyard.—Moses here reports the very words of God, as if he had himself addressed the people.

Clothes, &c. (5) Note, 8:4.—As far the greatest part of the clothing of all ranks and ages in Israel, were made of linen, for which they had no resources in their own possessions, and exceedingly little opportunity of obtaining supplies from others; the reality and greatness of the miraculous interposition in this behalf, were the more extraordinary.

V. 7-9. 2:32-37. 3:1-11. Notes, Num. 21:21-34. 32.

V. 10-12. The national covenant, made with Israel, was in some things a shadow of the covenant of grace; as it also represented the outward dispensation of the gospel. (Note, Ex. 19:5.) This covenant is confirmed with true believers "for the good of them and of their children after them;" and in their families, the profession of Christianity is principally continued. (Notes, Jer. 32:39-41. Acts 2:37-40. Rom. 11: 16-21.) Thus they enjoy permanent religious advantages, which are seldom withdrawn, unless they renounce the religion of their forefathers, or evince a total disregard of it. As others likewise embrace the gospel, their families also become a part of the visible church, which thus spreads from nation to nation, and descends from one generation to another. The infant-offspring, therefore, of such persons as are favoured with the gospel, are greatly interested in the conduct of their parents: is it that they value the blessings of the new covenant as their own portion, and desire them as the portion of their beloved children, and intend to bring them up accordingly, seem equally authorized and required to bring them under the external obligations, and to seek for them the external pledges of it, as these Israelitish parents were.—This transaction might, in many ways, at the time and afterwards, benefit both the parents and their offspring; as it had a direct tendency to stir up the parents to pray for their children, and to instruct them as they grew up: and if when they came to years of understanding, they were reminded how solemnly they, as well as their parents, had entered into covenant with God, it would tend to restrain their passions, awaken their consciences, and excite them personally to seek the covenant blessings, which could only be forfeited by their own wilful sins. (Note, Mark 10:13-16.) It therefore pleased God to order the covenant to be ratified, not only by the principal persons in Israel, or by the adults; but by the women and children, nay, by the strangers and meanest slaves, that is, by the whole company.

V. 13-15. The oath, which the Lord swore unto Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is here adduced as confirming the covenant made with the nation of Israel; yet St. Paul refers to it as the security of all who "have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before them" in the gospel: for by it temporal blessings, and the means of grace, were ensured to the posterity of the patriarchs according to the flesh; and likewise the special blessings, which Abraham was personally interested in by the righteousness of faith, to all his spiritual seed of believers, who are sealed with the true circumcision of the heart. (Notes, Gen. 17:1-12. Rom. 4:9-12. Gal. 3:6-22. Heb. 6:13-20.)—Even such as were absent, and the unborn children of the whole company, to the latest posterity, were included in the covenant: since nothing but apostasy, idolatry, or rejection of the promised Saviour, could cut off the entail of the national advantages; and nothing but personal unbelief and disobedience could prevent individuals from sharing in the spiritual blessings.

V. 16, 17. (Marg. Ref.) They had opportunity in Egypt of seeing too much of their vile idolatries. And so they had as they passed by the country of Moab and Midian, when some had been seduced to the worship of Baal-peor. Bp. Patrick.

V. 18. This, and the following verses referred to the curses of the preceding chapters, and taught the people to dread the infliction of them upon individuals, and families, as well as on the nation at large, if they violated the covenant now proposed to them, especially by idolatry, however secret. This crime, in an Israelite, must be preceded by wilful apostasy from God, and contemptuous defiance of him: it was an explicit renunciation of the covenant, and an act of direct rebellion.—There is something similar in the case of those who have been baptized, and brought up under the dispensation of the gospel, if they become infidels or live wicked lives; they more implicitly renounce God and refuse the blessings of his covenant, than any other persons can do.—The word translated gall, may mean hemlock, or some other poisonous plant. The enmity of man's heart against God is a root which bears the poisonous and bitter fruits of idolatry, impiety, hypocrisy and every kind of wickedness. (Notes, Acts 8:18-24.) A person of corrupt principles and bad character, is likewise a root which produces an increase of these pestiferous plants, by his persuasions, influence and example.

and the attempts of idolatrous Israelites to entice others to the same practices, till they became general, seems to have been especially meant. (Notes, 2 Tim. 2:14—18. 5:17, 18. Heb. 12:15—17.)

V. 19, 20. Unbelief and false principles cherish presumptuous hopes of impunity; and in this way men embolden themselves and one another in wickedness, and expect to be happy, notwithstanding the awful threatenings of the sacred Scriptures. (Note, Ec. 8:11—13.) Thus "they walk in the imagination of their heart to add drunkenness to thirst." This seems to be a metaphorical expression, denoting the eager gratification of depraved inclinations; while men greedily drink down iniquity, as the drunkard does his liquor, without regard to consequences. (Note, Job 15:14—16.) The arrangement of the words in the original has led some to render them, "to add thirst to drunkenness;" and then they imply the insatiableness of men's sinful passions, which hanker for more and more indulgence after the greatest excesses. But some think that the expression relates to the zeal, with which sinners try to corrupt others; as if the land which was overflowed, should pour out its waters to deluge that which still continued capable of cultivation. Perhaps it may also refer to the sensual excesses, which were employed as incentives to the worship of idols, and which tended greatly to promote idolatry.—More terrible words can scarcely be conceived than those which follow; and as they respected the people of Israel, their accomplishment has been equally remarkable. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21—25. The tremendous destruction of individual transgressors is here considered, as connected with the ruin of the nation, through the fatal effects of corrupt influence and bad examples. The warning then becomes prophetic, and coincides with the predictions already considered. (Notes, 4:25—28, 28:15—67.) The entire desolations during the Babylonish captivity, and the waste and sterile condition of that once fruitful land, from the taking of Jerusalem by the Romans to this day, are foretold in emphatical language. But the most striking circumstance is this; the Jews themselves (along with strangers and enemies) are introduced, ascribing all these calamities to the wrath of God against them for their sins, especially their idolatry. (Marg. Ref. n—p. Note, Jer. 40:2, 3.) In numberless instances this has been verified in the judgment formed of them by others; and the Jews in general at present concur in the decision.—The barrenness of the land of Canaan at present, contrasted with the description of its fertility contained in the Scriptures, has led infidels to bring forward many specious arguments, or subtle insinuations, against the divine authority, and indeed the veracity of the sacred writers: for present appearances lead them to conclude that it never could have been so fruitful as it is represented in Scripture. But they seem not at all aware, that in the pains which they take to show the present sterility of those regions, they authenticate the very Book which they intend to oppose; and illustrate the fulfilment of the prophecies delivered by Moses, whose credit as an historian, and as an inspired writer, they aim to undermine. For who can deny, that these ancient records predict the singular barrenness of the promised land in subsequent ages, as the just punishment of Israel's apostacy and wickedness; as well as describe its extraordinary fruitfulness, when God put Israel in possession of it? Who can say, even on rational grounds, and Zeboim, which the LORD overthrew in his anger, and in his wrath:

24 Even all nations shall say, "Wherefore hath the LORD done thus unto this land? what meaneth the heat of this great anger?"

25 Then men shall say, "Because 'they have forsaken the covenant of the LORD God of their fathers, which he made with them when he brought them forth out of the land of Egypt.

26 For 'they went and served other gods and worshipped them, 'gods whom they knew not, and 'whom he had not 'given unto them:

27 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against this land, to bring upon it 'all the curses that are written in this book:

28 And the LORD 'rooted them out of their land in anger, and in wrath, and in great indignation, and cast them into another land, 'as it is this day.

29 The 'secret things belong unto the LORD our God; but those things which are 'revealed belong unto us, 'and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.

that the Almighty God cannot effect such a change? or object to the declaration, "A fruitful land maketh he barren, for 'the wickedness of them who dwell therein?" (Ps. 107:34.) And, whatever second causes have concurred, undoubtedly "thus it was written," and thus it is; "and this God hath wrought, and it is marvellous in our eyes." (Marg. Ref.)

V. 26. The Lord not only did not command the idolatry of Israel, but he did every thing which was proper to keep them from so degrading an abomination.—The clause rendered, "which he had not given them," may however mean, that the false gods never conferred any benefits on them. (Marg.)

V. 28. As it is this day.] Probably the clause was added by Ezra, or by some scribe, who had witnessed the desolations of the Babylonish captivity. But the emphasis of it, as acknowledging the accomplishment of this ancient prophecy, supposing the words, "as it is this day," to be spoken by a modern Jew, after the long-continued dispersion of the nation, is inconceivably enhanced.

V. 29. It is here intimated, that many things, in the divine councils and conduct, might appear very dark to the Israelites. They would be ready to propose questions about those future events, which were foretold in general terms; and to raise objections against the Lord's dealings with them. The awful curses might appear needlessly severe, and they would inquire into the reasons of them, with irreverent curiosity, and a disposition to justify themselves and the nation. Of this disposition Satan might avail himself, and tempt them to unbelief; to entertain hard thoughts of God, and his law and service; to excuse their disobedience; or to indulge vain speculations instead of attending to their duty. They were therefore cautioned against these delusions, by an important distinction of easy and universal application. Man ought not to intrude into those things, which it has pleased God to conceal from him: for who can penetrate into the secrets of his wisdom; or discover his decrees and counsels, the reasons of his conduct, and the mysteries of his nature, further than he reveals them? (Notes, Is. 40:12—17, 45:9, 10. Rom. 11:33—36.) "Secret things belong to the Lord;" and all inquiries into them are arrogant and presumptuous. But he has revealed every thing that can be really beneficial; and our attention in this respect should reach to the whole of these discoveries, and terminate with them. "Those things which are revealed belong to us;" not to increase our stock of barren notions, but to encourage and regulate our obedience, "that we may do all the words of this law." They belong also to our children, and to them we should communicate the instruction which God has afforded us.—Almost all the heresies and controversies which have corrupted the purity or disturbed the peace of the church in every age, have originated from disregard to this distinction; from vain attempts, by human reasonings and authority, to fill up supposed chasms in revelation, and to make it more apparently consistent and systematical, than it has pleased God to make it; from deducing disputable consequences from revelation; or from tracing back its sacred mysteries to some unrevealed antecedent causes. But the silence is as instructive as the language of Scripture; its truths must be apprehended by humble faith, and they disdain to be comprehended or modelled by our proud reason. They are intended to subserve practice; not to gratify curiosity, or foment angry controversies. Yet there is danger on the other side; and a disposition to speak of many things, concerning which a great deal is revealed in Scripture, as immaterial, or not to be understood; and to sink, (so to speak) as far as men are able, a large portion of the "whole counsel of God," as if it had better never have been written; not only tends to obscure divine truth, but to countenance the too prevailing opinion that the language of the sacred oracles is obscure, and conveys no clear and distinct or even safe meaning, without some note, or comment, or safeguard.—Such writers, if God had consulted them, would have advised the omission of many parts of revealed truth, especially in the epistles of St. Paul.—But all the revealed things belong to us. To know the perfections of God, and our obligations to love and serve him; our relations to him and to the eternal world; our state and character as sinners, and our duty as under a dispensation of mercy; to know the way of acceptance, and the source of grace and comfort in Jesus Christ: to understand our duty as redeemed sinners, with respect to our several stations and relations in life; our talents and the way of improving them, with the motives and assistances and encouragements which revelation proposes: and to be aware of the enemies and dangers to which we are exposed, and the means of escape, and the consequences of our conduct:—this is the substance of useful knowledge, and, when reduced to practice, constitutes heavenly wisdom. This the Scriptures plainly reveal: by this light we may live and die comfortably, and be happy eternally; after having on earth glorified God, served our generation, and left our dying exhortations and blessings as a bequest to posterity. But all which man attempts to add to revealed truth, or substitute in its place, is merely an ignis fatuus, which bewilders the benighted traveller; and, while it amuses him with its glimmering, misleads him into the pit of destruction, and leaves him to sink in it. (Notes, Is. 8:20. Matt. 6:22, 23.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-17. They who have consented to the new covenant of mercy and grace in Jesus Christ, and have given up themselves to be his people, should embrace every opportunity of renewing the open profession of their hopes, obligations, and grateful love; and of avowing, to the world and to the church, that they desire to "walk worthy of God, who has called them to his kingdom and glory." It is delightful to behold numbers of the rising generation come forward to consent to the same covenant, and acknowledge their obligations and purposes, by divine grace, "of walking by the same rule, and minning the same things." In order to this, the nature and blessings of the covenant ought to be proposed to men in general, who should be exhorted and invited with all earnestness to lay hold on it: the encouragements of the gospel should be stated, and the awful consequences of neglecting so great salvation declared with the greatest solemnity, the most urgent expostulations, and the most affectionate warnings. In these things all are alike concerned: kings and princes, captains and senators, rich and poor, bond and free: and blessed be God, the strangers of the Gentiles, nay, the most abandoned sinners, are invited, and should be even "compelled to come in," and to participate the gracious feast, as far as energetic arguments and earnest persuasions can prevail. Even infants, though yet unconscious of their wants, duties, and privileges, are concerned; and they should be devoted to God, and brought up for him, as the children of the covenant and the seed of the church.—But though means should be used by every man with his neighbour; (Notes, Is. 22-5. Mic. 4:1-4. Zech. 3:9, 10.) yet God alone can give men "a heart to perceive, eyes to see, and ears to hear," for good and saving purposes. We must, therefore, seek the blessing from him; and give him the praise when it is vouchsafed.—While the true Christian, or the zealous minister, mourns that so few believe and obey the gospel, in comparison of the multitudes who are "blinded by the god of this world; the consideration should add fervency to his prayers for others, and to his grateful praises on his own account.—Every mercv, which we enjoy, should bind us more strictly to cheerful obedience; and every divine truth, if properly received, will have a practical and holy effect upon us: nor can we expect to prosper in the best sense, "unless we keep and do the words of his covenant."

V. 18-29. That covenant which is ratified by the promise and oath of God, to all who believe in the name of the divine Mediator, is established on better promises than the covenant made with the nation of Israel; and secures to them all things pertaining to eternal salvation. (Notes, 2 Sam. 23:5. Is. 55:1-3. Heb. 8:3-6.) Yet, alas! many, who only deceive themselves, suppose that they are interested in these blessings, and thence take encouragement to continue in sin. The lusts of their heart were never mortified by converting grace; and therefore when occasion offers, they spring up into practices as poisonous and as bitter as hemlock and wormwood. Thus many are defiled, or hardened in prejudice, unbelief, and ungodliness; or buoyed up in vain confidence: and the dire evil eats as a canker, pervades great multitudes, and corrupts whole churches; while the tempters themselves "draw back unto perdition," or perhaps propagate pestilential heresies.—But, however the curses denounced in Scripture may be disbelieved and despised, their tremendous effects will assuredly convince the most daring sinners, without distinction of rank or sex, and without regard to multitudes, "that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." And though the heart of man now rages in enmity against them; the period is approaching, when not only spectators, but the criminals themselves, whilst enduring their direful accomplishment, will be constrained to admit the justice of their own condemnation.—But it is the grand design of Satan to embolden men in sin by the hopes of impunity, and as they are prone to flatter themselves, they love to be flattered by others; and find many ready to assure them, that "they shall have peace, though they walk after the imagination of their hearts," and gratify their favourite passions.—They persuade themselves, and find others concur with them, that they need not be so strict, and that God will not be so severe, as vulgar readers of the Bible imagine: and so, by some ingenious interpretation, they evaporate the force of these awful declarations, till they fall fast asleep in the jaws of destruction! And should some faithful minister, out of love to their souls, address them in scriptural language, concerning "the curse of God" and "the wrath to come;" he would be liberally repaid with reproaches, and branded as a bigot, an uncharitable wretch, a man of a vulgar and narrow mind, an enthusiast, or a madman. But the Lord will not spare such presumptuous transgressors, who treat his truth as a lie, blaspheme his justice as cruelty, and set his vengeance at defiance: against such persons "his anger and jealousy will smoke, and all the curses that are written in this book will rest upon them;" "their names shall be blotted out from under heaven," and they shall be "separated unto evil" afar off from the company of the redeemed; where full conviction shall be attended with "weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth," in anguish and despair.—But these things are not written, nor are these observations made, God is witness, in order that this misery should be endured by those who are thus addressed: but that all, that hear and read, may take "warning and flee from the wrath to come;" that they may profit by the divine judgments upon others; that they may flee for refuge to the hope of the gospel; that they may fear coming short of the grace of God; that they may deny their sinful inclinations every indulgence, and watch against the beginnings of evil and the inroads of negligence; and, above all, that they may shudder at the thought of venturing upon sin, by abusing the grace of the gospel.—Many, who themselves are ungodly, can readily enough perceive the steps by which others descend to destruction, and acknowledge the justice of their punishment; though they are blind to the sentence of condemnation which hangs over them also. But let every one of us look to his own case: let us avoid sloth and dissipation, and deeply reflect on these infinitely important subjects; let us be careful not to repress our convictions, nor indulge in empty speculations, bold conjectures, and impious objections to the truths and ways of God; and let us not curiously pry into unrevealed things. On the contrary, may we use revelation "as the lantern of our paths," by which to see the safe and happy road through this dark and dangerous world, that we may walk in it ourselves, and point it out to our children also.—In that world above, whither this light will guide the humble and obedient believer, even things which are now secret will be discovered; all darkness and difficulties will vanish; perfect light will shine upon all the counsels and judgments of God; and the whole will terminate in universal and everlasting approbation, admiration, gratitude, praise, and felicity.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXX. V. 1-10. This passage evidently refers to the prophetic denunciations of the two preceding chapters, which, as it has been shown, had their main

5 And the LORD thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers.

6 And the LORD thy God will circumscribe thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live.

7 And the LORD thy God will put all these curses upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, which persecuted thee.

8 And thou shalt return and obey the voice of the LORD, and do all his commandments, which I command thee this day.

9 And the LORD thy God will make thee plenteous in every work of thine hand, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy land, for good: for the LORD will again rejoice over thee for good, as he rejoiced over thy fathers:

10 If thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which are written in this book of the law, and if thou turn unto the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul.

11 ¶ For this commandment which I command thee this day, it is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off:

12 It is not in heaven, that thou shouldst say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?

13 Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?

14 But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it.

15 ¶ See; I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil;

16 In that I command thee this day to love the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, that thou mayest live and multiply; and the LORD thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it.

17 But if thine heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away and worship other gods, and serve them;

18 I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish, and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land whither thou passest over Jordan, to go to possess it.

19 ¶ I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live;

20 That thou mayest love the LORD thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and that thou mayest cleave unto him; (for he is thy Life, and the Length of thy days;) that thou mayest dwell in the land which the LORD swore unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them.

accomplishment in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and in the subsequent dispersion of the Jews to the present day: little doubt therefore can remain that these prophetic promises are yet unaccomplished; and that the relics of the nation shall, in some future and not very distant period, be converted to Christ, and probably be gathered together and reinstated in Canaan. (Notes, 429-31. Lev. 26:40-45. 1 Kings 8:46-53.) The language here used is in a great measure absolute; not containing merely a conditional encouragement, but predicting an event which would assuredly take place: for the Lord himself engaged to "circumscribe the hearts" of the people; and when this has taken place; and divine love has supplanted the love of sin, they certainly will consider and repent, and return to God and obey him. (Notes, 10:16. Gen. 17:9-12. Rom. 2:25-29.) And then he will rejoice over them to do them good, and prosper them in all things; and at the same time he will terribly punish their enemies, who have cruelly insulted and oppressed them. (Notes, 23:37. Jer. 31:31-40. 32:39-41. Ez. 36:25-38. 37:20-28. 38: 39:23-29. Zech. 12:9-14. Rom. 11:16-32.)

V. 11-14. What Moses here spake of the commandments, St. Paul applied to the method of a sinner's justification, by faith in Jesus Christ. (Not Rom. 10:5-11.) For the covenant, proposed to Israel in a form of commandments, did not consist of the moral law alone, obedience to which especially constitutes "the righteousness of works;" but of the ceremonial law also, in which Christ was typified, "as the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth;" and though a large proportion of the Israelites mistook the nature of these instructions, (as multitudes of professed Christians utterly misunderstand the sacraments of the New Testament,) yet in the legal ordinances, their dispensation of the gospel was principally contained. There never was, since the fall of man, more than one way to heaven; which is marked out in both Testaments, though not with equal clearness and precision. Moses therefore assuredly meant to include that way of acceptance, which the apostle more explicitly described; and St. Paul's words implied the same conscientious obedience, of which Moses more fully treated.—Under both Testaments, the word of God brings the good and right way near to us: so that we need not travel for instruction, as ancient philosophers did; nor seek information from men, at immense labour and expense; nor need we anxiously or curiously desire to be wise above what is written. For the sacred Scriptures will suffice for every useful purpose, if we make ourselves acquainted with them; if we believe and love them, and treasure them up in our hearts in order to reduce them to practice. (Notes, Col. 2:8-10. 2 Tim. 3:14-17.) The expression "in thy mouth and in thy heart," seems to refer to the time, when "the LORD shall circumscribe the hearts" of the Jews. (6.)

V. 15-20. Marg. Ref. Notes, 11:29,30. 27:28.) The exhortations of these verses, as addressed to the nation of Israel, are indeed enforced chiefly by temporal sanctions; but the use which the apostle makes of the preceding verses, fully warrants our application of them to the hearts and consciences of individuals, by the more powerful motives of eternal recompense.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

"The holy Scriptures are able to make us wise unto salvation, by faith in Jesus Christ;" and "thoroughly to furnish us for every good work." And the instruction which they convey, forces itself upon our attention, judgments, consciences, and affections, by every argument, warning, and encouragement, which can render it impressive and efficacious. But in vain does a kind Providence bring these advantages near; in vain do ministers endeavour to convey divine truths to the conscience, in the most convincing manner; if men will thrust them away in unbelief and love of sin: nor will hearing, understanding, or disputing about them, avail us, if they do not sink into our hearts and influence our conduct. When eternal salvation is thus proposed unto us, and the acceptance or refusal of it fairly referred to our choice; nothing can prevent our felicity, but our own folly and wickedness; and they who refuse the offered grace, eventually choose and love death and perdition, and are cruel to their own souls. The ministers of Christ ought therefore plainly to declare, that except sinners repent, they will surely perish, as well as to set before them in the most solemn and affecting manner, "life and death, blessing and cursing;" that if they cannot prevent their destruction, they may deliver their own souls. And in this case, not only will they at last become witnesses against them: but heaven and earth will bear record, that they deserve their doom, and have none to blame but themselves.—But are we sensible of the reality and importance of the eternal state? Do we "choose that good part which shall never be taken from us?" Let us beg of God to "circumscribe our hearts," to subdue our lusts, and to implant his love: then shall we be prepared for serious reflection, for godly sorrow, and true repentance: then shall we value his salvation, and hope in his mercy: then shall we return to him as our Rest and Portion, worship and obey him as the Lord our God, and cleave unto him as our Father and our Friend. Then will every ordinance, and every act of obedience, be pleasant; love and gratitude will enlarge our hearts; and justice, temperance, truth, and kindness will mark our paths. Every good gift will be communicated from a reconciled God: every enemy will by degrees be subdued, and at length destroyed; and a blessing will be reserved for our posterity, when we charge. And Moses and Joshua went, and *presented themselves in the tabernacle of the congregation.

15 And the LORD appeared in the tabernacle in the pillar of a cloud: and the pillar of the cloud stood over the door of the tabernacle.

16 And the LORD said unto Moses, Behold, thou shalt *sleep with thy fathers; and this people will rise up, and go a whoring after the gods of the strangers of the land whither they go to be among them, and will forsake me, and *break my covenant which I have made with them.

17 Then my anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will *hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall *befall them; so that they will say in that day, *Are not these evils come upon us, because our God is not among us?

18 And I will surely hide my face in that day, for all the evils which they shall have wrought, in that they are turned unto other gods.

19 Now therefore write ye this song for you, and teach it the children of Israel: *put it in their mouths, that this song may be *a witness for me against the children of Israel.

20 For *when I shall have brought them into the land which I swear unto thy fathers, that floweth with milk and honey; and they shall have eaten and filled themselves, and *waxen fat; then will they turn unto other gods, and serve them, and provoke me, and break my covenant.

21 And it shall come to pass, when many evils and troubles are befallen them, that this song shall testify *against them as a witness; for it shall not be forgotten out of the mouths of their seed: for I know their imagination which they *go about even now, before I have brought them into the land which I swear.

22 Moses therefore wrote this song the same day, and taught it the children of Israel.

23 And he gave Joshua the son of Nun a charge, and said, Be strong, and of a good courage: for thou shalt bring the children of Israel into the land which I swear unto them; and I will be with thee.

24 ¶ And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of *writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished,

25 That Moses commanded the Levites, which *bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, saying, 26 Take this book of the law, and put it *in the side of the ark of the covenant of the LORD your God, that it may be there for *a witness against thee.

27 For I know thy rebellion, and thy *stiff-neck: behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, ye have been rebellious against the LORD; and how much more after my death?

28 *Gather unto me all the elders of your tribes, and your officers, that I may speak these words in their ears, and *call heaven and earth to record against them.

29 For I know that after my death ye will utterly *corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you: *and evil will befall you in the latter days, because ye will do evil in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger through the work of your hands.

30 And Moses *spoke in the ears of all the congregation of Israel the words of this song, until they were ended.

parish churches in this kingdom, proves the means of salvation to many souls, who are in great measure left destitute of other means of instruction. It were however to be wished, that the several clergymen, employed in this service, were mindful to read the appointed portions audibly, distinctly, and deliberately; as this would give probable ground to expect far more extensively beneficial effects, to result from so laudable an institution.

V. 14, 15. Joshua, not being a priest, never went within the tabernacle; and the context leads us to conclude, that Moses and he stood before the door of it at this time.—“The pillar of the cloud” generally rested on the top of the tabernacle; but, on particular occasions, it removed to the entrance, and the glory of the LORD appeared in it. (Note, 23.)

V. 16, 17. Marg. Ref. Note, Judg. 6:13.

V. 18. When God withhold his gracious influences, man's evil inclinations invariably lead him into sin; and when he withdraws his protection and blessing, (which is implied by the figurative expression of “hiding his face,”) man necessarily sinks into misery. Our dependence on God is in every respect absolute: and it is proper we should know it; that we may fear to provoke him, and seek to please him; that we may wholly trust him, and give him all the praise of our knowledge, holiness, and felicity; but that we may abhor the blasphemy of charging our sin or folly to his account, from whose unchangeable perfection good and only good can flow. (Notes, 29:4. Jam. 1:13-18.)

V. 19. Poetry, when well composed, and upon an interesting subject, is exceedingly attractive, as well as easily fixed and retained in the memory: and in almost every nation in the earlier stages of civilization and literature, men delight in poetical compositions, which are learned, recited, or sung with a sort of enthusiastic eagerness. (Note, Ex. 15:1.) To this propensity of the human mind the LORD was pleased to adapt his instructions. A sacred song, containing the substance of the preceding addresses, was appointed to be composed by Moses, doubtless under divine inspiration: with whom Joshua, as his coadjutor and successor, was joined; and on him it would devolve, to see that the subsequent command was obeyed. For the people were required to learn it, and to teach it to their children, from generation to generation. Thus they would have it frequently in their memories and mouths when the other parts of the law were generally neglected: and indeed God himself engaged that it should not be forgotten. (21)—This song, (which was also a prophecy,) in after ages, when the predictions contained in it had received their accomplishment, would vouch the divine inspiration of Moses; show the cause of the people's miseries; bear witness to the justice of God against their wickedness; and form a powerful call to them to repent and return to him as the only method in which they could obtain deliverance. (Notes, 32.)

V. 20, 21. Marg. Ref. Notes, 32:15. Prov. 30:7-9.—I know, &c. (21.) The LORD knows what is in man, and whither his inclinations will lead him if left to himself; and nothing can be more undeniable, or more incomprehensible, than his foresight of the innumerable volitions of rational agents, to the remotest futurity, and his method of overruling them all to accomplish his wise and righteous purposes, without in the least interfering with their free agency. Thus neither his foreknowledge, nor his deep decrees, cause or excuse man's wickedness, or diminish the punishment which sinners will justly suffer. (Note, Ex. 38:10.)

V. 23. (Note, Num. 27:19.) “The LORD, who had hitherto spoken by Moses, now spoke to Joshua himself, and gave him this charge.” Bp. Patrick. The language must imply this; or else Moses repeated to him the very words of God, and in his name. (14. Notes, Josh. 1:1-8.)

V. 26. In the side of the ark.] In a coffer, or box, without the ark. (Marg. Ref. k.)—This appears to have been a correct and authentic copy of the five books of Moses, probably written with his own hand; which would be reserved, that, in case of errors or disputes, or defect of other copies, it might be referred to, and would be a witness against the sins of Israel, whenever it was examined.—This is an express declaration, that Moses himself was the writer of the whole law, in that very form in which it was kept by the priests in the sanctuary. (Note, 2 Kings 22:8-14.)

V. 29. These repeated declarations were in fact prophecies, which have been accomplishing ever since. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. It is very profitable for us to consider how life passes; and how much of our day is spent, in proportion to the progress made in the work allotted us; that we may be the more earnest in preparing for our final account, and in rendering our remaining services to the church and to the world.—Even when old age is healthy and vigorous, we should remember that the limits of human life are fixed, by him who

CHAPTER XXXII.

The song of Moses, contrasting the perfections of God, and his special goodness to Israel, with Israel's ingratitude and apostasy, 1-18; and predicting terrible judgments on them for their sins, which would yet end in mercy, 19-43. Moses exhorts the people to set their hearts on the words which he has spoken, 44-47. The Lord orders him to go up to mount Nebo, to view the promised land, and die, 48-52.

Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth.

hath denounced the sentence of death against us. Nor need we, if believers, desire to live in this world: for we must feel pain, experience conflict and temptation, and witness iniquity, while we continue here: and when our journey is ended, and our victory completed, God will raise up other instruments by which to carry on his great designs: and be himself the ever-living Guardian of those, about whom we are most affectionately anxious. We have only to do our work, and if able, to be doubly active when the shadows of the evening approach; and, with all our influence and zeal, endeavour to impress divine truths upon our survivors, confirming our living profession with our dying testimony.—Satan constantly aims to embolden men in sin, and intimidate them from duty: we should therefore animate ourselves and each other to obedience, and awe our minds from sin, by meditating on the promises and denunciations of God's word.—But the human heart is so insensible, that every method should be tried, to keep up a due attention to the truths, precepts, and worship of God among men: and all opportunities should be embraced, and every avenue to the heart seized to excite some useful conviction, and to stir up the remembrance of some forgotten doctrine or neglected duty. (Note, 2 Pet. 1:12-15.)

V. 14-29. Not only the bulk of mankind, but even the best of men, need repeated encouragements and charges, to engage them steadily in the work of God, especially in arduous and perilous services in this evil world.—But the Lord will never fail nor forsake such as trust in him: they may therefore be strong and of a good courage, however numerous, malicious, or powerful their enemies are: for in such a cause, and with such a Helper, they shall certainly triumph over all opposition, till every promise in the book of God has been accomplished. Every former mercy to the church or to themselves, warrants the assurance of future successes, and they are “encompassed with a cloud of witnesses” who unitedly testify the achievements of faith.—To the priests, the Lord's ministers, is the written word of God especially committed, to be by them preserved and delivered uncorrupted unto the people; and men, women, children, and strangers should be diligently instructed from it, that they may learn to fear and serve God in the obedience of faith. Every ordinance, every copy of the Scriptures, every faithful sermon, every pious book, every psalm, or hymn, which is printed, read, or sung, nay, the very words of men's own mouths, will rise up in judgment and bear witness for God, against those, who, notwithstanding all, forsake him, and commit iniquity. And to his holy abhorrence of sin we must ascribe all the miseries which are endured on earth, as well as the torments which are reserved for the wicked in hell.—Alas! that the liberality of the Lord should occasion increasing ungodliness; and that prosperity should generate ingratitude! Hence it becomes necessary for the Lord to correct those most, whom he loves best; and hence we have all need to fear prosperity more than the severest affliction, and to be doubly watchful and instant in prayer under the smiles of Providence. (P. O. 6: latter part. P. O. 8: ibid.)—The more accurately wise and holy men have studied, and the longer they have observed human nature, comparing it with the word of God, the more they have perceived and lamented its proneness to rebellion: and when the most powerful restraints fail to deter men from sin, with what impetuosity will they rush into it when left to follow their own inclinations! But if we grieve to see the present prevalence of wickedness, and entertain gloomy apprehensions of yet increasing ungodliness; let us remember that thus it was with Moses, with the apostles, and with most of those who have served God, and their generation: and having used our influence, and poured out our prayers, to prevent it as much as we can; let us leave the matter with him who will maintain his own cause, and who is “able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy.”

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXII. V. 1. This bold and poetical invocation of the heavens and the earth, or the whole creation, to attend to what was about to be spoken, and to judge between the Lord and his worshippers, was adapted, and intended, to convey a strong idea of the vast importance of the subject, and to awaken the seriousness and attention of all who should hear or read it. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. As the rain and dew, gently distilling, soften the earth and produce a beautiful verdure and fertility; so this song tended, and the inspired writer aimed, to soften the Israelites into repentance, and gently to insinuate into their minds those good instructions, which, by the divine blessing,

2 My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew; as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass:

might render them fruitful in good works, and prosperous in the Lord's favour: and such would be the effect as to many. (Marg. Ref.)—Some interpret the former clause of the judgments of God, which like torrents of impetuous rain sweep down all before them; and observe that the effect of this song was to hasten and aggravate the miseries of obstinate sinners, by rendering their conduct more execrable.

V. 3. To “publish the name of the Lord,” is to delineate the glorious perfections and character of JEHOVAH, even of that God whom the Israelites forsook for their worthless idols. (Notes, Ex. 34:5-7. Matt. 11:25-27. 28:19,20, John 1:18. 17:25,26.)—To “ascribe greatness unto our God,” is to acknowledge his self-existence, eternity, omnipresence, omniscience, almighty power, and universal absolute authority (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Chr. 29:10-19. Dan. 4:1-3,34-37. Matt. 6:13. Rom. 11:33-36.)

V. 4. “He is the Rock.” This is the first time God is called a rock in Scripture: and the expression seems to denote that his unchangeable power, faithfulness, and love, as revealed in the promised Saviour, form an immovable foundation, on which we may build our hopes of felicity; and that under his protection we may find refuge from all our enemies, and in all our troubles: as the rocks in those countries frequently sheltered the inhabitants from the heat of the sun, from impetuous tempests, and from hostile invasions. (Notes, 30:31. 1 Sam. 2:1,2. 2 Sam. 22:2,3. Ps. 61:1,2. Is. 32:1,2. Matt. 16:18.)—“His work is perfect.” Absolute perfection is in God alone: relative perfection is all that belongs to creatures; and it belongs to them all, as he at first made them; to a worm as much as to an archangel. Every work of God is the result of perfect goodness, the contrivance of perfect wisdom, and the effect of perfect power; and is complete in its kind and for its use, and to fill its appointed station in the grand scale of existence. Every providential dispensation is perfectly expressive of his divine justice, truth, goodness, and wisdom. His law is perfectly holy, just, and good; and is exactly suited to answer the ends which he proposed in giving it: his gospel is perfect also, and suited to answer still nobler and more important ends. The Mosaic dispensation was perfectly adapted to its purpose for the appointed period. The New Testament dispensation has a higher and more enlarged kind of perfection. Every part of the universal plan is perfectly fitted to the station which it occupies, and the whole is a perfect plan, and will at length be perfectly executed: as will every work which God has begun: nor could any alteration be made in any of his works, without proportionally deducting from their excellency. All real defect arises from another quarter, from apostasy and rebellion, and their consequences. Much imagined defect is real excellence; and the objections made to it are the offspring of pride and ignorance. If that which suits its place, and answers the intention of its Maker, were advanced to a higher rank of beauty and dignity, its relative excellence would be destroyed. So long as the distinction between the infinite and absolute perfection of the Creator, and the finite capacities of the creature, remains, there can be no end of such vain attempts of increasing created perfection by advancing it to superior dignity: and the idea leads to the supposition of a perfect kingdom, where all are rulers and none subjects. These things should not be overlooked by those on the one hand, who are continually discovering supposed defects in the works of God, without knowing the intention of the great Contriver; nor on the other hand by those who speak of reason and of the law of God, when distinguishing them from revelation and from the gospel, in such degrading language, as seems to imply, either that God is not the Giver of them, or that things opposite to each other may proceed from the same immutable Fountain of light, truth, and holiness. These were intended, and are calculated, for distinct purposes; and man's perversion of them is alone to be found fault with.—“All his ways are judgment.” All the dealings of God with his rational creatures are regulated by infallible wisdom and perfect justice. “He is a God of truth,” of entire veracity, sincerity, and fidelity:—“and without iniquity,” never using his power or authority to oppress or injure any, never requiring more than his due; never punishing any of his innumerable subjects who have not deserved it, or above their deserts. And “just and right is he;” none therefore can have any cause to revolt against him, as the world in general, and as Israel in particular, had done. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 25:9, Is. 45:20-25. Mic. 7:15-20.)

the Hebrews; though but lately known to the Greeks.' Bp. Patrick. (Marg. Ref. i.)

V. 15. The word "Jeshurun" seems to mean, The upright one; and Israel was such by profession, and comparatively so in reality, for some time: but when greatly prospered, the people degenerated, and grew untractable and rebellious; like the cattle that kick against the gad, instead of being excited by it to labour. (Note, 1 Sam. 2:29.) They used their abundance intemperately, and grew proud and luxurious. This rendered them forgetful of God and ungrateful to him, and indisposed them for his spiritual worship and holy service: (Note, Is. 63:9, 10.) in proportion, they became attached to the sensual worship of filthy idols, to which they apostatized, forsaking and lightly esteeming their great and gracious Benefactor: and when they were reproved by the prophets, or corrected by the Lord, they were fired with indignation, and revolted more and more. (Note, Is. 1:5, 6.)

V. 17. The word, rendered devils, means destroyers: and such the false gods proved to their worshippers, instead of benefactors. Thus Satan is called by the apostle Abaddon and Apollyon, the one of which in Hebrew, and the other in Greek, signifies a destroyer. (Note, Rev. 9:11.) and our Lord says "he was a murderer from the beginning." (John 8:44.) Apostate spirits therefore are evidently meant: and indeed the whole system of idolatry, and of every species of false religion, ultimately centres in the worship and service of Satan; who, as the proud rival of God, ambitiously aspires to be the god and king of this world. Not only were the evil geni of the heathens in reality devils; but their good geni also, and all their demons or gods, as far as they had any distinct existence. Whether a mere phantom, or some peculiar demon under the name of Baal or Jupiter, or some deceased hero, or the virtues and vices, were worshipped under these images; the things which were sacrificed unto them "were sacrificed unto devils;" and it is reasonable to suppose, that the same word should in an idolater's vocabulary be used in a good sense, as signifying a deity, which in the word of God, and in the language of his worshippers, signifies a demon, or devil. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Cor. 10:18—22.) In this system of Satan, old gods, or "new gods that newly came up," (what a monstrous absurdity!) the deification of living as well as of deceased men, the change from one idolatry to another in ceaseless variety, equally suited his purpose. This explains the secret of that intercommunity of gods and religions, which the liberal and candid Heathens (as many now affect to call them,) universally allowed of, but which the bigoted Jews would not conform to; who were therefore hated and despised for their unchangeable singularity, by which they condemned all their neighbours. The Jews were indeed faulty in despising and hating the Gentiles, and were really chargeable with bigotry in some respects: yet the worshippers of JEHOVAH could not possibly have any intercommunity with the worshippers of the devil; Satan himself would have aimed at no more, and the whole law of God forbade it. For the same reason, different modes of irreligion, or false religion, may admit of this candid intercommunity; but true Christianity cannot thus be warped: and therefore many, who pride themselves upon their candour and liberality of sentiment, can scarcely find words sufficiently to express their contempt of those bigots, who explicitly declare that there is but one way of a sinner's acceptance and sanctification; and that no man, who is not interested in the merits and atoning sacrifice of the divine Saviour, and a partaker of his regenerating Spirit, can possibly obtain heaven, or escape condemnation, whatever be his moral character among men. Yet all Christians should maintain this scriptural ground: and then by showing others all civil respect and tender kindness; by manifesting continually a disposition to sympathize with them, and a readiness to relieve them, with modesty and courteousness; they should endeavour to convince them that, not proud bigotry and uncharitable severity, but regard to the truth of God's word, and a reluctance to do any thing to buoy up the groundless hopes of those who neglect the great salvation of the gospel, influence them in making this profession. V. 19, 20. The Israelites are called "the sons and daughters" of JEHOVAH in respect to privilege; while, because of their character, that relation is disowned. (5)—Having received their natural and national existence, and all their peculiar advantages, from the Lord, they so provoked him by multiplied idolatries, that he abhorred, or disowned them, and as it were turned them out of his house; and declared that he would withdraw his protection and withhold his wonted interposition in their favour: and even afterwards, whilst they groaned under their miseries, that he would look on as an unconcerned spectator, until they were brought to the utmost extremities; because they were a froward and perverse generation, destitute alike of faith and faithfulness. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. 26:30. Is. 63:10. Zech. 11:7—9.)

V. 21. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ez. 20:5. 34:11—17.) Many of the judgments inflicted on the offending Israelites, by the Canaanites, Philistines, Midianites, Chaldeans, and others, might form a partial accomplishment of this prediction: but the apostle applies it, no doubt most justly, to the calling of the Gentiles into the church. (Rom. 10:19.)—The Jews, proud of their abused privileges, had not only treated the heathen as foolish and vile, which, as given up to base idolatries, they doubtless were; but even as dogs compared with themselves, to whom as children they supposed that all spiritual blessings exclusively and unalterably belonged; (Note, Matt. 15:25—28.) and it therefore provoked the jealousy of the Jews to a degree of indignant rage, to see them enter into the church, and admitted to equal privileges with themselves. This eventually tended to their own entire exclusion; and has even to this very day exceedingly exasperated them against Christianity. (Note, 1 Thes. 2:13—16.)

V. 22. The tremendous effects of the wrath of God are here represented under the metaphor of a fire, which, kindled upon the surface of the earth, should burn even to its centre; and, according to a very general notion of the ancients, quite through to the place of miserable departed spirits. The word here used, (שָׂרָפָה, sharaph, Sept.) signifying 'the unseen state,' seems to intimate that the wrath of God would pursue its objects, after death, to that place "where their worm never dieth, and the fire is not quenched." V. 24. Serpents of the dust.—Or, 'serpents which crawl upon and lick the dust.'—(The word (שָׂרָפָה) rendered "serpents," is used by Micah in a similar sense. Mic. 7:17. Heb.)—The marginal references best explain the highly poetical language of these prophetic denunciations.

works in Egypt and at the Red Sea. (Notes, Ez. 32:11-14. Num. 14:13-19. Ez. 20:7-9.) He therefore determined to spare the nation: and he still, for similar purposes, continues the Jews as living witnesses of the truth of the Scriptures. For no doubt, the triumphs of modern infidels would have been more insolent, and their blasphemies more abundant, had there been no traces of such a people as Israel any where discoverable upon earth.—By a bold figure, the sacred poet ascribes to the Almighty, language taken from the conduct of men, who are deterred from such things, as they have a strong inclination to, through fear of disagreeable consequences. As God abhorred idolatry, pride, and blasphemy, and was determined not to give this occasion for them, he is said "to fear the wrath of the enemy;" because he acted as men do when thus afraid. (Notes, Gen. 6:6, 7. 2 Kings 18:28-35.)

V. 29. The Israelites, had they been wise, would have attended to these warnings and instructions, and reflected on the consequences of their conduct; and so avoided all such things as led to personal or national ruin, and observed all such as conducted to prosperity and felicity: thus they would have "considered their latter end."—For, notwithstanding all the predictions which had been delivered, they would certainly have prospered had they been obedient; and notwithstanding the divine decrees, it is equally certain that none will come short of eternal life, but the impenitent and unbelieving.—It is so agreeable to the divine holiness and love that his rational creatures should be obedient and happy, and that sinners should repent, believe, and be saved, that he is represented as desiring and even wishing for it. This must be understood in the same manner as his "fearing the wrath of the enemy;" with reference to the conduct which he approves in us, and not with respect to his own government of the world, which is in all respects perfectly wise, righteous, faithful, and good, though often too deep for our investigation. (Notes, 5:28, 29. Ps. 81:13. Ez. 33:11. Matt. 23:37-39. Luke 19:42-44.)

V. 30, 31. Unless the Israelites had provoked God by their crimes to sell them as slaves, and to deliver them, as malefactors shut up in prison, into the hands of their enemies, no power could possibly have prevailed against them. For he would have continued to be their omnipotent Protector and Helper; and in that case, they would have been uniformly victorious over all assailants, according to the examples recorded in Scripture. (Marg. Ref. a, b.) How amazingly different from this has their condition been during above 1700 years!—The idols of the Gentiles, on which they professed to depend, had never equalled the wondrous works of JEHOVAH, even by their own confession; and therefore they could never have prevailed against Israel, had not their Rock and Defender been turned from them, yea, turned against them. (Marg. Ref. c.)

V. 32, 33. The nation of Israel, though planted a generous vine, of an excellent stock, in a rich soil, and with every advantage of culture, did not bring forth the good fruits of righteousness: (Notes, Is. 5:2-7. Jer. 2:20, 21.) nay, it even rivalled Sodom and Gomorrah in wickedness: and as this conduct in them was more dishonourable to God, and more poisonous to the minds of others, by prejudicing them against God and religion, it would therefore be eventually more bitter to themselves.—Thus Josephus describes the Jews before their ruin by the Romans:—"They were a more atheistical generation than the inhabitants of Sodom."—"There was no act of wickedness that was not committed: nor can one imagine any thing so bad that they did not do; endeavouring, publicly as well as privately, to excel one another, both in impiety towards God and injustice to their neighbours."—"Had not the Romans destroyed them, the earth would have opened and swallowed them, or fire from heaven would have consumed them." (Marg. Ref. Note, Ez. 16:48-51.)

V. 34, 35. All the wickedness of Israel was noticed and registered, as in a book, by the Lord, until the appointed time of vengeance: and it would then appear that it had been reserved in store, to be produced against them, to manifest his justice in their punishment; even as a man seals up his treasures, and deposits them in a secure place till he wants to use them.—For it belongeth to God, the Judge of all, to execute vengeance on the wicked; it is his peculiar office and prerogative; so that none are authorized to take vengeance, except as commissioned by him. (Note, Num. 31:2.) But in perfect wisdom he waits the most proper season; and though his judgments seem to linger, they in reality make haste and are at hand. For when sinners deem themselves most secure, and suppose that their foot stands firm, he causes it to slide in due time, and they suddenly fall into destruction. (Marg. Ref. Note, Heb. 10:28-31.)

V. 36. The Lord pleaded the cause of the pious remnant of Israel in every age; he rescued the Jews from the Babylonish captivity; the Messiah appeared in the appointed season; and the nation has from time to time received many gracious deliverances: but as this sacred poem relates to the same events which have already been considered in the preceding chapters; this part also certainly refers to mercies still reserved for them, even their future conversion and restoration.—When the appointed period shall arrive, the Lord will plead their cause, and avenge them on all their oppressors; he will change his conduct towards them, as a man does when he repents; but not till he has brought them into utter distress, so that none shall be any where shut up, and exempted from hostile depredations; or left, who shall not be carried captive, and at the mercy of their conquerors: and he will continue their punishment, till they are brought to renounce all dependence on human help. (Notes, Is. 63: 15-19. 64: Ez. 36:25-32. Hos. 2:14-17. 3:4, 5. 14:1-8. Zech. 12:9-14. Rom. 11:25-32.)—This evidently predicts the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, the consequent desolations of their land, and the long-continued dispersion which has ensued.

V. 37-39. It is most obvious to understand this, not as a reproach cast on the Jews by their enemies, but as the rebuke of God in his providence; exposing Israel's folly in sacrificing to worthless idols, and as it were feasting them on their abundance. Let the idolaters, in their distress, apply for help to the objects of their abominable worship, and not expect it from JEHOVAH whom they had so basely forsaken. (Notes, Judg. 10:13, 14. Hos. 2:8, 9.) But the rejection and crucifixion of the Messiah may be considered as a continuation of these idolatries, and the completion of their national guilt: and of all this complicated wickedness he will make the Jews deeply sensible, before he appears to deliver them from their present miseries. Then they will learn that there is no God but JEHOVAH; that he alone is able to save and 43 Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people; for he will 'avenge the blood of his servants, and will render vengeance to his adversaries, and will be merciful unto his land, and to his people.

44 And Moses came and spake all the words of this song in the ears of the people, he, and Hoshea the son of Nun.

45 And Moses made an end of speaking all these words to all Israel.

46 And he said unto them, Set your hearts unto all the words which I testify among you this day; which ye shall command your children to observe, to do all the words of this law.

to destroy, to afflict and prosper, and that none can deliver him out of his hand. (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Sam. 2:4-8.)

V. 40-42. "Lifting up the hand" was at that time customary in taking solemn oaths: (Marg. Ref.s.) and when JEHOVAH swore by his own self-existence and eternity, the sentence, whether of mercy or of judgment, became irrevocable and irreversible. And therefore, if the Lord prepared for vengeance, as a man for battle, and put his hand to the dreadful work of executing judgment on the wicked, he would do it effectually; nor should any of those, who had provoked his indignation, be able either to resist or escape. Especially he will revenge himself upon those, who at any time have injured his people. (Notes, Is. 34: 63:1-6. Rev. 19:11-21.)—The words rendered "from the beginning of revenges on the enemy;" are obscure, and may mean, "from the highest to the lowest of the enemy."—This conclusion seems to relate to the final deliverance of Israel, and the destruction of all who oppose that deliverance, and of every enemy of God and his people; and future events may hereafter illustrate this part of the prophecy, as history has explained the foregoing parts of it.

V. 43. When the Gentiles were called into the church, and the Jews who opposed it were severely punished, this prophecy began to be accomplished; but when upon their future conversion, the fullness of the Gentiles shall be brought in, and all opposers be destroyed, it will be completely fulfilled. The restoration of the Jews to their own land, and its subsequent fertility, seem also predicted. (Notes, Rom. 11:11-15. 15:8-13.)

V. 45-52. Moses, having delivered the preceding prophetic song to Israel, with earnest attestations and exhortations, continuing the "labour of love" to his latest breath, received the summons from God to take a view of the promised land, and then close his eyes in death. (Notes, 3:23-28. 34:1-6. Num. 20:10-13, 22-28. 27:15-17.)—The expression, "gathered unto thy people," here relate to the soul, not to the body; for none of Moses's people were buried on mount Abarim: yet the words are not used exclusively of the righteous. (Note, Gen. 25:7, 8.)—The Israelites should have learnt, that as Moses felt short of the promised land, and could not bring them into possession of it, so his law did not contain a perfect revelation of God's will, but they were to expect something beyond it. Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14. Divine truths, if proposed with solemnity and affection, and accompanied by fervent prayers, resemble the gentle dews and rains which refresh and fructify the earth: and while numbers, alas! turn away from instruction with neglect and dislike, many in every age welcome the blessing, and show the beneficial tendency of it in their holy and useful lives. (Note, Ps. 72:4-7.)—When the glorious perfections of God, and his dealings with mankind in general, and with every individual, and their real character and conduct towards him, shall be completely made known to the whole world, either his mercy in their salvation, or his justice in their condemnation, will be universally acknowledged by all. In every controversy between the great Creator, and his rational creatures, the heavens and the earth, and every part of the world, will be witnesses for him "to declare his righteousness," and to convict and silence all who have rebelled against him: for the benefits which he has already conferred, and which he is still conferring, are so strong obligations entirely to love and serve him, that their ingratitude and disobedience admit of no excuse. (Note, Rom. 1:18-20.) Yea, every advantage, by which any of them are distinguished from others, increases their obligation and aggravates the guilt of transgression.—In our own case we should recollect that our favoured land, not less desirable in many respects than Canaan itself; the place of our abode, if peculiarly pleasant or suitable; our temporal provision, and the abundance which many possess, with a variety of other advantages national and personal; are as much the special gift and appointment of God to us, as the land of promise was to Israel, and as really demand our gratitude and cheerful obedience.—We too, as well as they are singularly favoured with the light of revelation and the ordinances of true religion, and are professedly the Lord's people. We hear continually of a redemption far more precious than that of Israel out of Egyptian bondage, and are invited to partake its inestimable blessings: but unless we are "redeemed from all iniquity, and purified to the Redeemer as a peculiar people, zealous of good works," all our privileges will only increase our condemnation.—And alas! the dark and deep stains of every atrocious wickedness, which mark our national character, are not "the spots of God's children," but demonstrate that in general we are Christians only in name; and comparing our mercies with our conduct, it may well be said to us, "Do ye thus requite the Lord, O foolish people and unwise? Is not he thy Father that hath bought thee? hath he not made thee, and established thee?"—Indeed he found us all dead in sin, and slaves to Satan, and basely in love with our chains; and even when "warned to flee from the wrath to come," and invited to liberty and felicity, we were disposed to cleave to the world and shrink from the difficulties and perils of a godly life. But his Spirit quickened our souls, stirred us up from the dust, sweetly and powerfully showed us our danger and our refuge, gave us effectual assistance, and led us in paths which we had not before known. Thus we became the redeemed servants of God, "his portion and the lot of his inheritance;" yea, his beloved children and heirs of eternal glory; and were favoured with holy consolations and earnestness of heavenly felicity. Yet, alas! how often have we all merited the reproach of ingratitude and folly! How frequently have we "grieved his Holy Spirit," even if we have been kept from dishonouring his name! How often have we moved him to jealousy by our inordinate attachment to earthly objects! How many times have we provoked him to hide his face from us, and to chasten us for our sins, "that we might not be condemned with the world!" In short how much reason do we find on the retrospect, to humble ourselves before God, and to plead with him for his mercy's sake, to pardon our sins, to renew our souls, and "to establish our goings in his ways, that our footsteps slip not!"

V. 15-35. It is a striking proof of human depravity, that prosperity almost always increases pride and ungodliness, as well as luxury and sensuality. Our national riches and successes have manifestly produced this hateful effect: like "Jeshurun, we have grown fat and kicked;" and the most daring infidelity, impiety, and profligacy, which abound on every side, prove that we have forsaken God, and provoked him to jealousy, even as the Israelites did by their multiplied idolatries and enormous crimes. Indeed it is an observation, which every reflecting man has had occasion to make, that many who in adversity or low circumstances behaved well, and seemed favourable to religion, when became prosperous and wealthy grow insolent, and profane, and seem to say unto scenes, which would be much better conceived by the Israelites than they can be by us. When JEHOVAH came down, to manifest his glory, and promulgate his law, from mount Sinai, either the splendour of his majesty illuminated the distant mountains of Seir and Paran; or his approach was preceded by some glorious appearances from those mountains, as the rising sun is ushered in by the light of the dawning day: or, as some think, the words relate to the continued and glorious presence of God with Israel, while they were in the desert, near to those mountains. (Notes, Ps. 68:7,8. Hab. 3:3-5.) At mount Sinai, however, he was attended by "ten thousands of saints," or holy ones, or holy angels; who ministered to him in that grand display of his divine majesty. (Notes, Ex. 19:16-20. Ps. 68:17. Gal. 3:19-22. Heb. 2:1-4. Jude 14-16.) Thence he gave the law, not only speaking it with a loud voice from the midst of the fire, but writing it upon tables of stone, which he delivered to Israel as a sacred deposit; and he enforced obedience to it with his whole power and authority; for it "went from his right hand for them." It is called a fiery law, not only as delivered from the midst of fire, but because of the fiery indignation to which all transgressors are doomed, except as they find mercy through the gospel. Its sanctifying effects also, when written in the hearts of believers by the finger of the Spirit, where, as fire, it consumes the lusts, purifies the affections, and assimilates the soul to its own holy nature, may perhaps be intimated.

V. 3. Even the promulgation of this fiery law was the effect of the Lord's special love to Israel; and in connexion with the gospel, as delivered to them under the legal ceremonies, (the shadows of good things to come,) it was the grand means of rendering them holy, and consequently safe and happy. (Notes, Ex. 20:1. John 1:17.)—As externally a holy people, they were taken under his immediate protection, while they "sat at his feet;" and received his instructions; even as all his true saints are "kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation." (Marg. Ref. Note, 1 Pet. 1:3-5.)

V. 4, 5. The law was given from God, and by Moses; who was also the mediator of that covenant, by which the congregation of Jacob's posterity was incorporated, and which secured to them their temporal inheritance, while they retained their national fidelity. Yet the law itself, as comprising the whole revelation made to them, was their most valuable inheritance; as it showed them the way of peace and life eternal, and ensured these blessings to all who truly attended to it.—In giving the law, Moses acted as a prophet: but he was also in reality "a king;" for he possessed all the authority, and performed all the functions of a king; though he neither took upon him the name or the state of royalty, nor received any tribute from Israel; and though he joined with him the heads of the people, and of the tribes, both as his council, and as subordinate magistrates. (Note, 18:15-19.)—Some suppose, that JEHOVAH himself is here meant; and doubtless he was King over Israel in all ages, and in an especial manner, whoever were his deputies: for in this sense, the judges were kings, as really as David and Solomon, though not so called.

V. 6. The order in which the tribes are here blessed, is different from all those elsewhere observed.—Reuben the first-born, though degraded by Jacob, and superseded by Judah as to the precedence in the encampments, is here first mentioned. (Note, Gen. 49:3,4.) Notwithstanding these disgraces, and the rebellion in the wilderness, under Dathan, Abiram, and On, in which many of this tribe perished, Moses predicted that it should not be destroyed, but should be multiplied to a great number; by which he also expressed his cordial good-will to them, notwithstanding their personal misconduct towards him. As the Reubenites, having received their inheritance east of Jordan, were preparing to pass over Jordan, and fight for their brethren, we may also suppose that some reference is had to this circumstance, and that the blessing implies a prayer for their protection.—The Septuagint join Simeon with Reuben in this benediction: but it is probable, that they did so merely because Simeon is not mentioned in the chapter. (Note, 8.)

V. 7. (Note, Gen. 49:8-12.) Judah was the governing and conquering tribe; and Moses prayed that he might be protected and rendered victorious, when he went forth to battle, and be brought back triumphant to his people; and that the tribe might have sufficient forces from among themselves, and from the other tribes; and especially the help of the LORD OF HOSTS himself. This was evidently a prophecy which was fulfilled to Judah till the days of Christ, and in him shall be accomplished to the end.—Some commentators interpret the clause, "bring him to his people," as predicting the coming of the Messiah. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8. (Note, Gen. 49:5-7.)—Levi and Simeon had been left under a severe rebuke by Jacob; and the tribe of Simeon had in nowise distinguished itself; on the contrary, it had been notoriously guilty in the transgression of Baal-peor, and was greatly reduced in the wilderness. (Notes, Num. 25:6-8. 26:14.) A portion therefore was assigned it within the lot of Judah, with which it was in great measure incorporated; and perhaps for that reason, it was not separately mentioned in this prophecy. (Note, Josh. 19:1-9.)—But the curse of Levi had been turned into a blessing, on account of the transactions here referred to. Levi was the dying prophet's own tribe; but he only mentioned it as the tribe which the Lord had chosen for himself; and, as the welfare of Israel was so immediately connected with the Levitical priesthood, he expatiated the more in his benediction and prophecy concerning it. The Urim and Thummim, or illuminations and perfections, (Note, Ex. 28:30.) by which the high-priest inquired of the Lord, formed one distinguishing token of his favour to this tribe; and Moses prophetically prayed for the continuance of these to the succeeding high-priests, during many generations; which implied also the continuance of all needful gifts and graces to every order of that tribe, that they might fill up their several places, to the glory of God, and the maintenance of true religion in Israel.—It is however confessed by the Jews, that the "Urim and Thummim" were lost in the Babylonish captivity, and that nothing was substituted in their room: but in our "Holy One," our great High-Priest, whom Aaron and his sons feebly shadowed forth, the things signified remain, and from him are communicated to all his true ministers and people, according to their measure. (Notes, Eph. 4:7-13.)—There were two Miribahs, one of which is also called Massah, where probably Aaron and the Levites remarkably distinguished themselves, in opposing the murmurs of the people. (Marg. Ref. t.) At the other Meribah Aaron was found faulty: (Note, Num. 20:10-13.) yet there is a tradition that the tribe of Levi approved themselves faithful. The prophet, however, in this passage, seems to have referred to some remarkable instances not elsewhere recorded, in which the Levites were tried, and honourably distinguished themselves in the cause of God.

V. 9. In the provocation of the golden calf, the Levites, at God's command, inflicted punishment on the ringleaders, without respect to rank or relation, and in a very zealous and impartial manner. (Note, Ex. 32:27-29.) Perhaps some of their own tribe and near relations were deeply involved in that guilt, whom they no more spared than other criminals; and though men might censure this severity, yet God highly approved of it, and honoured those who so honoured him. (Notes, Num. 25:6-13. Luke 14:25-27. 2 Cor. 5:16.)

V. 10. Besides offering sacrifices, officiating at the sanctuary, and acting as magistrates, the priests and Levites were the authorized public teachers, through the cities and villages in the several tribes of Israel. Too many of them, however, in after ages, were more attentive to their perquisites than to their duty; (as it is generally the case in similar collective bodies;) and the ignorance and wickedness of the people were frequently chargeable upon their negligence and scandalous lives; so that the prophets were extraordinary messengers sent from God, especially to reprove the priests and Levites, and stir them up to their duty.—Some learned men indeed think, that the prophets were the only teachers of Israel; and that, publicly instructing the people was no regular part of the office assigned to the priests or Levites, except as some of them acted as magistrates. But the preceding statement accords far better with the language of Scripture, here and elsewhere. (Marg. reading and Marg. Ref. on it. Note, 2 Chr. 17:7-9. 30:21,22. Ezra 7:6-10. Neh. 8:5-7. Mal. 2:4-9.)

V. 11. The Levites had no landed inheritance, but were maintained out of the portion which God had reserved for himself; by which their interests were connected with the support of his worship. On this provision Moses predicted a special blessing from God. Some indeed interpret this clause, of their abilities for their sacred ministry, that the Lord would both enable them for their work, and prosper them in it.—The faithful discharge of their office might give offence, and so raise up enemies against them; while avarice would prompt numbers to defraud them, or even to seek the abolition of the whole order, as useless, that they might seize upon the revenues: but vengeance was prophetically denounced against all who should hate them, or rise up against them, on any account whatever; as enemies to God and religion, and even to the true interests of the nation. (Note, Mal. 3:7-12.)

V. 12. (Note, Gen. 49:27.) The tribe of Benjamin had their inheritance adjoining to mount Zion; and part of Jerusalem, and as some suppose, the temple itself, was situated within it. This was a distinguishing token of the Lord's love to them: the sanctuary was their security while they adhered to it; for they were covered by the protection of the Lord continually, and had his power engaged in their behalf.—This tribe adhered to the family of David and the worship of God, when the ten tribes revolted and apostatized; and thus it became inseparably united and incorporated with that of Judah; and was preserved in consequence, when the ten tribes were scattered among the nations. (Marg. Ref. b.)

V. 13-16. It is here predicted, that the inheritance of the tribes descended from Joseph, should, through the blessing of God, be peculiarly fertile. By the seasonable rains and refreshing dews,—those precious things which come down from above and make the earth fruitful,—and by the springs which issue from beneath, and the benign influences of the sun, all kinds of valuable productions, peculiar to each revolving moon in succession, would be abundantly afforded. The mountains and hills of Joseph would grow vines, and olives, and timber-trees; and from beneath would be dug metals and minerals, and stone for building. In short, their land should abound with every precious production, that the earth and its fulness can afford; all which, with a variety of spiritual privileges, would descend upon these tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, from the good-will and peculiar kindness of JEHOVAH.—The first appearance of the Lord in the burning bush, seems to have been recollected with grateful pleasure by the dying prophet; and he characterized Him, who would thus bless the sons of Joseph, from this circumstance, that he condescended, as “the God of Abraham” and of his seed, to dwell in a mean bush; and had now taken up his more abiding residence in the midst of Israel, who was equally unworthy of such an honour; but would in like manner be preserved by his gracious presence. (Notes, Ez. 32-6.)—Joseph had been especially beloved by Jacob; he was renowned for piety, wisdom, and usefulness; his memory was dear to Israel and to Moses. On these accounts Moses enlarged in blessing his posterity, which evidently refers to the prophetic blessing Jacob had pronounced on him, under the same title of “him that was separated from his brethren.” (Note, Gen. 49:22-25.)

V. 17. Joseph, as if he had been the first-born, had the birthright and the double portion, instead of Reuben; and Joshua, under whom Canaan was conquered, was of the tribe of Ephraim. Many proofs were given by these tribes of their courage, and they were signalized with much success, being powerful among their brethren and victorious over their enemies. This is figuratively noted by Joseph's being as “the firstling of his bullock, and his horns being as the horns of unicorns, with which he should push the people together to the ends of the earth,” or to the extremities of the land. The descendants of Joseph were also remarkable for their numbers; but in both respects Ephraim exceeded Manasseh, as Jacob had foretold, and Moses here attested; though Ephraim was much decreased in the wilderness, and was then less numerous than Manasseh. (Marg. Ref. on Num. 26:34, 37. Notes, Gen. 48:15-22.)

V. 18, 19. Zebulun and Issachar, sons of Leah, were united in this blessing, and their inheritances in Canaan, as appointed by lot, lay together. (Notes, Josh. 19:10-23.) It was predicted that Zebulun would prosper, and consequently “rejoice in his going out,” that is, say some, as a merchant; “for he was a haven of ships.” (Notes, Gen. 49:13-15.) Thus “he sucked the abundance of the seas and of the treasures hid in the sand,” that is, he reaped, as it were, the harvest of the sea, or worked its mines. In this case, we may understand his “calling the people to the mountain,” of the endeavours which those of this tribe would use, in bringing the strangers, with whom they traded, acquainted with true religion.—But, as the Zebulunites were situated at a distance from the Mediterranean sea, and upon the sea of Tiberias; perhaps their fishery was intended, and not their foreign trade: and in this way, the sea yields a revenue more valuable than the productions of mines of gold, and almost equal to the harvest of the plain.—Of Issachar it is foretold, that he should prosper, and “rejoice in his tents,” as a shepherd tending his flock. And both Zebulun and Issachar would be zealous for the ordinances of God, and in “offering the sacrifices of righteousness” out of their just gains; and would use their influence in persuading others to accompany them to the mountain at Jerusalem, on which Moses foresaw that the temple would be built, but which lay very distant from the lot of these tribes, which was in Galilee.

V. 20, 21. (Note, Gen. 49:19.) The increase of Gad is here predicted, as the immediate work of the Lord, and to be acknowledged with adoring gratitude. When this tribe, in conjunction with Reuben, obtained his petition for a possession east of Jordan, of the first-fruits of Israel's conquests, “he provided the first part for himself, and was seated in a portion of the lawgiver,” that is, in the portion which Moses the lawgiver had allotted him: (Notes, Num. 32:29-41.) for most of the tribes had their inheritance assigned them by Joshua and Eleazar: in this he dwelt as a lion; and when any of the surrounding nations attacked him, he not only tore their army, enfeebling their power, but their head too in bringing them under subjection. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Chr. 5:18-22. 12:15.)—After the Gadites were established in their own settlements, they, and the tribe of Reuben and the half tribe of Manasseh, marched boldly across Jordan along with the rest of Israel, to assist in executing the righteous judgments of God on the Canaanites. (Notes, Josh. 1:12-15. 22:1-4.)

V. 22. (Note, Gen. 49:16, 17.) Jacob had compared Dan to a serpent, but Moses likened him to a young lion, when leaping from Bashan he irresistibly seized his prey. In Samson, who was of this tribe, both these emblems were realized: and when the Danites suddenly seized the city at the northern extremity of Canaan, they were like the young lion leaping on the defenceless cattle. (Judg. 15: 16: 18.)

V. 23. (Note, Gen. 49:21.) Great peace and prosperity, from the special favour of the Lord, were predicted to Naphtali: and it is a tradition of the Jewish writers, that though the lot of this tribe lay in the northern part of the land, yet it was so remarkably fruitful, that they generally brought the first-fruits before the other tribes.—The lot of Naphtali lay to the south of that country on which Dan seized; and near to the sea of Tiberias: ("possess thou the sea and the south:" Heb.) for the situation of this tribe in relation to the Danites seems intended.

V. 24, 25. (Note, Gen. 49:20.) Asher signifies blessed: and to this tribe Moses predicted a numerous increase, with much love and friendship from their brethren; and likewise most excellent olive-oil in vast abundance.—Some suppose that the promise, "Thy shoes shall be iron and brass," referred to the productive mines of iron and brass, which abounded in Asher's lot, and were thus continually under his feet; but it has long been interpreted as a proverbial expression; which indeed is the most natural and obvious meaning of the words. If a man were about to travel in rough roads, or to climb craggy precipices, or to be stationed upon a slippery eminence, it would be useful for him to have plates or spikes, of iron or brass fixed to his shoes: and, in like manner, the Lord would prepare Asher for every difficulty which he would have to encounter. According to this interpretation, the words, "And as thy days, thy strength," are explanatory of the preceding clause, and signify, that as the day of trial required, strength should be communicated; or, as some expound the passage, "As thy wants, so shall be thy sufficiency." (Note, Eph. 6:14—17.)

V. 26. Moses added to this prophetic blessing on each tribe in particular, a declaration of the glory of God and the happiness of Israel in general, and these were his last words which are recorded.—The "God of Jeshurun" (Note, 32:15.) "rides upon the heavens;" that is, he comes in glorious majesty, and with irresistible force, to defend his people, and destroy their enemies; and in so doing displays all his excellencies, his wisdom, justice, truth, and love, in the most conspicuous manner. (Notes, Ps. 104:3. Is. 19:1.)

V. 27, 28. The eternity, immutability, and almighty power of God, form the secure Refuge and the firm support of his people in all dangers, pressures, and difficulties: for his arms of everlasting and unfailing power are put under them to sustain them. (Note, 32:4.) The word rendered "Refuge," literally signifies Dwelling-place, for God is their Home, Rest, and Felicity. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 90:1, 2. John 6:52—58.) This would secure to Israel the conquest of Canaan, and enable them to execute the divine command in the destruction of its inhabitants: and it would likewise ensure their peaceable and prosperous possession, so long as they were obedient, and did not forfeit their national covenant.—Alone: (28) Note, Num. 23:9.

V. 29. Israel, being thus saved by the Lord, and rendered victorious by his power, as their Shield and Sword, would become terrible to their enemies; who would be constrained to dissemble their enmity, and yield a feigned or reluctant submission, as the Gibeonites did to Joshua. Thus Israel would be a most happy nation, and have most extraordinary privileges.—But the true "Israel of God" possess all these blessings in the noblest sense, and have them secured to them by still more precious promises, and an incomparably better covenant. (Notes, Ps. 84:11, 12. Rom. 8:28—39. Heb. 11: 13—16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7. The faithful servants of God dare not flatter men in their sins, or shun to declare his whole counsel as far as they are able, even when that renders it necessary to denounce the most tremendous curses against all impotent sinners; but at the same time, their hearts are full of the most compassionate and tender love; and could those whom their faithfulness exasperates, witness their affectionate desires and fervent prayers in secret for them, it must in some degree abate their resentment. (Note, Jer. 13:15—17.) Nay, even the awful warnings, which are most convincing and alarming to the conscience, spring from tender concern for the eternal welfare of sinners; and they who are hated for giving them, commonly live and die praying earnestly, that all the blessings of the new covenant may be communicated to their enraged persecutors. (Acts 7:51—60.)—Though the divine law is "holy, just, and good;" yet when fully explained and enforced, and when applied by the Holy Spirit, it is still "a fiery law;" and sometimes occasions terrors, as great, and at last as well grounded, as those which appalled Israel, when they heard it from the midst of the fire upon mount Sinai. (Note, Heb. 12:18—21.) How intolerable then is the thought of being compelled to meet the Judge, at the consummation of all things, to receive the eternal sentence according to it!—Yet this "fiery law" is most useful to show us our need of a Saviour, and the nature, glory, and preciousness of his salvation: and when delivered to us by Jesus Christ, and written in our hearts by his Spirit, it peculiarly evidences the Lord's love to us, and directs us how to express our love to him. They, who have thus received the law from the hands of the Saviour, are "his saints;" who, "being justified by faith, have peace with God through him;" and, secure under his protection, they sit down at his feet daily to derive further instruction from his words, acknowledging him as their King, and yielding him prompt and willing obedience.—The blessings with which the Lord blesses this "church of the first born," are suited to each person's case, and are sufficient for them in every situation: and whilst every one properly fills his appointed place, all become blessings to others and receive benefit from them; whether appointed to the magistracy or ministry, or in a more private situation; and whether intrusted with wealth, or called upon to labour for bread, or even when, incapable of labour, to subsist upon charity.

V. 8—17. They who are employed in the sacred ministry, should be tried persons, approved of God, possessed of enlightened understandings, sound judgments, and upright hearts; that, being filled with zeal for the glory of God, and love to souls, they may not respect the persons of men, nor fear their frowns. They should be entirely superior to the allurement of covetousness and ambition, and even to an undue bias of natural affection; not desiring the advancement or affluence of their brethren or children. For their most important employment consists in teaching men the truths, precepts, and ordinances of God, with all faithfulness and diligence, that they may observe his word and keep his covenant. They should therefore give themselves wholly to the study of the Scriptures; and pour out their fervent prayers to the Lord, to increase their ability, and to prosper the work of their hands; and leave it to him to provide for them and for their families after them, as well as to defend them and plead their cause against all who rise up against them. It is also the duty of all to pray for the ministers of the Lord; that he would both give his abundant blessing on those who are faithful and able, and communicate wisdom and grace to all who bear the sacred office, that they may be rendered blessings to the people; and also perpetuate a succession of such ministers to future generations, and send forth skilful, faithful, and successful labourers into every part of the earth.—To be situated near the lively ordinances is a precious gift from the Lord to his beloved: and they, who value and improve this privilege, will find their situation so secure and comfortable, that they will not be induced to change it for any temporal convenience, emolument, or indulgence.—We should thankfully receive from the blessing of the Lord, those valuable productions, which the fruitful earth yields through the successive seasons of the year, by the genial influences of the heavens above. But those good gifts which come down from "the Father of lights," through the "rising of the Sun of righteousness," and the pouring out of his Spirit, are infinitely more precious: and these belong to all who are separated from others by faith and holiness. For he, who once deigned to dwell in the bush, still dwells in all his people, to sanctify and preserve them: and thus "the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance."

V. 18—29. Happy are they who, through the blessing of God on any honest occupation, are enabled to maintain their families, and have a heart to consecrate their gain unto the Lord; who shrink not from labour, and freely incur expense, in offering "spiritual sacrifices of righteousness, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ;" and who zealously improve every opportunity and advantage to bring others to join with them in so reasonable a service. Having chosen and secured, through the grace of God, "the first part for themselves," even "that good part which shall never be taken from them," (Note, Luke 10:38-41.) what can they do so becoming and profitable, as to assist their neighbours in seeking the same inheritance?—But in thus decidedly joining with the Lord against his enemies, they must expect opposition, and they will need to unite the boldness of the lion, the wisdom of the serpent, and the harmlessness of the dove in their character and conduct. Being "satisfied, however, with the favour of the Lord, and filled with his blessing," and "being acceptable to their brethren," and useful to their fellow-sinners, they may well bear this trial. For all difficulties are rendered advantageous to true believers: and if their way be rough, their "feet shall be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," and their strength in every case proportioned to the emergency. (Note, 2 Cor. 12:7-10.)—No words can express the glorious excellencies of "the God of Jeshurun," or the privileges and felicity of his believing people. The righteousness in which they are justified is everlasting, and their salvation is secure. Being one with Christ by his life-giving Spirit, they are already "saved in the LORD," "the eternal God is their" present "Refuge," his everlasting arms form their unfailing support; all his perfections are engaged in their behalf; he will hasten to their assistance with invincible force whenever their enemies assault them; and silence all the accusations of their malicious slanderers: (Note, Is. 54:15-17.) he will guard their peace and character, as well as the life of their souls; he "will choose their inheritance" for them, and put them in possession of it; and there shall they dwell alone, (28) when their inward foes shall all be slain, and the devil and his angels driven away into everlasting punishment. There shall they be filled with the love of their God and Saviour, and be perfected in love to him and to each other, and all their employment shall be praise and grateful adoration. There will the felicity of every happy inhabitant reciprocally enhance that of all the rest; nor shall any emulation remain, but which shall most love and glorify the supreme Object of their united affections and adoration, and the Source of all their joys.—God help us to seek, and set our affections on those things which are above, and to detach our souls from earthly, polluted, perishing objects; that we may not have our lot in the regions of darkness and despair, but with "the Israel of God" in the realms of love and bliss ineffable.

NOTES.—CHAP. XXXIV. V. 1-4. The last chapter closed the words and writings of Moses, and this chapter must have been added by another hand: but it is uncertain whether by Joshua, or by Samuel, or by some other prophet. Some indeed maintain, that Moses himself wrote it, by the Spirit of prophecy. This however is not at all probable: but by whomsoever it was written, the information must have been originally communicated by immediate revelation. Perhaps the three last verses were added as late as the days of Ezra: but all the subsequent books of Scripture assume as undoubted facts the things recorded in it.—Moses appeared reluctant to leave his work; but that being finished, he manifested no unwillingness to die. He now acquiesced in the will of God who refused him an entrance into Canaan: (Note, 32:3-28.) he was animated with the immediate prospect of glory, which loosened all earthly attachments, and supplied him with strength and spirits to ascend the mountain, where he was to put off the tabernacle of his body; and it seems probable that he went alone, and died without a witness, or a companion to close his eyes.—Abarim is supposed to be a ridge of mountains, Nebo the highest mountain in that ridge, and Pisgah the summit of that mountain.—The vision of Moses was miraculously assisted, in taking a distinct and deliberate survey of the promised land, as it was afterwards divided among the tribes of Israel. (Marg. Ref.) This would gratify his endeared affection for the people: and it

5 'So Moses, the servant of the LORD, died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the LORD,

6 And he buried him in a valley, in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor: but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day.

7 And Moses was man hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated.

8 And the children of Israel wept for Moses in the plains of Moab thirty days: so the days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.

9 ¶ And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the Spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him: and the children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as the LORD commanded Moses.

was also a type of those prospects of the heavenly rest, which reconcile the believer to dissolution.

V. 5. "Moses, the servant of the LORD," was obedient unto death, and as willingly obeyed this as he had any foregoing command, though it seemed much harder.—In this he resembled Jesus Christ: but Moses died in honour, in peace, and in the most easy manner; our Saviour expired on the ignominious and torturing cross!

V. 6. The bones of Joseph were carried into Canaan to be interred: but the Lord himself, (the immediate antecedent to the pronoun he), buried the body of Moses, and so concealed it, that when this account was written no man knew of his sepulchre; and we have reason to conclude it was never afterwards found. The ministrations of angels was probably employed, but no human assistance; and we may be sure nothing was placed that could lead to a discovery. (Note, Jude 9, 10.) No doubt this precaution was used to prevent superstition and idolatry; as many ages afterwards the Israelites burnt incense to the brazen serpent which Moses made. (Note, 2 Kings 18:4.) But not being allowed to venerate the relics of their lawgiver, they seem never to have been guilty of that species of superstition which has so long disgraced the Christian church.—When Moses died, the Lord buried him; but when Christ died, he was raised from the dead: for the Mosaic dispensation was superseded by the Christian, but Christianity shall endure to the end of time.—Nothing can be conceived more directly opposite to Scripture, than the tradition, sanctioned by several ancient Christian writers, and apparently favoured by some moderns, that Moses did not die, but went to heaven alive, as Enoch and Elijah did. We should be very careful not to give any countenance to this method of opposing tradition, or vain reasonings, to the divine testimony; for it opens the door to every kind of skepticism.

V. 7. The life of Moses was remarkably divided into three periods, each consisting of forty years: during the first he sustained the rank of a courtier; during the second he was a shepherd in the wilderness; and during the third, he filled the important station of a lawgiver and "king in Jeshurun." (Ex. 7:7. Num. 33:39. Acts 7:23, 30.)—Though he lived so much longer than the most of his contemporaries, (Ps. 90:10.) he had experienced no failure in his faculties, but died, not by the course of nature, but according to the will of God, when his work was finished. Thus also Christ died in the vigour of life.—Some suppose that the shining of Moses's face continued to his death.

V. 8. The Israelites not only paid Moses the customary honour at his death, but seem to have been deeply sensible of their loss. And perhaps even those who formerly were refractory and rebellious, when he had opposed their sins, at this time sincerely lamented the loss of so faithful a friend.

V. 9. Notes, Num. 27:18-21. Josh. 1:1-9.

V. 10-12. Whether Joshua, or Samuel, or some later writer, inserted these words, they contain an acknowledgment, that the promise made to Moses had not at that time been accomplished. (Note, 18:15-19.) No prophet had arisen in all respects qualified and honoured of God as Moses had been, nor did any one arise until the coming of Christ: but he exceeded Moses as the Son does the servant; (Note, Heb. 3:1-6.) and not only was known of the Father face to face, but came forth from the bosom of the Father to reveal him, and his truth and salvation, to sinful men. Several even of the Jewish writers are sensible that this passage refers to the Messiah; for one of them writes thus:—"It cannot be but that a prophet shall at last arise like to Moses, or greater than he: for the King Messiah shall be as great or greater. Therefore these words are not to be expounded, as if there should never be such a prophet: but that in all the time of the following prophets, till the cessation of prophecy, none should arise like to Moses. But after that there shall be one like him, or rather greater than he." Doubtless this author writes

10 ¶ And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face;

11 In all the signs and the wonders, which the Lord sent him to do in the land of Egypt, to

Pharaoh, and to all his servants, and to all his land;

12 And in all that mighty hand, and in all the great terror, which Moses showed in the sight of all Israel.

absurdly enough, in supposing the cessation of prophecy to take place before the coming of the principal Prophet. Yet his testimony serves to show that the ancient Scriptures naturally induced an expectation of a subsequent and more illustrious revelation, and a far more honourable person than any who had then appeared.—Another Jewish writer says, on the words of Isaiah, "He shall be exalted, and extolled, and be very high;" (Is. 52:13.) that "the King Messiah shall be exalted above Abraham, extolled above Moses, and be very high above the angels of the ministry." Upon which Conradus Pellicanus thus glosses, and concludes his commentary, as I shall do mine, "What it is to be above the angels let the Jews explain; we can understand nothing by it, but the very Word of God, which was in the beginning with God, and was God, by whom all things were made, and without him nothing was made that was made:" viz. the Lord God of Hosts, to whom in perfect Unity, God the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, be all honour and glory for ever, Amen.' Bp. Patrick.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As we must ere long be called into the eternal world, our wisdom and happiness consist in habitual readiness for that solemn event: and if we have experienced the salvation of God, we are prepared, and should be willing to depart whenever it pleases him.—To "stand with our loins girded," diligently doing our proper work, and waiting the summons of the Lord, will best ensure those views of heavenly rest, and those foretastes of joy, which gild the prospect, and cheer the heart of believers in passing that last gloomy vale. We need not be anxious about the presence of beloved relatives, or the solace of the Lord's people or ministers in our dying moments: for should our departure be sudden, alone, or even among strangers, the love and presence of our God and Saviour will abundantly suffice. Still less should we be concerned where our bones are laid; as the burial of Christ has consecrated every spot where a believer is interred, and his omnipotent voice will at length raise us incorruptible. But we should fear leaving any occasion of sin to survivors: for the enmity and envy which follow the Lord's servants while they live, are frequently changed into superstitious regard for them after their decease; so that sometimes even their mistakes will then be espoused, and their failings imitated: and many eminent saints, now in glory, could they again revisit this lower world, would embrace that opportunity of burying, or burning, or expunging some passages out of writings that they have left behind, perhaps without intention of being made public; and which Satan has afterwards made use of as a handle against divine truth, far beside the intention of the writer, yet under the venerable sanction of his established reputation.—While respect is paid to the memory of the deceased, the living servants of God ought not to be undervalued: for, though in some respects inferior to their predecessors, God will qualify them for their work. His authority should therefore be honoured in them; and the measure of wisdom and holiness, which he has given them, esteemed and regarded. And as Jesus ever liveth to take care of his own cause, we need not mourn for the most eminent men, "as those who have no hope" that the loss will be made up, to the church of God.

THE BOOK OF JOSHUA.

WE now enter on that portion of the Old Testament, which is commonly distinguished as historical. For though the books of Moses contain a large proportion of history, and are the only authentic records existing of those primeval ages; and though several of the prophetic books are in part historical; yet these having been denominated "the law and the prophets," from the grand peculiarities of each, the books before us may properly be called historical, by way of distinction.—From the death of Moses to that of Nehemiah, at least 1050 years intervened; indeed some genealogies in Nehemiah extend beyond that period: and of this succession of ages these books contain a connected and regular narrative, which is extremely interesting to the sober student, as well as edifying to every pious reader.—If we except some Phœnician fragments, filled with inconsistencies, and of doubtful authority; and a few traditions concerning the Egyptians and Assyrians, distorted by the most extravagant relations, and evidently replete with fables; there is scarcely any thing extant, which gives us the least information of what was transacted in any of the nations of the world, during by far the greater part of this period. For it does not yet appear, that any dependence can be placed on those narratives from the eastern world, which have lately been brought into Europe, and have excited considerable attention; and which some have so highly extolled, as to insinuate, not only that they render questionable other ancient histories hitherto of approved authority, but that their testimony ought to have some weight even in opposition to the records of the Scripture. Yet it is notorious, that they are so disfigured by fable or allusion, as to be scarcely intelligible; and that they relate events of the most extravagant and incredible antiquity. Leaving these, however, till fuller investigation has shown what credit they deserve: it is obvious to remark, that Herodotus, who used to be called the father of history, is supposed to have been contemporary with Ezra and Nehemiah, the latest writers of these scriptural records: and all that he collected, concerning times long preceding his own, is generally allowed to be of doubtful authority, and blended with much that is altogether fabulous. Yet the history on which we are entering, though modern, compared with that contained in the books of Moses, commences at least 1000 years before the days of this father of history! And (except as skeptics choose to confound well-attested public miracles, wrought by the almighty God, for the most important of all purposes, with the absurd and pernicious fables of pagan writers,) the whole narrative is exceedingly probable and rational, and accords with the known character and general conduct of mankind, in the various circumstances in which they are placed. It also agrees with the most sober traditions and detached fragments of antiquity; and serves to elucidate many obscure parts of profane history, and to decide many questions in respect of ancient chronology. It also coincides with the manners and customs of those eastern regions, in the remotest ages, as far as any accounts of them have come down to us.

Many learned men have endeavoured to elucidate Scripture by passages from pagan writers; and their labours have not been useless: yet, almost uniformly, one hesitation occurs to the reflecting reader on every case; namely, a doubt whether the pagan customs were not as ancient as the scriptural narration, which they were adduced to illustrate; or whether the scriptural history and institutions were not the real source, from which the pagan notions and customs were derived. It would be a very interesting employment, to inquire how far, on the other hand, ancient history, chronology, and even geography, and various things connected with these branches of learning, are indebted to the sacred volume. For though the records here transmitted to us, principally refer to a people in many respects far from considerable, and also unjustly despised in the world; yet they continually call the reader's attention to the most ancient transactions of all the surrounding nations: so that more satisfactory information is derived from the Scriptures concerning the Egyptians, the Phœnicians or Tyrians, the Syrians, the Assyrians, the Chaldeans, and even the Medes and Persians, than from the writings of those persons who profess to give us the histories of those nations.

These considerations are suited to impress the mind of the reflecting reader with a high veneration for this part of the sacred Scripture, which beyond comparison is in all respects the most wonderful book in the world; but the nature and tendency of the history here given us should still more endear it to every real Christian. Not to anticipate the instructions which will be deduced from every chapter, it may in general be observed, that the whole is suited to make known to us the perfections and providence of God, in the most interesting and affecting manner, to show what is the real character of man; and to evince both the immense importance and excellency, and the genuine nature, of true religion.—Even amidst the events of history, types and prophecies are interposed, especially of the Redeemer, who is never wholly kept out of sight in any part of the sacred narratives. Public miracles, of the most extraordinary nature, challenging the investigation of the most virulent enemies, and wrought on purpose to confirm those messages from God, which were most offensive, either to idolatrous rulers, or a rebellious nation, are likewise here recorded. We are not expressly informed who was the writer of each book in this collection; but we have several intimations, that the prophets, or seers, of whom continual mention is made, were employed in this service. (1 Chr. 29:29. 2 Chr. 12:15. 20:34. 26:22.) It is indeed not improbable, that the contemporary prophets wrote the principal transactions of their own times, under the superintendence of the Holy Spirit, by whom they were preserved from error and partiality, guided in selecting such facts as were most proper to be recorded, and instructed immediately where ordinary sources of information failed; and that subsequent prophets under the same superintendence, gave the history its present form. Perhaps some parts of it were compiled from ancient records, as late as the times of Ezra, who was himself an inspired writer; and the rest revised by him and his assistants, with some short notes, elucidating the several parts of the narrative; and this may account for a few expressions, which seem to belong to later times than those of the events related, as well as for the references to some books then known, but not now extant.—Very little history, subsequent to the days of Ezra, is transmitted to us in Scripture, previous to that contained in the New Testament; and a few incidents or genealogies, which seem to pertain to a rather later period, might be added by the prophet Malachi. But the silence of the Old Testament, for substance the same as we now have it, was evidently settled in the time of Ezra, and has never

These books, however, were undoubtedly a part of the sacred Scriptures, to which our Lord and his apostles continually appealed, and which the Jews in general received as the oracles of God, and as given by inspiration from him.—And it is exceedingly worthy of notice, that the several parts of the Bible thus reciprocally attest each other, and presuppose the undoubted truth of the history which they record, and the divine authority of the doctrines and commandments delivered in them—so that, like the stones in a well-constructed arch, each supports and is supported by all the rest. In particular, the Psalms, the prophetic books, and every part of the New Testament, assume as acknowledged truth, that these historical records contain undoubted facts; and these several divisions of the sacred Volume often constitute an important comment on each other.

The books, on which we now enter, do not contain a complete political history of Israel, but merely a connected account of the most material events, or of such as were most suited to convey important instruction: and because transactions, which in the general estimate of mankind are considered as comparatively little, frequently inculcate the most salutary lessons of heavenly wisdom; these are often very fully recorded, while the more splendid concerns of courts and camps are passed over in silence, or but cursorily noticed.

The authority and value of this division of the sacred Scriptures being thus ascertained, a few additional remarks on the book of JOSHUA, with which it opens, may suffice.—In all the versions, as well as in the original, it is named from JOSHUA, either as the author, or as the principal subject: and it is probable he wrote the substance of it. (24:26.) The writer speaks of himself as a person concerned in the transactions which he relates: (5:1) and the mention of Rahab, as still living in Israel, implies that he was a contemporary. (6:25.) But some passages doubtless were added afterwards, perhaps by Phinehas, or rather by a subsequent prophet: (19:47. 24:29—33.) yet several things adduced as proofs that the book was written at a later period, by no means establish that conclusion.—Among the various passages in which the history contained in this book is attested by other sacred writers, the following may be selected: 1 Kings 16:34. 1 Chr. 2:7. Ps. 114:3—5. Acts 7:15. 13:19. Heb. 4:3. 11:30, 31. 13:5. Jam. 2:25, and at the same time it may be observed, that this book appeals to the books of Moses, as then extant; and marks repeatedly the fulfilment of the promises and predictions contained in them, or confirms them as undoubtedly to be accomplished. (1:8. 3:30—33. 11:15, 20, 23. 14:2—9. 20:2. 21:43—45. 22:1—9. 23:6—16. 24:2—10, 19, 20.)

The Pagan writers were in some measure acquainted with this history; and several of their fables are supposed to have been derived from it: especially the story of Phaeton driving the chariot of the sun for the space of one day, seems to have originated from the sun's staying his course for one day, at the word of Joshua; and it clearly shows, that a tradition prevailed of one day, in ancient times, having been wholly unlike all others, either before or after it.—It is probable that the Carthaginians were originally Phœnicians, or Canaanites, who fled from the victorious sword of Joshua, first to Tyre, whence they colonized to Africa.

This book does not contain any explicit prophecies, except as the warnings given to the people, to expect the completion of those delivered by Moses, may be considered as prophetic; or as the curse denounced on him that should rebuild Jericho was of that nature. (6:26.) But Joshua himself, his wars and victories, and the inheritance which he was appointed to assign to Israel, were typical pre-intimations of Christ and his conflicts and triumphs, and the rest reserved for all his true people.—This will be shown more fully as we proceed; and the wars which Joshua waged, and the devastations which he made, fully vindicated from the objections that have been made against them.

Expositors have generally computed, that about seventeen years passed between the death of Moses and that of Joshua; seven of which were spent in the conquest of Canaan, and ten in the peaceable possession of the land: but some learned men think that Joshua survived his victories twenty years, or nearly.—Every part of the book conveys useful instruction; but the exhortations, with which Joshua took his leave of the people just before his death, are peculiarly interesting and affecting.

The Lord confirms Joshua as the successor of Moses, 1, 2. He shows the extent of the promised land, and instructs and encourages Joshua, 3—9; who gives orders about passing over Jordan, 10, 11; and reminds the two tribes and a half of their engagement, 12—15. The people promise obedience, 16—18.

NOW after the death of Moses, the servant of the LORD, it came to pass, that the LORD spake unto Joshua the son of Nun, Moses's minister, saying,

2 Moses my servant is dead; now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I have given to them, even to the children of Israel.

3 Every place, that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses.

4 From the wilderness and this Lebanon even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea towards the going down of the sun, shall be your coast.

5 There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life: as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee.

6 Be strong and of a good courage; for unto this people shalt thou divide for an inheritance the land which I swore unto their fathers to give them.

7 Only be thou strong, and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law which Moses my servant commanded thee: turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest.

V. 3, 4. Lebanon seems to have been the termination of an extensive prospect, which lay open to Joshua at this time.—In the days of David and Solomon the whole country contained in this grant, was possessed by Israel, or tributary to their kings: but in general, through sin, they came short of that prosperity which they might otherwise have enjoyed. (Notes, Ex. 23:31. 2 Sam. 8:3. 1 Kings 4:21.)

V. 7. The successor of Moses, that eminent servant of God, the ruler over so numerous and untractable a people as Israel, and that people the worshippers of the true and living God; and the commander in so perilous an undertaking as the conquest of Canaan, would need great strength of grace and courage of faith: especially that he might persevere in the path of duty, unmoved by terrors, difficulties, or persuasions, and neither "turn to the right hand nor to the left;" not only observing the commandments of God himself, but impartially exerting his authority in enforcing them on all the people, thy mouth; but 'thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success.

9 Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage; 'be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the LORD thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.

10 ¶ Then Joshua commanded the officers of the people, saying,

11 Pass through the host, and command the people, saying, Prepare you victuals; for within 'three days 'ye shall pass over this Jordan, to go in to possess the land which the LORD your God giveth you to possess it.

12 And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to half the tribe of Manasseh, spake Joshua, saying, 13 Remember 'the word which Moses the servant of the LORD commanded you, saying, The LORD your God hath given you rest, and hath given you this land.

14 Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle, shall remain in the land which Moses gave you on this side Jordan; but ye shall pass before your brethren 'armed, all 'the mighty men of valour, and help them;

15 Until 'the LORD have given your brethren rest, as he hath given you, and they also have possessed the land which the LORD your God giveth them; 'then ye shall return unto the land of your possession, and enjoy it, which Moses the LORD's servant gave you on this side Jordan, toward the sunrising.

16 And they answered Joshua, saying, 'All that thou commandest us we will do, and whithersoever thou sendest us we will go:

17 According as we hearkened unto Moses in all things, so will we hearken unto thee: 'only the LORD thy God be with thee, as he was with Moses.

18 Whosoever he be 'that doth rebel against thy commandment, and will not hearken unto thy words in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death: 'only be strong, and of a good courage.

CHAPTER II.

Two spies, sent by Joshua, enter Jericho, and are concealed by Rahab, 1-6. She informs them of the terror which had seized the Canaanites, 8-11; and covenants with them, 12-21. They return, and make their report, 22-24.

AND Joshua the son of Nun 'sent out of 'Shittim two men, 'to spy secretly, saying, Go view the land, 'even Jericho. And they went, and came into an 'harlot's house named Rahab, and 'lodged there.

2 And it was 'told the king of Jericho, saying, Behold, there came men in 'lither to-night of the children of Israel, to search out the country.

3 And the king of Jericho sent unto Rahab, saying, 'Bring forth the men that are come to thee, which are entered into thine house: for they be come to search out all the country.

4 And the woman took the two men, and hid them, and said thus, There came men unto me, but I wist not whence they were.

5 And it came to pass about the time of shutting of the gate, when it was dark, that the men went out; whither the men went I wot not: pursue after them quickly; for ye shall overtake them.

6 But she had brought them up to the roof of the house, and hid them with the stalks of flax which she had laid in order upon the roof.

7 And the men pursued after them the way to Jordan, unto the fords: and as soon as they which pursued after them were gone out, they shut the gate.

8 ¶ And before they were laid down, she came up unto them upon the roof;

9 And she said unto the men, I know that the Lord hath given you the land, and that your terror is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land faint because of you.

10 For we have heard how the Lord dried up the water of the Red Sea for you, when ye came out of Egypt: and what ye did unto the two kings of the Amorites that were on the other side Jordan, Sihon and Og, whom ye utterly destroyed.

[Practical Observations.]

11 And as soon as we had heard these things, our hearts did melt, neither did there remain any more courage in any man, because of you: for the Lord your God, he is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath.

12 Now therefore I pray you, swear unto me by the Lord, since I have showed you kindness, that ye will also show kindness unto my father's house; and give me a true token:

13 And that ye will save alive my father, and my mother, and my brethren, and my sisters, and all that they have, and deliver our lives from death.

14 And the men answered her, Our life is for yours, if ye utter not this our business. And it shall be, when the Lord hath given us the land, that we will deal kindly and truly with thee.

15 Then she let them down by a cord through the window: for her house was upon the town-wall, and she dwelt upon the wall.

16 And she said unto them, Get ye to the mountain, lest the pursuers meet you; and hide

1:11.)—It might be very useful to him to learn many things respecting the avenues of Canaan, the situation of Jericho, which was first to be assaulted, and the disposition of its inhabitants; and these might be known by ordinary means as well as by immediate revelation. Two persons, probably not of eminent rank, but of approved prudence, incircumity, and faith, were therefore selected, and sent by Joshua to search out, not the land at large, but Jericho and its confines, to bring their report to him, and not to the congregation: for the word "secretly" seems to refer to his sending them; not to their concealing themselves from the Canaanites:—"He secretly sent two men, &c." Most likely, this measure was adopted according to some intimation of the will of God; for the spies were evidently guided and protected in a peculiar manner, and many important good consequences resulted from their enterprise. (Notes, Num. 13.) They undertook this perilous service with boldness and promptitude; and passed Jordan, doubtless at the fords, the river not having yet overflowed its banks as it did soon after. Being arrived at Jericho, "they came into a harlot's house, . . . and lodged there." Perhaps Rahab kept some kind of a house of entertainment for travellers; especially as she stated that "two men had come to her" of whom she knew nothing: yet from the testimony of two apostles, (Marg. Ref. d.) there can be no reasonable doubt but she had been a harlot, though now, it is probable, she was converted by the faith which was wrought in her; which was so eminent, that she was not only admitted into the society of God's people, but married into a noble family of the tribe of Judah from whom Christ sprang. Bp. Patrick. It may be supposed from these circumstances, that she was not far advanced in life at this time.—It is however evident from the whole narrative, that the spies were led thither by a special providence; and that Rahab entertained them out of regard to Israel and Israel's God, and neither for lucre, nor for any evil purpose.

V. 2, 3. The twelve spies, sent by Moses, seemed to have passed unsuspected through the whole land; yet these two men no sooner entered Jericho than the king heard of it, and sent to apprehend them; while at the same time he, and the other kings of the country, seem entirely to have neglected to guard the passes of Jordan, the natural barrier of the land! (Note, 3:2.) The spies were known or supposed to be Israelites, either by their apparel or appearance; and their business in that case could not be doubted.

V. 4-6. The words translated "The woman took the two men, and hid them," might be rendered, "she had taken, . . . and hidden them."—It is evident that Rahab was acquainted with the business of the spies, before she received the message from the king: and being sensible of the danger to which they would be exposed, when every one was upon the watch as aware of the situation and purposes of Israel, and perhaps hearing the rumours about them, she had previously concealed them under some stalks of flax which were laid on the flat roof of her house: and by her answers to the messengers, she not only led them to suppose that the men were gone, but also that she was very desirous that they should be apprehended, which exceedingly tended to prevent suspicion.—Various opinions have been formed concerning Rahab's conduct on this trying occasion. Some object, that her treachery to her king and country cannot be vindicated;

but it may be answered, that as she firmly believed the God of heaven had devoted the Canaanites to be utterly destroyed by the Israelites, (9-11.) she must either side with Israel and Israel's God against her country, or perish with it in a hopeless contest against the Almighty; so that, in her circumstances, she could not have acted otherwise, if influenced by a true and living faith. (Notes, James 2:25, 26.) In fact every true convert equally renounces the alliance of the Lord's enemies, however nearly connected, and refuses to join with them in rebellion and persecution of his servants. (Notes, Luke 14:25-27. 2 Cor. 5:16.) But as no people can possibly produce such an authenticated commission from God to destroy another nation, as Israel had to destroy the Canaanites, Rahab's conduct, in uniting interests with the enemies and invaders of her country, though her absolute duty, cannot now be drawn into precedent.—In respect to the falsehoods that she uttered, were not a general question of some importance and of great difficulty involved, it would be most obvious to resolve it into her ignorance of the divine law; and to say, that the principle and substance of her conduct being good were accepted, and that the sin which incidentally mixed with it was pardoned. But indeed, if it were her indispensable duty if possible to protect the spies, and there were no other conceivable way of doing this, it seems not necessary to condemn her conduct altogether.—Stratagems of war, and similar impositions upon determined enemies and persecutors, are not absolutely condemned in Scripture, though inconsistent with exact veracity; (Marg. Ref. h.) and if deception could in any case be justifiable, we can scarcely imagine one in which it would be more so. It is however certain, that in no case, except one equally extraordinary, ought the example to be imitated. (Notes, Ec. 1:19. 1 Sam. 19:12-17. 21:1, 2. 27:8-12.)

V. 7. "The fords," or passages, were no doubt parts of the river, where it might be passed without danger, either by walking or swimming across. Here, probably, the messengers waited a considerable time to intercept the spies; and lest they should have stayed in the city, the gates were immediately shut to prevent the possibility of their escape.—But they found a way of getting out of the city, and in due time of crossing Jordan at the fords. (15:23.)

V. 8-11. We have here an account of Rahab's faith and its fruits, which are spoken of with decided approbation by the apostles Paul and James. (Notes, Heb. 11:31. Jam. 2:25, 26.) She had heard of the miracles which God had wrought for Israel, and the promises that he had made to them; and whilst the same report exasperated or intimidated the other inhabitants of the land, she firmly believed JEHOVAH to be the only true God in heaven and earth, and the Israelites his only accepted worshippers; that his promises would certainly be fulfilled and his threatenings take effect; and that there was no way of escaping his vengeance, but by uniting interests with his people. Indeed Balaam himself seems to have been convinced in his judgment of these grand truths, as well as to have professed them with his lips; but then his ambitious and covetous heart abhorred them, and he persisted in enmity to God and Israel: while the conduct of Rahab proved, that she had the genuine principle of divine faith, which induced her to renounce all her interests among the devoted Canaanites; and to venture her life, and expose yourselves there three days, until the pursuers be returned; and afterward may ye go your way.

17 And the men said unto her, “We will be blameless of this thine oath which thou hast made us swear.”

18 Behold, when we come into the land, thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window which thou didst let us down by; and thou shalt bring thy father, and thy mother, and thy brethren, and all thy father’s household, home unto thee.

19 And it shall be, that whosoever shall go out of the doors of thy house into the street, his blood shall be upon his head, and we will be guiltless; and whosoever shall be with thee in the house, his blood shall be on our head, if any hand be upon him.

20 And if thou utter this our business, then “we

21 And she said, According unto your words, so be it. And she sent them away, and they departed: and she bound the scarlet line in the window.

22 And they went, and came unto the mountain, and abode there three days, until the pursuers were returned. And the pursuers sought them throughout all the way, but found them not.

23 So the two men returned, and descended from the mountain, and passed over, and came to Joshua the son of Nun, and told him all things that befell them.

24 And they said unto Joshua, “Truly the LORD hath delivered into our hands all the land: for even all the inhabitants of the country do faint because of us.”

herself to the imminent danger of the most cruel tortures, in expressing her love for the people of God. (Notes, Heb. 11:1,2,5,6.)

V. 12-16. Rahab asked no other recompense for her perilous service, than preservation for herself and her near relations, when the promises of God to Israel had been fulfilled. Even the regard manifested to her relatives, who were not sensible of their own danger, was a genuine effect of true grace. Rahab likewise gave the spies all the information in her power, and all which they wanted; and she deemed the solemn oath of JEHOVAH a sufficient security for the performance of their engagements! When, with great attention, caution, and trouble, she had dismissed them, and given them proper counsel, she performed her promise of secrecy; and at the appointed time collected her relatives into her house, as it had been agreed: and thus without reserve joined interests with the people of God. (Note, 6:22,23.) Her whole conduct manifested a reverential fear of the Lord, an entire belief of his word, a desire and hope of his favour, an affection for his people, and a disposition to forsake, venture, and suffer any thing in his cause. Multitudes, who had seen all the miracles wrought in Egypt and in the wilderness, and who had every advantage of instruction in the camp of Israel, continued unbelievers; very few indeed manifested such strong faith, such holy fear, such confidence in God, and such a disposition to labour and suffer for his sake, as this stigmatized inhabitant of accursed Jericho, who had only heard a general and indistinct report of his wonderful works for Israel! It cannot therefore be reasonably doubted, that her faith had, before this, been accompanied with deep repentance of those sinful practices, from which she derived the name of “the harlot;” which however is given her where her faith and works are most celebrated, as illustrating the great evangelical truth, that “where sin hath abounded, grace much more aboundeth.” The same principles would also prepare her mind to receive further instruction concerning the promised Messiah, and the true meaning of those sacrifices which typified his atonement, when that further advantage was afforded her. (Notes, Acts 10:1,2. latter half. 3-8,27-33.)

V. 17-20. These spies, not doubting that Joshua and Israel would confirm the transaction, most solemnly assured Rahab of security if she disclosed not the business; intimating, that they should expect death by some judgment of God if they deceived her; yet as men who revered an oath, and dreaded the guilt of perjury, they desired to have the terms of the agreement precisely stated and exactly explained before they parted; and they selected that house which had protected them, to be the refuge of those who were found in it, when others were utterly destroyed.—Though the Israelites were forbidden to form any alliance with the nations of Canaan, yet it is evident that individuals, who came cordially into their interests, might be spared. (Notes, 9:19,20. 11:19,20.)—This passage may remind us of the door sprinkled with the blood of the paschal lamb, that was the security of Israel, when the destroying angel was slaying the first-born of Egypt; which typified the sinner’s security under the protection of the atoning blood, who has fled to it for refuge from the wrath and curse of an offended God. (Note, Ex. 12:11-14.)

V. 21. It is probable, that Rahab immediately bound the scarlet line, or cord, in her window; that no suspicion might be excited by doing it when Israel approached the city.

V. 23, 24. Having been thus wonderfully protected and restored in safety, the spies seem to have spoken little on the strict watch kept by the inhabitants of Jericho, or on their own narrow escape. But they reported the dismay of their enemies, not only as an encouraging circumstance, but as a token that the Lord had delivered them into their hands, having thus begun to perform his promises in their behalf. They seem, however, to have made their report privately to Joshua, and not to the people or elders. (Notes, Num. 13:26-33. 14:1-19.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. As the greatest, wisest, and best of men must on many occasions use, as it were, the eyes and ears of others; it is of prime importance, that persons should be selected, on whose veracity and fidelity firm dependence may be placed.—The Lord has “a remnant according to the election of grace,” in many unlikely situations, and even of such as have previously borne very bad characters; for he will glorify his mercy and grace in saving some of every kind.—That reproach of former sins, which rests upon the reputation of atrocious offenders after they are pardoned, ought to be patiently endured: and they should thence take occasion to renew their repentance; and to pour out their earnest prayers, that their future conduct may both demonstrate the reality, and illustrate the nature, of that grace which they have received; that those may be ashamed, who persist in reviling them; and that many may glorify God on their account, be edified by their example, and encouraged by witnessing their good conversation in Christ.—The feeblest means, when accompanied by the divine blessing, produces most glorious effects: while the carnal heart, if left to itself, grows hardened in infidelity under the most conclusive evidence, and the most convincing ministry of the world! (Notes, Matt. 11:20-24. 12:41,42.)—When the worst of sinners truly believe the word of God, a blessed change infallibly takes place: for the divine Spirit, through the exercise of faith, excites in them fear of wrath, hatred of sin, hope of mercy, reverence of the name and authority of the Lord, and love to him and his people; which are manifested by such actions, as they have opportunity and ability to perform. Thus they are led to repent, and to do works meet for repentance; to renounce worldly objects and connexions, as far as evident duty requires them; and to unite interests with the people of God: and they are prepared for self-denial, and to venture persecution and even death itself, rather than give up their hope and pursuit of salvation. They may at first have very little explicit knowledge of divine truth; and much infirmity, and many mistakes may mix with their endeavours to obey God, and to do good to his people: but their conduct will be conscientious, and their disposition teachable, and their light will increase continually. (Notes, Ps. 25:8,9. Prov. 4:18,19. Hos. 6:1-3.) And no faith, which is not manifested by these good fruits, will justify the sinner before God, or even his profession before his fellow-creatures.

V. 12-24. When we really discover the danger to which our souls are exposed, from the wrath of an offended God, and are earnestly seeking salvation, we shall begin to feel for those who are not sensible of their own lost condition. This will induce us to attempt doing what we can to forward the salvation of our beloved friends and relations: and thus they who have been the grief and disgrace of their families, may, by the mercy of God, become their protection as well as ornament.—If we lost sinners have a prospect of escaping destruction, we should not seek great things for ourselves, either in the world or in the church: yet such distinctions are often conferred on those who least aspire to them.—While we are serving God, and employed for the good of his people, we may securely confide in his protection, and need not fear what man can do unto us; as the dangers, to which we may be exposed, will eventually excite the greater admiration of the truth, love, and power of God in our preservation: yet we should use every prudent and lawful means of safety; and be thankful to the instruments of it, and endeavour to recompense them. But even in exercising gratitude, we must not oblige our benefactors in any thing contrary to the will of God, or to the interests of his people; nor flatter them with the hope of deliverance from future punishment, except in the method of the gospel: and if any of our engagements are ratified with an oath, the utmost reverence and caution should be used in taking, and the greatest exactness in fulfilling, that solemn obligation.—While the accomplishment of some of God’s promises, is a pledge for the performance of the whole to the

CHAPTER III.

Israel arrives at Jer. Jan. 1. The officers give orders concerning the passage : and Joshua also directs both priests and people, 2-6. The Lord encourages and instructs Joshua, 7-9 : and again, Joshua to the people, assuring them that the waters will be divided before the ark, 10-13. The waters are divided, and Israel passes the river, while the priests bearing the ark, stand in the midst of it, 14-17.

AND Joshua ¹rose early in the morning ; and they removed from Shittim, and came to Jordan, he and all the children of Israel, and lodged there before they passed over.

2 And it came to pass after three days, that the officers went through the host ;

3 And they commanded the people, saying, "When ye see the ark of the covenant of the LORD your God, and the priests the Levites bearing it, then ye shall remove from your place, and go after it.

4 Yet there shall be ^aa space between you and it, about two thousand cubits by measure ; come not near unto it, that ye may know the way by which ye must go ; for ye have not passed this way heretofore.

5 And Joshua said unto the people, ^bSanctify yourselves : for to-morrow the LORD will do wonders among you.

6 And Joshua spake unto the priests, saying, "Take up the ark of the covenant, and pass over before the people. And they took up the ark of the covenant, and went before the people.

7 ¶ And the LORD said unto Joshua, This day will I begin to magnify thee in the sight of all Israel, that they may know "that as I was with Moses, so I will be with thee.

8 And thou shalt command the priests that bear the ark of the covenant, saying, When ye are come to the brink of the water of Jordan, ye shall stand still in Jordan.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1. Early in the morning, Joshua took measures for the removal of the whole congregation and all their baggage and possessions, from Shittim to the banks of Jordan, which is supposed to have been about seven miles distant. There they arrived in the course of the day ; and lodged that night, that they might be ready to pass over the next morning.

V. 2. Three days from the orders before mentioned now passed, (1:11.) and perhaps from the return of the spies, during which time the people had made all requisite preparations. It does not appear whether they expected a miraculous interposition to facilitate their passage, or whether they had thoughts of crossing the river in some other way : but they were very obedient and tractable, and seem to have harboured no distrust about the event.—At any time, the passage of such a multitude of men, women, children, flocks and herds, with all their substance, by fords or other ordinary means, must have been attended with much difficulty and delay, and with great danger if the enemies had opposed them ; but when Jordan overflowed all its banks, it would probably have been impracticable : (15) for whatever appearance this river may make to modern travellers, the whole history represents it, as having been at that time a considerable and rapid stream.—The miraculous passage of Jordan was peculiarly suited to attend the other wonders which the Lord had wrought for Israel. Thus their entrance into Canaan corresponded with their departure out of Egypt ; (Notes, Ex. 14:15.) and the dismay of the Canaanites would be increased, the faith of Israel strengthened, their expectations raised, and their conquests facilitated.—It can only be attributed to a supernatural power, intimidating or infatuating the minds of the Canaanites, that they never attempted to defend this barrier of their country, or to obstruct the passage of Israel.

V. 3, 4. The Levites, of the family of Kohath, carried the ark, in ordinary circumstances : but on this signal occasion, as well as some others, the priests, (who were of that family,) performed this service. (Num. 4:15. 10:21. Notes, 6:3-5. 1 Kings 8:3.) They were commanded to march about three quarters of a mile before the people, till they arrived at their destined station ; by which it appeared that the ark, as a pledge of JEHOVAH's protection while they were obedient, secured the people, not they it. A noble defiance of the enemies of 9 And Joshua said unto the children of Israel, Come hither, and hear the words of the Lord your God.

10 And Joshua said, "Hereby ye shall know that the living God is among you, and that he will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Hivites, and the Perizzites, and the Girgashites, and the Amorites and the Jebusites.

11 Behold, the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth passeth over before you into Jordan.

12 Now therefore take ye twelve men out of the tribes of Israel, out of every tribe a man.

13 And it shall come to pass as soon as the soles of the feet of the priests that bear the ark of the LORD, the Lord of all the earth, shall rest in the waters of Jordan, that the waters of Jordan shall be cut off from the waters that come down from above ; and they shall stand upon an heap.

14 ¶ And it came to pass, when the people removed from their tents to pass over Jordan, and the priests bearing the ark of the covenant before the people ;

15 And as they that bare the ark were come unto Jordan, and the feet of the priests that bare the ark were dipped in the brim of the water ; (for Jordan overfloweth all his banks all the time of harvest ;)

16 That the waters which came down from above stood, and rose up upon an heap, very far from the city Adam, that is beside Zaretan ; and those that came down toward the sea of the plain, even the salt sea, failed, and were cut off : and the people passed over right against Jericho.

Israel was thus given ; who were challenged to attack the un armed priests, or to seize the unattended ark. The faith and courage of the priests were also tried, and displayed for an example to the people ; and reverence for this symbol of JEHOVAH's presence was expressed in a manner suited to the nature of that dispensation. The whole congregation would also have a fairer opportunity of viewing the ark, the dividing of the waters, and "the way by which they were to go," than if it had been nearer ; and as they witnessed the obedience of the inanimate creation to their covenant God, they would thus be instructed to obey likewise.

V. 5. Sanctify yourselves. Note, Ex. 19:10-15.— Besides the legal purifications, one cannot but think that he intended they should dispose their minds, by holy meditations and prayer to God to receive his benefits, and to be more sensible of them when they were bestowed on them. Bp. Patrick, (Notes, 2 Chr. 29:5. Joel 2:15-17.)

V. 7. The people desired to see that God was with Joshua, as he had been with Moses ; (1:17.) and the Lord promised him, (probably by immediate revelation,) that by dividing the waters of Jordan, he would put honour on him, as he had honoured Moses at the Red Sea. In this manner the Lord was pleased to mark out the persons, whom he appointed to govern Israel, till in the days of Samuel they desired to have a king ; and then he selected Saul, and afterwards David and his posterity, to that office.—At the river Jordan, and probably at Beihabara, or the house of passage, even at the very same place where Israel passed over that river, the Lord Jesus began to be magnified by the descent of the Holy Spirit, and by a voice from heaven. (John 1:28. Notes, Matt. 3:13-17.)

V. 8. At the brink of the water the priests were commanded to stop, until the channel of Jordan had become dry ; and then to take their station in the midst of it, till all the people were passed over. (17)

V. 10-13. Joshua in calling JEHOVAH "the living God," and "the Lord," or Proprietor and Governor, "of all the earth," as well as "the God of Israel," seems especially to have aimed to render the stupendous miracle about to be wrought, (and which he foretold, that it might be the more impressive,) a convincing proof in the minds of the people, that all the gods of the nations were idols destitute of life and power ; and that idolatry (to which they were excessively prone,) was as senseless, as it was impious and abominable. (Notes, Deut. 4:35-40. 2 Kings 19:14-19. Is. 54:4, 5.)

V. 15. Jordan overfloweth, &c. This annual inundation

17 And the priests that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord stood firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan, and all the Israelites passed over on dry ground, until all the people were passed clean over Jordan.

Twelve men are appointed to take twelve stones out of Jordan for a memorial; and twelve stones are set up in the midst of Jordan, 1-9. arose from the melting of the snows upon mount Lebanon. The barley-harvest was at hand, or already begun; and the overflowing of the river seems to have taken place, just before Israel was commanded to pass over it, which served to render the miracle more incontestable and stupendous. (2:7, 23.)

V. 16, 17. The waters below the place where Israel then was, ran off towards the dead or salt sea, which was once the plain of Sodom, and left the channel dry for the space of several miles; whilst those above accumulated, and stood like mountains very far back towards the sea of Tiberias, without inundating the adjacent country. (Marg. Ref. f, g.) As an illustrious example of faith and obedience, the priests, who bare the ark, marched into the midst of the dry channel, and there took their stand, with the waters piled up far higher than their heads, and nothing to prevent their being overwhelmed by them, but the invisible power of God. Here they abode all day, till the people, encouraged by their example, had in succession marched over the river, with all that appertained to them, and were safely landed on the further shore! (Notes, 4:3-10.)—The passage through the Red Sea took place in the night, when the Israelites were fleeing from the Egyptians with great trepidation; but they passed Jordan in the daytime, with previous warning, leisurely, directly opposite to Jericho, and with a triumphant defiance of the Canaanites.—This passage of Israel over Jordan into the promised land, after their weary wanderings in the wilderness, evidently typified the believer's passage through death to heaven, when he has finished his course in this sinful world.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who are attentive to the duties of their station, and enemies to sloth and self-indulgence, are likely to be eminent and useful; and they alone.—We ought to proceed in our appointed course, notwithstanding remote difficulties, which may appear to us insurmountable; and to rely on the Lord to remove them when the critical moment arrives: for his interpositions are intended to excite, not to supersede, our activity. But we should look well to the path of our feet, especially when "we have not passed that way heretofore." (Notes, Prov. 4:26, 27.)—The precepts of the word of God, his providential dispensations, and the counsel and example of his ministers and people, when properly attended to; together with the inward teaching of this Holy Spirit, humbly sought by earnest prayer; will make our way plain to us, though perplexed in itself. (Note, Prov. 3:5, 6. P. O. Is. 30:18-33.) and we cannot in general go wrong in keeping close to the ordinances of God, and thus, as it were, following the ark in all its removals. In so doing, we need not fear rivers of trouble, mountains of difficulty, or hosts of opposing foes; but confiding in the faithful promise, the almighty power, and covenant love of our God, "the living God, the Lord of the whole earth," we may proceed with boldness and alacrity.—Whether we be called to endure poverty, pain, reproach, persecution, or death, we are following "the Author and Finisher of our faith;" nor can we set our foot in any perilous or arduous spot, through the whole journey, but faith will there desert the print of the Redeemer's foot, who trod that very path to glory above, and who calls us to "follow him, that where he is, there we may be also."—His ministers especially, are required to set the people an example of obedience, patience, and unshaken confidence in him; by abiding in those perilous or difficult stations which he has assigned them, when others fear to pass that way; and in so doing they may expect peculiar support and protection: (Note, Acts 8:1.) but if they hesitate to take the lead in facing danger and enduring hardship; and show an undue attention to their own ease, security, and indulgence, their exhortations will be very lightly regarded.—The more adventurous we are in the path of duty, the greater evidence we shall have of the Lord's love and care of us; for he will not disappoint the expectation of faith, but in due season exceed our most enlarged hopes. But would we experience the more signal effects of his love and power, we must study to put away from us the pollutions of sin, and be peculiarly careful not "to grieve the Holy Spirit;" we must diligently follow hence out of the midst of Jordan, out of the place where the priests' feet stood firm, twelve stones; and ye shall carry them over with you, and leave them in the lodging-place where ye shall lodge this night.

4 Then Joshua called the twelve men whom he had prepared of the children of Israel, out of every tribe a man;

5 And Joshua said unto them, Pass over before the ark of the Lord your God into the midst of Jordan, and take ye up every man of you a stone upon his shoulder, according unto the number of the tribes of the children of Israel;

6 That this may be a sign among you, that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, saying, What mean ye by these stones?

his directions, and give him all the glory.—Thus the Christian's course originates from "the working of the mighty power of God," in his deliverance from the yoke of sin and Satan; and that same power daily carries on the work of "renewing him in the spirit of his mind," amidst innumerable snares, temptations, and countervailing obstacles; but in the last conflict especially, he will find that the Lord "is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that he asks or thinks, according to that power which now worketh in him;" (Note, Eph. 3:20, 21.) so that even the feeble Christian shall conquer in this conflict, and pass safely through this path beset with terrors. This shall continue invariably to be the case, till all the company of the redeemed "are clean passed over," and landed safe on Canaan's shore,—for though none of them have passed this way heretofore; yet Jesus their Brother and Friend, the true "Ark of the covenant," has gone before, and crossed the river, when its floods were swelled to a tremendous height; and thus he has divided the floods before them. He safely reached the heavenly shore, when he rose from the dead as the first-fruits of his people, and ascended into heaven as their Fore-runner; and he began to be magnified in the sight of all Israel, when, thus risen and ascended, he sent down his Holy Spirit, to give assistance to his apostles, and success to his holy gospel. To those who neglect his great salvation, death may well be "the king of terrors" for its consequences will be to them tremendous beyond expression. But to believers even this "king of terrors" is become a friend. "To them to live is Christ, and to die is gain." (Notes, Phil. 1:19-26.) This world is a dreary wilderness, and they are often weary of their toilsome pilgrimage, though fed with the Bread of heaven, and drinking the Waters of life from the Rock of Salvation; and though guided and guarded by their gracious Redeemer through all the dangers of the way; in their deliberate judgment they count it "far better to depart hence to be with Christ" and they may meet death in the most horrid form (like Jordan overflowing all his banks,) without terror, if they are but able to keep the eye of faith fixed upon the Saviour, and on the inheritance provided for them in heaven.—Let us then treasure up our experiences of his faithful and tender care during the whole course of our lives, that they may come in aid to our faith and hope in this last conflict: let us carefully consider the examples of others, whose happy death we witness, or of which we read and hear, to allay our fears and encourage our hearts: let us prepare daily for this important season, by faith and repentance; and a conscientious attention to the duties of our station; and let us watch and pray against anxious or distressing fears. The Lord will provide for our passage over this Jordan, when the time comes: yea, he will come and meet us, and by his animating presence invigorate our faith and hope; till we join the innumerable multitude, that in the Canaan above are singing the praises of their greater Deliverer, who hath both redeemed them from far worse than Egyptian bondage, and brought them safe to the promised land, through his precious blood, and by his all-conquering arm.

NOTES.—CHAPTER IV. V. 2. These twelve men had before been selected, to hold themselves in readiness. (3:12.) One was chosen out of every tribe: (4) for though some had received their inheritance on the other side of Jordan, they were all brethren, united in interest and religion; and it was proper they should all join in perpetuating the memory of this signal miracle.

V. 3-9. After all the people had passed over Jordan, and before they marched to the place of encampment, or had any opportunity of refreshing themselves and taking care of their families; they were required to use proper measures for transmitting to posterity a memorial that Jordan had been divided "before the ark of the Lord;" and so give parents an opportunity of instructing their children concerning the wonderful works of God for Israel. (Note, 20-24.)—The priests patiently and courageously kept their station, not only till the whole multitude was passed over, but also till these twelve men had returned into the midst of the river, and taking each a large stone, probably as great as we can carry

7 Then ye shall answer them, That the waters of Jordan were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the LORD; when it passed over Jordan, the waters of Jordan were cut off: and these stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel for ever.

8 And the children of Israel did so as Joshua commanded, and took up twelve stones out of the midst of Jordan, as the LORD spake unto Joshua, according to the number of the tribes of the children of Israel, and carried them over with them unto the place where they lodged, and laid them down there.

9 And Joshua set up twelve stones in the midst of Jordan, in the place where the feet of the priests which bare the ark of the covenant stood: and they are there unto this day.

10 For the priests which bare the ark stood in the midst of Jordan, until every thing was finished, that the LORD commanded Joshua to speak unto the people, according to all that Moses commanded Joshua: and the people hastened and passed over.

11 And it came to pass, when all the people were clean passed over, that the ark of the LORD passed over, and the priests, in the presence of the people.

12 And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and half the tribe of Manasseh, passed over armed before the children of Israel, as Moses spake unto them.

13 About forty thousand, prepared for war, passed over before the LORD unto battle, to the plains of Jericho.

14 ¶ On that day the LORD magnified Joshua in the sight of all Israel; and they feared him, as they feared Moses, all the days of his life.

15 And the LORD spake unto Joshua, saying,

16 Command the priests that bear the ark of the testimony, that they come up out of Jordan.

17 Joshua therefore commanded the priests, saying, Come ye up out of Jordan.

18 And it came to pass, when the priests that bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, were come up out of the midst of Jordan, and the soles of the priests' feet were lifted up unto the dry land, that the waters of Jordan returned unto their place, and flowed over all his banks, as they did before.

19 And the people came up out of Jordan on the tenth day of the first month, and encamped in Gilgal, in the east border of Jericho.

20 And those twelve stones, which they took out of Jordan, did Joshua pitch in Gilgal.

21 And he spake unto the children of Israel, saying, When your children shall ask their fathers in time to come, saying, What mean these stones?

22 Then ye shall let your children know, saying, Israel came over this Jordan on dry land.

23 For the LORD your God dried up the waters of Jordan from before you, until ye were passed over, as the LORD your God did to the Red Sea, which he dried up from before us, until we were gone over:

24 That all the people of the earth might know the hand of the LORD, that it is mighty; that ye might fear the LORD your God for ever.

had returned with them to the shore; and until twelve stones had been set up in the midst of the river. The twelve stones were taken from the very spot where the priests had kept their station; and the twelve other stones were set up in the same place. As the water would there be always of considerable depth, it may be supposed that these stones were formed into a kind of pillar, or monument, generally visible from the banks of the river.—The concluding words might be written by Joshua at the close of his life, or perhaps added by some later prophet. (Marg. Ref. m.)

V. 10. Moses commanded. We do not read, that Moses gave any instructions about the passage of Israel over Jordan: but he charged Joshua to obey the LORD, and the people to be observant of Joshua; to which they peculiarly attended on this occasion.—It is said, “the people hastened,” as none of them wasted any time: perhaps some were timorous through unbelief; but there was no undue haste or confusion. (Note, Is. 28:16, conclusion.)

V. 11. The people beheld the water standing still on a heap while the ark was in the river; but come tumbling down when it was gone: which demonstrated that it was God's presence with them, to which alone they owed this miraculous mercy. Bp. Patrick.

V. 12, 13. This armed body of men, unencumbered with families or flocks, and prepared to repel the enemy, if they should attack them, would leave the other tribes more at liberty to attend upon their personal and domestic concerns. (Note, 1:12-15.)—Probably the inhabitants of Jericho witnessed from the walls of the city this astonishing scene; and saw their invaders encamp in those very plains, where it might have been expected the inhabitants of the land would have mustered their forces to oppose them. (Note, 3:2.)

V. 14. In consequence of the honour which God put on Joshua on this occasion, the Israelites stood in awe of him, and submitted to his authority ever after, as the divinely appointed successor to Moses; perceiving that the LORD was with him, as he had been with Moses. (Note, 1:16-18.)

V. 15-18. The priests did not quit their station, till Joshua, who had commanded them thither, ordered them thence; nor did he thus order them till the LORD commanded him: so obedient were all parties to the word of God, and so entirely confident of his protection! As soon as the priests had reached the shore, and the ark, the symbol of the LORD's presence, had left the river, the waters reverted to their natural course, and flowed over all the banks as before; showing that the power of him, who enacted the laws of nature, had on this occasion suspended them, for the display of his glory in performing his promises to the people. V. 19. The Israelites passed over Jordan, exactly five days short of forty years after they left Egypt, and just in time to prepare for the celebration of the passover, upon their entrance into Canaan, as they had celebrated it just before their departure out of Egypt. (Note, Ex. 12:3-10.)

V. 20-24. It is most natural to conclude, that these stones were placed separately on some eminence, where they would be conspicuous: and being exactly twelve, according to the number of the tribes in Israel, and probably no other stones near, at all like them in size and kind; they would naturally excite inquiries, how they came there, and what was meant by them. Thus the miraculous division of Jordan, (as completing that kindness to Israel, which was begun at the division of the Red Sea,) would frequently become the subject of conversation, both among the Israelites, and those who came thither from distant nations; the tradition of this event would be perpetuated and circulated very widely; and even the Gentiles might be induced to examine the sacred oracles, and to inquire further concerning the glorious perfections and wonderful works of Israel's God.—In these respects this memorial would tend to promote true religion; “that all the people of the earth might know the hand of the LORD, that it is mighty.” But it would especially give parents an opportunity of diverting the inquisitiveness of their children into a profitable channel, by encouraging them to ask questions on the subject; and by giving them such answers, as would tend to bring them acquainted with the works of God, and to impress them with the fear of his name; that so one generation after another might be confirmed in worshipping him alone, and be restrained from idolatry.—These stones are supposed to have remained till the days of Christ, or even longer. (Notes, Ex. 12:11-14. 13:8-10. Ps. 78:3-8. 111:4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The works of the LORD are so worthy of remembrance, and the heart of man is so prone to forget them, that various methods must be adopted to keep them in remembrance.—Our own ease should be disregarded, and our ordinary employments or refreshments postponed, that we may lose no time in rendering to the LORD the tribute of praise for mercies received, while the sense of gratitude glows in the heart, and before the lively impression has time to wear off.—There is a peculiar style in the works and in the word of God: majestic in simplicity, expressive and emphatic; but with genuine dignity, disdaining the encumbrance of useless ornament and affected splendour. Never did triumphal column or arch, with all the magnificence of architecture, form so proper a monument of some celebrated victory, as did the twelve red stones from Jordan's channel of the miraculous passage of

CHAPTER V.

The Canaanites are afflicted, 1. Joshua, at God's command, circumcises Israel: the need there was of this, 2-8. The place is called Gilgal, 9. The passover is kept at Gilgal, 10, 11. The manna ceases, 12. One appears to Joshua, calling himself "The Captain of the Lord's host," 13-15.

AND it came to pass, when ¹all the kings of the Amorites, which ²were on the side of Jordan westward, and all the kings of the ³Canaanites, ⁴which ⁵were by the sea, ⁶heard that the LORD had dried up the waters of Jordan from before the children of Israel, until we were passed over, that their heart melted; neither was there spirit in them any more because of the children of Israel.

2 ¶ At that time the LORD said unto Joshua, Make these ⁷sharp knives, and ⁸circumcise again the children of Israel the second time.

3 And Joshua ⁹made him sharp knives, and circumcised the children of Israel at ¹⁰the hill of the foreskins.

4 And this ¹¹is the cause why Joshua did circumcise: ¹²All the people that came out of Egypt that ¹³were males, even all the men of war, died in the wilderness by the way after they came out of Egypt.

5 Now all the people that came out were circumcised; but all the people that ¹⁴were born in the wilderness by the way, as they came forth out of Egypt, ¹⁵they had not circumcised.

Israel into Canaan, under the conduct of the ark of the Lord, Such is the instituted memorial of the Redeemer's dying love: simple, impressive, and entirely calculated to show forth his death and passion in the most affecting manner; to be a suitable profession of our repentance, faith, and grateful love; and to express our devotedness to him, our fellowship with him and his people, and our expectation of future harmonious felicity in the realms above. Yet all this is veiled under so plain an exterior, that the carnal eye can see no comeliness or excellency in it, any more than in him whose love is commemorated: and to make it suit the grovelling minds of the world, and the selfish purposes of the ambitious, it has been dressed up with pomp and parade of meaning and of ceremony; which have so disguised and perplexed the divine appointment, that many of the true disciples of Christ have been strangely frightened from it, as if some formidable mischief lay concealed within; to the dishonour of the Lord, and the detriment of their own souls. But we should take every proper occasion of attending on that sacred ordinance, learning from the word of God its simple meaning and intention; and should gladly speak of them, when opportunity is afforded, to our children, our neighbours, and to every inquirer. In this, and in every thing else, the curiosity of children should be improved as an opening to their instruction: and they who take pleasure in searching out the works of the Lord, and in diffusing their knowledge among strangers, or perpetuating it to posterity, shall more and more understand his loving-kindness and mercy. (Ps. 107:43).—Gladly should we all render every service we can to the church of God, and consider ourselves as having one common interest with all the families of the redeemed, however separated by rivers, seas, or mountains, or by the more unnatural partition-walls of sects and parties: and in so doing, we may safely commit our families and interests to the protection of Israel's God.—When, with careful attention to the commands and providence of God, we have taken the place, and engaged in the service, assigned us; we ought patiently to abide in it, and not to attempt to remove, till we evidently commands us thence. Nothing can hurt us in doing this, and nothing should intimidate us from it. In like manner also, we ought patiently to wait our dismissal from this sinful world, ready to depart, but willing to bear the cross and maintain the conflict, till the Lord's purposes for his own glory be accomplished in us.—But the removal of the righteous is frequently like the opening of the flood-gates of divine judgments upon guilty nations, which have been restrained by their presence, example, and prayers; and much more when the ministers and ordinances of God are removed, may national calamities be expected. But let us bless God that this is not the case with our favoured land: let us unite in prayer that it may not be: and let us also remember, that we may derive benefit from all the mercies shown to his church in all ages and nations, and should bless God for them; and every recent favour should excite us to repeat his praises for former blessings.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1. Great terror had before pervaded the minds of the inhabitants of Canaan, in every part of the country: yet the kings seem to have kept up their courage, till they heard that the barrier of the land had been broken through, by a miracle similar to the dividing of the Red Sea; and that the whole multitude of Israel was actually encamped in their country, with the express purpose of possessing it, and extirpating the former inhabitants. On hearing this, their hearts melted with terror, as wax before the fire; and this both anticipated, and facilitated their destruction. (Marg. Ref.)—The words "We were passed over," intimates that the writer was one of the company.

6 For the children of Israel ¹⁶walked forty years in the wilderness, till all the people that ¹⁷were men of war, which came out of Egypt, were consumed, because they obeyed not the voice of the LORD: unto whom the LORD ¹⁸swore, that he would not show them the land, which the LORD swore unto their fathers that he would give us, ¹⁹a land that floweth with milk and honey.

V. 2-8. It is probable, that there had been a general circumcision, a short time before the departure of Israel from Egypt, of all those who were then found uncircumcised: and with reference to it, this circumcision, which took place immediately on their entering the promised land, was called "the second time." It is evident that the Israelites, who had been born in the wilderness, were left uncircumcised; but it is not so manifest whether this omission arose from negligence; or whether the Lord dispensed with it during their wanderings, when every removal would have rendered it dangerous to many infants; or whether the nation was laid under a kind of interdict, when the rebellious generation was doomed to die in the wilderness. It is generally agreed, that the passover was celebrated only once, during Israel's continuance in the desert; and the people there did not want any mark of distinction from other nations: so that circumcision, in respect of its principal objects, was not so requisite in that situation, as after they were settled in Canaan; where every instituted ordinance, and every method of distinction and separation, must be used. The command, however, given to Joshua, and by him to the people, to perform this painful operation on so great a multitude, immediately upon entering the enemy's country, when it was well known that they would by it be for some time utterly disabled, formed a very great trial of their faith; (Note, Gen. 34:25-28.) and their prompt and universal obedience, in such critical circumstances, manifested a confidence in the Lord's protection, and a submission to his will, which confirm the sentiment, that this was the best of all the generations of Israel.—As circumcision might be performed by any one; though the number to be circumcised was great, the whole would soon be completed, probably on the first day after their passage over Jordan.

V. 9. When the Israelites were brought into the promised land, and the covenant of the Lord was thus solemnly ratified with them, as the seed of Abraham, by the appointed seal; the reproach of their Egyptian bondage, and idolatrous customs, was rolled away; and it was plain, that the Lord had not brought them forth into the wilderness to destroy them. (Notes, Gen. 17:7-12, 23-27. Ex. 4:24-26. 1 Sam. 17:25, 26.)—The word "Gilgal" signifies rolling. The same place was also called "the hill of the foreskins;" because of the great numbers whose foreskins were left buried there. (3)

V. 10. The general circumcision of the people was preparatory to the solemn observance of the passover in its season; for no uncircumcised person might eat of it. (Notes, Ex. 12:43-45, 48, 49.) This was a proper entrance upon the promised land, as a holy land. The celebration of the passover immediately preceded Israel's departure out of Egypt; and formed nearly their first employment on entering Canaan.

had the children of Israel manna any more; 'but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year.

13 ¶ And it came to pass, when Joshua was by Jericho, that he lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold, there stood a Man over against him, with his sword drawn in his hand: and Joshua went unto him, and said unto him, Art thou for us, or for our adversaries?

14 And he said, Nay; but as 'Captain of the host of the LORD am I now come. And Joshua fell on his face to the earth, and did worship, and said unto him, What saith my lord unto his servant?

15 And the Captain of the LORD's host said unto Joshua, Loose thy shoe from off thy foot; for the place whereon thou standest is holy. And Joshua did so.

Having been circumcised on the eleventh day of the month, they would be enabled to eat the passover on the evening of the fourteenth; while those who had before been circumcised might prepare for their brethren: and by the time that the days of unleavened bread were ended, they would be perfectly healed and fit for action. In the mean time the Canaanites were intimidated, and restrained from assaulting them. Nay, their very confidence in thus setting their enemies at defiance, while they attended to the ordinances of their religion, and engaged JEHOVAH to fight their battles, if it were known among the inhabitants of the land, would tend to increase their consternation. (Note, Ex. 34:24.)

V. 11, 12. The people would find abundance of old corn in the deserted granaries of the affrighted inhabitants; and the barley harvest being ripe, after offering the sheaf of first-fruits, they ate also new parched corn: and thus the manna, being no longer necessary, ceased, after having been sent them regularly for almost forty years! (Ex. 16:35.)

V. 13—15. Joshua was either taking a view of Jericho, in order to attack it, or employed in serious meditation and prayer, or both alternately; when he was surprised with the appearance of one, in form as "a Man, ... with his sword drawn in his hand." Joshua, not at all intimidated, accosted him, and demanded of him whether he was an ally or an enemy; and he received for answer, that he was come not only as an Ally, but as Commander-in-chief over the LORD's host, and over Joshua himself: upon which Joshua recognised and worshipped him as his Lord; and reverently prostrating himself upon the earth, waited and asked to know his will. Not only was this worship received, but he was further commanded to show the same token of respect to the heavenly vision, which had been required when the LORD appeared to Moses in the bush: (Notes, Ex. 3:2—6.) and this being done, he received from him the orders contained in the ensuing chapter, which is a continuation of the subject, and is very improperly separated from the close of this.—All these circumstances prove beyond a doubt, that this armed Man was no other than the Son of God, JEHOVAH, the second Person in the sacred Trinity, the Captain of our salvation, anticipating his incarnation, and assuring Joshua of success in this war. (Notes, Gen. 32:30. Hos. 12:3—6. Phil. 2:5—8.) PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

How dreadful is the case of those, who are irreversibly devoted to destruction, for whom no mercy is reserved, and who see the deserved vengeance of God advancing towards them with steady pace, without any possibility of averting or escaping it! Such will be the horrible situation of the wicked, when summoned to appear before the tribunal of an offended God. Nor can words express the anguish of their feelings, or the greatness of their terror, when they shall call in vain "upon the rocks and mountains to fall upon them," and hide them from the intolerable frown of their angry Judge, and from the dire sentence which he is prepared to execute upon them. As "men's hearts cannot endure, or their hands be strong," in such circumstances; oh, that they would now take warning, even before it be too late, that they would flee for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before them in the salvation of the gospel!—The maxims and conduct of the church of God are widely different from those of the world. What other general ever opened a campaign in an enemy's country,

CHAPTER VI.

Jericho is shut up: and the Lord instructs Joshua how to conduct the siege, 1—5. Joshua directs the priests to carry the ark round the city, preceded by other priests, sounding with trumpets, and attended by the people, 6, 7. They thus march round the city daily for six days, and seven times on the seventh day, 8—16. The city and all in it, (except Rahab and those with her,) are devoted to destruction, 17—19. The people shout, the walls fall down, and the city is taken and destroyed; but Rahab is preserved, 20—25. A curse is denounced on him who should rebuild Jericho, 26. Joshua becomes renowned, 27.

NOW Jericho 'was straitly shut up, 'because' of the children of Israel: none went out, and none came in.

2 And the LORD said unto Joshua, 'See, I have given unto thine hand Jericho, and the king thereof, and the mighty men of valour.

3 And 'ye shall compass the city, all ye men of war, and go round about the city once. Thus shalt thou do six days.

4 And seven priests shall bear before the ark seven 'trumpets of rams' horns: and the seventh in the manner that Joshua did? On such occasions, all attention paid to the exercises of religion is too generally considered as a needless waste of time. Yet, if the help of God be indeed the best security for success, and if his anger is more to be feared than the sword of any enemy, it will be found true policy to begin every expedition with repentance of sin, and attendance on the solemn worship of the Lord, and with using every method of securing his protection; though to a carnal eye that method may appear unfavourable to success. (Note, Matt. 6:33, 34.)—But especially the Christian soldier must thus begin his spiritual warfare: nor can he face any of his enemies without "the circumcision of the heart," as the internal "seal of the righteousness of faith," and the ratification of the new covenant between a reconciled God and his soul. (Notes, Rom. 2:25—29. 4:9—12.) Then feeding on Christ, the Paschal Lamb who was sacrificed for sinners, and keeping the "feast with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth," he will be prepared for the conflict. (Note, 1 Cor. 5:6—8.) Yet he will not prosper so long as he neglects any of the ordinances or commandments of God; or lies under the reproach of living in conformity to the world, or of acting in any respect inconsistently with his holy profession. But duly attending to the worship of God and the means of grace, and daily girding on his divine armour, he may boldly defy all his enemies, and rest assured of the presence and protection of the great "Captain of salvation," whose Person he will reverently worship, whose orders he will diligently observe, on whose assistance he will entirely depend, and by whom he will at length be made more than conqueror.—Many things are amiss in the best state of the church on earth, but when young persons have not so much as the appearance of religion, it will redound to the reproach of their parents, being generally the consequence of their misconduct. When the upright believer is convinced of his neglect or sin, he will readily set about amendment, and when he is in a proper frame of mind, he will account the most self-denying commands, or mysterious dispensations of the Lord, reasonable, wise, and kind. Finally, what the Lord requires of his people, he will supply them with the means of performing: when one source of provision fails, he will open another: nor shall the manna for their souls ever fail, till they arrive at the Canaan above, and feast on its rich and inexhaustible provisions.

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1. The king and people of Jericho did not possess courage enough to attack the invaders; but they shut themselves up in the city, where doubtless they expected to defend themselves under the protection of the walls, till succours should arrive from other quarters. It does not appear that they made any advances toward an accommodation.

V. 2. (Note, 5:13—15.) It is indisputable that the very person, who in the preceding chapter called himself "the Captain of the host of the LORD," is here called JEHOVAH, 'which shows he was not a created angel, but God himself, who alone could promise and perform what follows.' Bp. Patrick. By commission from him, and according to his instructions, Joshua was directed to conduct his hostilities against the Canaanites: and this authority sanctioned, and even sanctified all the terrible executions with which it was attended; the sword in his hand being the sword of justice drawn against condemned criminals. (Notes, Num. 31:2, 14—18.)

V. 3—5. By prescribing this extraordinary method of besieging Jericho, the Lord was pleased to put honour upon the ark as the symbol of his presence, and to manifest that all the victories of Israel were from him: for this was a specimen of them. The faith and patience of the people were thus proved and increased. Their regard to the priesthood likewise would be augmented; and they would be induced the more readily to give the priests their dues, when the Lord had thus employed them in the conquest of the land. The preaching of the gospel also, and its effects were typified.—The words day ye shall compass the city ⁷seven times, and the priests shall blow with the trumpets.

5 And it shall come to pass, that when they make a long blast with the ram's horn, and when ye hear the sound of the trumpet, all ^bthe people shall shout with a great shout: and ^cthe wall of the city shall fall down ^dflat, and the people shall ascend up every man straight before him.

6 ¶ And Joshua the son of Nun called the priests, and said unto them, ^kTake up the ark of the covenant, and let seven priests bear seven trumpets of rams' horns before the ark of the LORD.

7 And he said unto the people, Pass on, and compass the city, and let him ^lthat is armed pass on before the ark of the LORD.

8 And it came to pass, when Joshua had spoken unto the people, that the seven priests bearing the seven trumpets of rams' horns passed on ^mbefore the LORD, and blew with the trumpets: and the ark of the covenant of the LORD followed them.

9 And the armed men went before the priests that blew with the trumpets, and the ⁿrearward came after the ark, the priests going on, and blowing with the trumpets.

10 And Joshua had commanded the people, saying, Ye shall not shout, nor make ^oany noise with your voice, neither shall ^pany word proceed out of your mouth ^quntil the day I bid you shout; then shall ye shout.

11 So the ark of the LORD compassed the city, going about ^rit once: and they came into the camp, and lodged in the camp.

12 And ^sJoshua rose early in the morning, and the priests took up the ark of the LORD.

13 And seven priests, bearing seven trumpets of rams' horns before the ark of the LORD, ^twent on continually, and blew with the trumpets: and the armed men went before them; but the rearward came after the ark of the LORD, the priests going on and blowing with the trumpets.

14 And ^uthe second day they compassed the city once, and returned into the camp: so they did six days.

[Practical Observations.]

15 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that they rose early, ^vabout the dawning of the day, and compassed the city after the same manner seven times: ^wonly on that day they compassed the city seven times.

16 And it came to pass at the seventh time, when the priests blew with the trumpets, Joshua said unto the people, ^xShout, for the LORD hath given you the city.

17 And the city shall be ^yaccursed, even it, and all that are therein, to the LORD: ^zonly Rahab the harlot shall live, she and all that are with her in the house, ^{aa}because she hid the messengers that we sent.

18 And ye, ^{ab}in any wise keep yourselves from the accursed thing, ^{ac}lest ye make yourselves accursed when ye take of the accursed thing, and ^{ad}make the camp of Israel a curse, ^{ae}and trouble it.

19 But ^{af}all the silver, and gold, and vessels of brass and iron, ^{ag}are ^{ah}consecrated unto the LORD: they shall come into ^{ai}the treasury of the LORD.

20 So the people shouted when the priests blew with the trumpets: and it came to pass, when the people heard the sound of the trumpet, and the people shouted with a great shout, that ^{aj}the wall fell down ^{ak}flat, so that the people went up into the city, every man straight before him, and they took the city.

(שִׁשְׁרֵי תְּרִיבִים), translated "rams' horns," may be rendered trumpets of the jubilees, that is, such as were to be blown in the year of jubilee: for the entrance of Israel into the promised land was indeed a jubilee to them. (Notes, Lev. 25:8-22.)

Instead of the dreadful trumpet of war, they were ordered to sound the trumpet of joy, as already conquerors, in the anticipation of assured faith. The word signifying horn, occurs indeed in the fifth verse; but, even if interpreted literally, it only proves that horns were used, without restricting the meaning to rams' horns: and perhaps horn may be understood figuratively for trumpet. (1 Chr. 25:5.) No scriptural instance, on any other subject, is adduced, in which רֶמֶס signifies a ram; that it has this meaning, is principally inferred from the Chaldee paraphrase. Probably the trumpets before made, and others of the same kind, were used on this occasion; for, as the number of the priests increased, more trumpets were doubtless formed, either of silver, or of some other materials. (Note, Num. 10:2-10.)—The repeated prescription of the number seven must not pass unnoticed: "Seven priests," "seven trumpets," "seven days," and "seven times on the seventh day." (Marg. Ref. e, f.) This attention to the number seven, in Scripture, probably had reference to the creation of the world in six days, and the Lord's resting on the seventh day, which completed the first week: this was the first reason assigned for the sanctification of the sabbath, and occasioned the measuring of time by the periodical return of the seventh day, in most ages and nations ever since. (Notes, Gen. 2:2,3.) One of these seven days must have been a sabbath-day; the Jews say, that it was the last, on which the city was taken; and as they were doing the work of God, for his glory, no objection arises against it from the fourth commandment; any more than against the man's carrying his bed on the sabbath-day, in honour of Christ who had healed him. (Notes, John 5:10-18.)

V. 7. It may be supposed, that the procession was made at such a distance, as to be out of the reach of arrows or missile weapons from the walls. It would be needful for the army to go before in order to level the fences and remove all obstructions in passing round the city. So unprecedented a procession would doubtless at first create much surprise, and some consternation, among the inhabitants; but when one day passed after another, and no effect followed, they would probably become secure, and treat the whole with derision as a senseless parade.

V. 9. The armed men preceded the priests who blew the trumpets, and those who carried the ark: but after them the people in general seem to have followed, with some persons appointed to close the rear, and to prevent any from straggling from the main body.

V. 10. This implies, that a profound silence must be observed, and that no conversation was allowed.

V. 16. Given you the city. It is not before said, that Joshua had given the people this assurance: and some think that he was directed to conceal from them the event of the procession, in order to make the fuller proof of their faith and obedience. (Notes, 3:2-4.)—He could not give this notice to the whole body, except by messengers, sent to make proclamation in different places: and these might sufficiently notify what follows also, though not before explicitly mentioned.

V. 17-19. (Note, Lev. 27:28,29.) This city was, as it were, the first-fruits of Canaan, and as such wholly devoted to the Lord. The only advantages which the people derived from this miraculous victory, were the destruction of their enemies, the dominion of the land, and the enriching of the sanctuary. For every living creature must be slain, except Rahab, and those who had taken refuge in her house: whatever part of the spoil was not consumed with fire, was ordered to be brought into the treasury of the Lord: and if any Israelite dared to appropriate the smallest part to himself, the curse of Jericho would rest upon him, and upon the camp of Israel, until he and all that appertained to him were utterly destroyed. (Notes, 7: Deut. 7:25,26. 1 Sam. 15:1-3, 8,9,22,23. 1 Kings 20:41,42.) The whole was to be made a solemn and awful sacrifice to the justice of God upon a people which had filled up the measure of their iniquities.

V. 21. The Canaanites were ripe for destruction; and the Lord was pleased, instead of destroying them by a pestilence, a famine, an earthquake, a deluge, or fire from heaven, to employ the Israelites as the executioners of his vengeance, both for their warning and instruction, and for that of all who read these records. Had an angel been commissioned to slay them, (as one did Sennacherib's army,) who would have charged him with iniquity or cruelty? (Note, 2 Kings 19:35.)—In all public calamities infants are involved; and tens of thousands of infants die in great agony every year. Now, either God is not the Agent in these calamities, (which opinion, though often implied in men's reasonings on these subjects, is not far from atheism;) or they must consist with the most perfect jus

23 And the young men that were spies went in, and brought out Rahab, and her father, and her mother, and her brethren, and all that she had; and they brought out all her ^kkindred, and ^lleft them without the camp of Israel.

24 And they ^hburnt the city with fire, and all that was therein: ^monly the silver, and the gold,

25 And Joshua ⁿsaved Rahab the harlot alive, and her father's household, and all that she had; and ^oshe dwelleth in Israel even unto this day: because she hid the messengers which Joshua sent to spy out Jericho.

26 ^pAnd Joshua ^qadjured them at that time, saying, ^rCursed be the man before the LORD, that riseth up and buildeth this city Jericho: he shall lay the foundation thereof in his first-born, and in his youngest son shall he set up the gates of it.

tice and goodness. What injustice then could there be, in his ordering the destruction of a guilty race by the sword of his people? Or what injustice can be charged on them, while executing his express commission, as ratified by undeniable miracles? If the history be authentic, this was the case: and that must be judged of by other rules.—It is evident that the hand of God would be far more noticed in these uncommon events, than if he had destroyed his enemies by the ordinary course of second causes; as the very objections and clamours of infidels demonstrate; and the malignity of sin, with the indignation of God against sinners, and his power and determination to inflict condign punishment on them, would be far more conspicuous and impressive. Thus, in all governments, solemn public executions, in which the punishment of the criminal is avowedly inflicted for a specified offence, have always been deemed far more suited to produce salutary effects on the minds of all concerned; than secretly and without notice putting criminals to death in a dungeon, or elsewhere. In short, every man, who by reading the account of these awful judgments, in any age or place, has been led to a deeper sense of the evil of sin, and warned to repent and seek mercy from the Lord, will to eternal ages glorify the divine wisdom and goodness, in the very dispensations, which embolden the blasphemies of the impenitent and unbelieving. (Notes, 2. Num. 31:2.)

V. 22, 23. As Rahab's house stood upon the wall of the city, the preservation of it must have been the effect of the Lord's special care: for had he so pleased, she might have perished when the wall fell down, without any violation of the engagement into which the spies had entered in behalf of Israel. (Notes, 2:12-20.)—But her faith saved her: this temporal deliverance was the pledge of eternal felicity: she was first honoured as the means of preservation to her relations; and then she became a wife and mother in Israel, and an ancestor of David and of Christ!—She and all her relations were, however, excluded from the camp of Israel, till they had been purified, according to the law.

V. 25. She hid, &c. Which proceeded not merely from her humanity, but was a noble act of courageous faith. ^h By Patrick.

V. 26. Jericho, as devoted to utter destruction, was to be left a perpetual desolation, and if any man ventured to rebuild it, he would do it at his peril. (Note, 1 Kings 16:34.) Probably Joshua bound the nation, by means of their princes and elders, by an oath, as connected with this curse, that they would leave it in ruins.

V. 27. No wonder that the fame of that commander was celebrated, even by enemies, before whom the river was divided, and the strong walls of the city fell down, without any visible cause.—Joshua might very well write this of himself, as the whole honour was referred to the LORD God of Israel.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14. When sinners are repeatedly warned to flee from the wrath to come, and alarmed and disquieted in their consciences with apprehensions of impending vengeance, and yet harden their hearts in impenitence, and disdain to sue for peace or ask forgiveness from God; they may be considered as "devoted to utter destruction" nor can any counsel, courage, strength, or numbers, afford them the least security, in their infuriated contest with the Almighty.—When the Lord effects his purposes by such means and instruments as we deem aliquate; our views are apt to terminate upon them, and to overlook Him "who worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will." To obviate this propensity, our God sometimes deviates from the common track, and works by methods or instruments, which in themselves appear not at all suited to produce the intended effect; nay, indeed have no direct connexion with it. (Notes, Num. 21:6-9. Ez. 37:1-10. John 9:4-7.) But it is our duty to use only those means which the Lord appoints, or allows; to submit to his will and depend upon his blessing; and with patient waiting and self-denying diligence to expect the event: and we shall thus succeed as far as is conducive to our real good.—He takes peculiar pleasure in leading men's attention to his own truths and ordinances; in exercising their faith and patience; in inuring them to submit their understandings implicitly to his teaching, and their will to his authority; and in securing to himself their praises and thankful acknowledgments. In promoting true religion especially, he works by means and instruments, which the proud, the learned, the wise, and the wealthy, of this world generally despise. The doctrine of a crucified Saviour, GOD MANIFESTED IN THE FLESH, as the only foundation of a sinner's hope of acceptance, and the only source of sanctifying grace; preached by ministers, frequently of obscure birth and moderate abilities, and destitute of the advantages of eminent learning or eloquence; sometimes even homely in their appearance and address; and who are themselves conscious of much unworthiness, and insufficiency for so arduous and important an employ:—this, I say, from generation to generation, in every country of the world, has been the Lord's ordinary method of accomplishing those purposes, which philosophers, moralists, and lawgivers, have attempted in vain; namely, of teaching numbers "to do good who have been accustomed to do evil." The disregarded Trumpet blown by the despised minister,—the preaching of the cross, which is foolishness to them that perish,—is only the token: the operation is from God. (Notes, Rom. 1:13-16. 1 Cor. 1:20-31. 2:3-5. 2 Cor. 4:7. 10:1-6.) When that signal is given in simple dependence upon "the exceeding greatness of his mighty power," it becomes indeed mighty through him and Satan's strong holds fall before it. Thus, at different periods, have heathen idolatry and Popish superstition sunk before this trumpet's feeble blast, attended with the shout, the fervent united prayers of the true Israel.—At some future period, (perhaps commencing early in the seventh thousand years,) this gospel shall be preached far more earnestly, more generally, and more successfully than ever; all Satan's remaining bulwarks shall fall down to the ground; and the kingdoms of the earth shall become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Christ. (Notes, Is. 30:23-25. Rev. 11:15-18.)—In the mean time the gospel is never preached in vain, in any nation, city, or village, by ministers of any name who simply seek the glory of God and the salvation of souls. Let experience decide, whether in our age and nation this same "foolishness of preaching" has not done more towards checking the enormous progress of profligacy and open ungodliness, and producing a regard to the ordinances and commandments of God in every part of the land, than all other means combined; and whether a greater number of undeniable instances of atrocious sinners being transformed into new creatures, leading new lives, and becoming excellent relations and members of society cannot be produced, among those who profess and preach "Christ Jesus and him crucified," than among those who patronise a system, deemed more rational, wise, and liberal.—The latter is man's contrivance, and is left to its own efficacy; the former is the ordinance of God, and like the trumpets sounding round the walls of Jericho, is rendered effectual by his almighty power.

V. 15-27. Would we witness the blessed effects of the gospel, the ministers of Christ must strictly adhere to the directions of their Lord, and simply expect, pray, and wait for his blessing; not yielding to weariness, though they long seem to labour in vain. They must be "instant in season, and out of season," embracing every opportunity of preaching the word to few or to many, every day, but abounding on the Lord's day; and they must disregard the causeless reproaches, scoffs, and slanders of opposers: but be careful that they give no occasion to those, who seek occasion of speaking reproachfully. The people also, who know the joyful sound, should show their concurrence by a diligent attendance upon the word preached: they should endeavour to strengthen the hands and encourage the hearts of the ministers, by their holy examples and concurring endeavours, in their families and among their connexions; and unite in earnest and constant prayers for the blessing of God upon their labours.—But it should be peculiarly noticed, that the same gospel, which proclaims salvation to the chief of sinners who believe, becomes the occasion of increasing and accelerating condemnation to the obstinate and impenitent; who are never more in danger of immediate destruction, than when most careless and secure. (1 Thes. 5:3.)—Where the Lord hath given faith he will in due time complete salvation: and when his grace is betowed upon one in a family, that one is often made the honoured instrument of bringing others to share the same blessings.—The

CHAPTER VII.

Achan takes of the accursed thing; and Israel is defeated before Ai, 1-5. Joshua, with the elders, humbles himself, and complains before God, 6-9; who shows the cause, and directs him how to proceed, 10-15. Achan taken by lot, confesses his crime, 16-23. He and all belonging to him are stoned, burned, and destroyed, 24-26.

BUT the children of Israel committed a trespass in the accursed thing: for Achan, the son of Carmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, took of the accursed thing: and the anger of the Lord was kindled against the children of Israel.

2 And Joshua sent men from Jericho to Ai, which is beside Beth-aven, on the east side of Beth-el, and spake unto them, saying, "Go up and view the country. And the men went up and viewed Ai.

3 And they returned to Joshua, and said unto him, Let not all the people go up: but let about two or three thousand men go up and smite Ai, and make not all the people to labour thither: for they are but few.

4 So there went up thither of the people about sovereign judgments of God, however they are at present objected to, will, at the day when the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed, appear most perfectly righteous.—Whoever is honoured as an instrument in the Lord's work, should count the glory of God his first object, and patiently wait his time and manner of being graciously recompensed; for a covetous, selfish professor, or minister of religion, who is more attentive to his own gain than to the glory of God, is not only accused himself, but a curse to the society or congregation to which he belongs.—That can never be lost which is devoted to God, nor wasted which is spent in his service; and not the least kindness shown to any of his people for his sake will go unrewarded.—But how deep are the counsels of God! Grace abounds to some of the chief of sinners, while vengeance is poured out upon others! His salvation and his curse are both for ever: and we be to that man who attempts to obliterate the memorials, or disannul the attestations, which the Lord has made, of his abhorrence of sin, and his vengeance against impenitent sinners!

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1. The most promising appearances had been often blasted by the sins of the people; but here wrath came upon the whole congregation, through the sin of one man! (Note, 22:20.)—Contrary to the express command of God, and in contempt of his awful curse, (Note, 6:17-19.) Achan had ventured to appropriate part of the spoil of Jericho. The temptation was strong; and there is more cause to wonder that none else were guilty, than that one was; especially as the Israelites were comparatively poor, and such treasures as Jericho contained were alluring objects. At the opening of the worship at the tabernacle, we meet with one striking instance of the severity of divine justice. (Notes, Lev. 10:1-3.) Here, upon the commencement of the wars of Canaan, we read of another: and the infancy of the Christian church presents a similar example. (Note, Acts 5:1-11.) All these were doubtless intended to increase reverence and godly fear, and to promote circumspection; as well as to prevent wickedness in general, and hypocrisy in particular, from disgracing the camp of Israel, or the church of God.—That the example of Achan might excite the more general vigilance in Joshua, in the elders, and in every Israelite, they were given to understand, that the guilt of an individual, in these atrocious crimes, would be accounted a national sin, until detected and punished; for they were all one body; nor could any part be infected with so dire a disease, without the detriment and danger of the whole.

V. 2. (Notes, Gen. 12:8. 28:19.) Beth-el, which signifies the house of God, seems to have been afterwards called Beth-aven, or the house of vanity, when the golden calf was placed there to be worshipped: yet it is probable the name Beth-aven was far more ancient than that event; and that either some town, or some tract of land, in that neighbourhood, was so called in the days of Joshua. (18:12.)—It is taken for granted by some learned men, that terms of peace were offered to each of these cities, before it was assaulted, according to the law given by Moses. (Note, Deut. 20:10-18.) But several things in that law could be applicable only to cities belonging to other nations, and not to the devoted Canaanites; no mention is made of this in the history; and some things seem irreconcilable with the supposition, that peace was offered to these cities. "The Israelites were to offer peace to the Canaanites, and spare their lives, on condition of their emigrating for ever from their country; or renouncing idolatry, adopting the principles of the patriarchal religion contained in the precepts of Noah, resigning their territory, dissolving their three thousand men; and they fled before the men of Ai.

5 And the men of Ai smote of them about thirty and six men: for they chased them from before the gate, even unto Shebarim, and smote them in the going down: wherefore the hearts of the people melted, and became as water.

6 And Joshua rent his clothes, and fell to the earth upon his face before the ark of the Lord until the even-tide, he and the elders of Israel, and put dust upon their heads.

7 And Joshua said, Alas! O Lord God, wherefore hast thou at all brought this people over Jordan, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us? Would to God we had been content, and dwelt on the other side Jordan!

8 O Lord, what shall I say, when Israel turneth their backs before their enemies!

9 For the Canaanites, and all the inhabitants of the land shall hear of it, and shall environ us round, and cut off our name from the earth: and what wilt thou do unto thy great name?

national union, and submitting to become slaves. For it is evident, that they could not tolerate idolatry, nor enter into any equal leagues, which the idols who were worshipped as the guardian gods of the adverse party, must be supposed to witness and sanction; nor leave in possession of their cities and lands, those nations, whose country the great JEHOVAH had assigned to them as their peculiar inheritance. . . . But if the nations of Canaan had renounced idolatry, and submitted to slavery or emigration, they might have been preserved from extermination, is strongly confirmed, by that passage of the sacred history, which adds this remarkable observation: "Joshua made war a long time with all these kings.—There was not a city that made peace with the children of Israel, save the Hivites, the inhabitants of Gibeon: all others they took in battle; for it was of the Lord to harden their hearts, that they might come against Israel in battle, that he might destroy them utterly, and that they might have no favour, but that he might destroy them, as the Lord commanded Moses." Graves on the Pentateuch, Vol. ii. note, pp. 38-45. (Note, 11:19, 20.)—It appears evident, that had the Canaanites, or any part of them, of their own accord, sued for peace, or rather for the sparing of their lives, on the terms here mentioned; they might have been spared. For the Israelites had no commission to pursue into other lands those who, fleeing from the sword of Joshua, emigrated; nor did any of the rulers or kings of Israel afterwards attempt to destroy the subjected remnant of the ancient inhabitants. (Note, 1 Kings 9:20-22.)—But the supposition that these terms were to be previously proposed to them, has no scriptural foundation. (Notes, 9:3-5, 14, 15.)

V. 3-5. The easy conquest of Jericho had not only encouraged the people to hope for great success, through the power of the Lord fighting for them; but had also excited a contempt of the enemy, and a disposition to spare themselves, and to expect the Lord to do all for them, without using the proper means. Even Joshua seems to have formed his measures on this occasion, without asking counsel of the Lord; (Notes, 9:14, 15. Num. 27:21.) who left all parties to follow their own devices, in order to bring to light and punish Achan's sin. Yet, as they must have been unsuccessful, now that the Lord had left them, his providence should be observed in this circumstance; for the discomfiture of the whole army would have been far more discouraging, than that of a small company.—Being, however, left to themselves, their courage wholly forsook them, and they fled with precipitation: and though the loss sustained was comparatively small, they were excessively dismayed on account of it.—Whether those who fell were secretly guilty of any atrocious crimes or not, the Lord was no doubt righteous in this dispensation.

V. 6-9. Joshua, and the elders of Israel, very justly considered this ill success as a divine rebuke, and properly expressed their sorrow and humiliation before the ark of the Lord, in the most self-abasing posture, and with the customary tokens of deep distress. (Marg. Ref. m, n.) Joshua's pleas in prayer also were excellent; and his concern for the honour of God, far more than even for the fate of Israel, if their enemies should prevail and destroy them, was the genuine language of "the spirit of adoption." (Notes, Ex. 32:11-14. Num. 14:13-19.) Yet this was evidently mixed with much infirmity. To consider this trivial check as the forerunner of total ruin; to inquire wherefore the Lord had brought them over Jordan; and to admit the thought, that it was in order to deliver them into the hands of the Amorites, were proofs of unbelief, which may be accounted for, but

10 And the LORD said unto Joshua, Get thee up; wherefore liest thou thus upon thy face?

11 Israel hath sinned, and they have also transgressed my covenant which I commanded them; for they have even taken of the accursed thing, and have also stolen, and dissembled also, and they have put it even among their own stuff.

12 Therefore the children of Israel could not stand before their enemies, but turned their backs before their enemies, because they were accursed: neither will I be with you any more, except ye destroy the accursed from among you.

13 Up, sanctify the people, and say, Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow; for thus saith the LORD God of Israel, There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Israel: thou canst not stand before thine enemies, until ye take away the accursed thing from among you.

14 In the morning therefore ye shall be brought according to your tribes: and it shall be, that the tribe which the LORD taketh shall come according to the families thereof; and the family which the LORD shall take shall come by households; and the household which the LORD shall take shall come man by man.

15 And it shall be, that he that is taken with the accursed thing shall be burnt with fire, he and all that he hath; because he hath transgressed the covenant of the LORD, and because he hath wrought folly in Israel.

16 So Joshua arose up early in the morning, were wholly inexcusable, especially after the express promises and miraculous successes which he had just before received. —To attempt, by a qualifying interpretation, fully to vindicate so high a character as Joshua, would form a perfect contrast to the impartiality of the sacred historian.

V. 10-12. At the very time, when the Lord showed his gracious acceptance of Joshua's humiliation and prayers, he gently rebuked his despondency and unbelief. He had already spent a full proportion of time in this manner; and, as chief magistrate he had other work to do; which when he had duly performed, he might expect better success. (Notes, Ezra 10:2-5.)—The Lord had not failed of his promises, nor was he unable to help his people: but they had sinned; and by appropriating a part of the devoted spoils of Jericho, they had exposed themselves to the wrath of God, as well as deprived themselves of his protection; and the crime was so great, that unless the offender were made a public example, it would be interpreted as a breach of covenant, and the Lord would not any more be with the people.—(Notes, 1. 6:17-19.)

V. 13-18. The Lord did not point out the criminal immediately; but he left the matter in ambiguity for some time, and at last brought it to light gradually: that both magistrates and people might learn to do their duty, and to keep a vigilant eye over one another; and that the delay and the process might make the transaction more solemn, and excite the more careful self-examination, and sanctification of themselves, by every method appointed in the law. (Note, 35.) After this, the decision seems to have been made by lot, as an appeal to the heart-searching God. (Note, Prov. 16:33.)—The feelings of Achan must have been very poignant, when he was thus, by one lot following another, singled out as the accursed person, for whose sake wrath was come upon Israel. (Notes, 1 Sam. 14:36-44. Jon. 1:7-10.)—It may be inquired why Achan, being conscious of guilt, did not abscond: but it may be answered that his flight would have been a confession of the crime, which perhaps he still hoped to conceal; he could only have retired among the devoted Canaanites; and he would have been in great danger of being intercepted, had he attempted it. Indeed it is not probable, that Joshua and the elders publicly disclosed the business, till the morning of the decision.—Some think that Achan, being deeply penitent, waited his doom in submission to the divine justice: yet in that case it is most probable that he would have made an immediate confession.—The tribe, family, and parentage of the offender are specified with great exactness, that the infamy might not rest on the reputation of any other of the same name. (Marg. Ref. r.)

V. 19. Without the least reproach, and with great meekness, Joshua gave Achan the best counsel of which his and brought Israel, by their tribes; and the tribe of Judah was taken:

17 And he brought the family of Judah; and he took the family of the Zarahites: and he brought the family of the Zarahites man by man; and Zabdi was taken:

18 And he brought his household man by man; and Achan, the son of Carmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, was taken.

[Practical Observations.]

19 ¶ And Joshua said unto Achan, My son, give, I pray thee, glory to the LORD God of Israel, and make confession unto him, and tell me now what thou hast done; hide it not from me.

20 And Achan answered Joshua, and said, Indeed I have sinned against the LORD God of Israel, and thus and thus have I done.

21 When I saw among the spoils a goodly Babylonish garment, and two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them, and took them; and, behold, they are hid in the earth in the midst of my tent, and the silver under it.

22 So Joshua sent messengers, and they ran unto the tent: and, behold, it was hid in his tent, and the silver under it.

23 And they took them out of the midst of the tent, and brought them unto Joshua, and unto all the children of Israel, and laid them out before the LORD.

24 And Joshua, and all Israel with him, took circumstances could possibly admit. He addressed him even with the tender appellation of "My son," and exhorted him "to give glory unto God by confessing his sin." This would imply an acknowledgment, that the commandment was reasonable, and the penalty equitable; that he himself was indeed the transgressor, and merited the punishment. It would give the Lord the glory of his omniscience, justice, holiness, authority, and truth, and indeed of all his perfections; and by taking shame to himself, and accepting the punishment of his sin in this world, Achan might best seek for mercy to his soul in the world to come. (Note, Ps. 51: title.)—Joshua's conduct in this difficult service is worthy of the imitation of all Christian magistrates, when under the painful necessity of pronouncing the sentence of death upon criminals.

V. 20. Had not Achan's confession been extorted by the preceding process, and delayed till he could no longer conceal his guilt, he might justly have been deemed a true penitent. Though late, however, it was frank and ingenuous: he not only allowed the fact, and the offence against Israel, but acknowledged "that he had sinned against the LORD God of Israel;" he descended to particulars, attempted no excuse or extenuation, complained not of the severity of the sentence, and made no attempts to prevent or delay its execution. (Notes, Job 33:27-30. Jon. 1:8-16. Luke 23:39-43.)

V. 21. The temptation entered by the eye, and excited the concupiscence of the carnal heart: thus "lust was conceived and sin brought forth." (Notes, Gen. 3:6. Ex. 20:17. Jam. 1:13-15.) The goodly Babylonish garment, (some magnificent robe brought from Shinar, or Babylon, doubtless at a great price,) was rescued from the flames: and gold and silver, to the amount of a hundred pounds sterling, or rather more, were sacrilegiously kept back from the treasury of the Lord. For such a goodly price did Achan render himself accursed, forfeit the fair prospect of a rich inheritance in Canaan, become "the troubler of Israel," and ruin his whole family. Besides the imminent danger to which he exposed his immortal soul! No sooner had he got possession of his plunder than it became his burden: had he not been miraculously detected, he would have been consumed with terrors, and not have dared to use his ill-gotten treasure: and when the other Israelites had been enriched, and enjoyed their abundance with credit and a blessing, he would have lost all the comfort of his portion! So differently do the objects of temptation appear at a distance, from what they do when apprehended, and when the infatuation ceases! (Notes, 2 Kings 5:20-27. Matt. 27:3-5.)

V. 22. The silver, and probably the gold also, lay under the garment of Shinar, as it is called in the original.

V. 23. The accursed thing being thus separated from Israel's substance, and laid before the LORD, both evi-

25 And Joshua said, ^bWhy hast thou troubled us? the LORD shall trouble thee this day. And all Israel stoned him with stones, and burned them with fire, after they had stoned them with stones.

26 And they raised over him a great heap of stones unto this day. ^mSo the LORD turned from the fierceness of his anger: wherefore the name of that place was called The valley of Achor unto this day.

denced Achan's guilt, and the innocence of others; that the wrath of the Lord might rest on him, and be turned away from them.

V. 24. His sons, &c. No intimation is given that Achan's sons, or any of his family, were accessory to his crime: nothing but their punishment can excite a suspicion of it. Magistrates indeed were forbidden to put the children to death for the parents' crimes, unless expressly authorized to do so by God himself: but all lives are the Lord's, and forfeited by sin; the ungodly deserve worse punishment than temporal death, and the righteous are the sooner taken to heaven. Some have thought that Achan's children were only spectators of his awful doom; but the narrative implies that they were involved in it. (25).—This circumstance would be a vehement expression of the exceeding enormity of the offence, and would render the example more affecting and alarming. (Note, Ex. 20:5.)

V. 25, 26. It seems that Achan and his family were first stoned, and then burned; which might denote the anger of God, that beyond death will pursue and punish the impenitent.—The heap of stones would perpetuate the memory of his sin and punishment, for the instruction of future generations: as would also the name given to the place, which signifies Trouble. (Note, Hos. 2:14-17.) Indeed Achan is himself called Achor, or Trouble, in the subsequent history. (Note, 1 Chr. 2:7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. When by their heinous sins men provoke the Lord to anger, he commonly leaves them to mistaken counsels, and thus they are corrected by their own iniquity.—The people of God can never expect to prosper in any undertaking, concerning which they have not inquired of him, to know his will and implore his assistance; (Note, Prov. 3:5,6.) or in which they have indulged sloth and vain confidence, or tempted God by the neglect of proper means. But human nature is prone to extremes: like children, we are easily elated by a little success, and presume that we shall carry all before us: and when, in order to humble us and check our self-confidence, the Lord is pleased to throw some discouragement in our way; we are easily cast down into despondency, and induced to forebode the most fatal consequences.—Every failure in such undertakings, as evidently accord to the will of God, and the duty of our place and station, should cause us to humble ourselves before him, to flee to his mercy-seat, to pour out our hearts in prayer, and inquire "wherefore he contendeth with us;" and to plead his promises and the glory of his great name, as engaged to support that cause which we are endeavouring to promote, whatever becomes of us and our worthless names.—Yet in the very prayers of the best of men there is often much evil, which the Lords might justly condemn, and for which he frequently rebukes and chastens them; especially when they appear ungrateful for former mercies, and murmur or despond on account of present trials, distrust his faithfulness, or suspect his future intentions, as declared by his express promises.

V. 10-18. "What shall we say when Israel turneth their backs before their enemies?" It is not enough that the forces be recruited, the passes strengthened, the cowards punished, the valiant rewarded, the soldiers animated by word and deed, and the ensuing assault conducted with more skill and circumspection. The matter is not thus: "Israel hath sinned," and God is provoked; and nothing can ensure success, till his indignation is turned away, and the accused thing is removed out of the camp. Times of public danger and calamity, therefore, with nations professing Christianity, peculiarly require zeal for reformation: notorious criminals ought then to be searched out, and brought to condign punishment; especially such as have enriched themselves by sacrilege, perjury, murder, oppression, and iniquitous traffic. While such criminals are suffered to escape with impunity; nay, till something effectual has been done towards expiating national guilt, by the execution of public justice, on those whose daring crimes have brought the wrath of God on a guilty land; there is little cause to wonder, if the inhabitants turn their backs upon their enemies, and little hope that God will be with them any more, notwithstanding their fastings and prayers. Since these things have been so much disregarded in protestant countries, they have been left to quarrel with one another; and to become the instruments of each other's correction, instead of being united and prospered, in repelling the assaults of their common enemies.—And may it not also be seriously questioned, whether the case be not the same with respect to the success of the gospel, and the state of religion among us? It is to be feared that there has often been more zeal shown, in supporting the interests of one party against another, than for the interests of vital godliness against the cause of infidelity, profigacy, and formal profession; and that in this competition, men, in other respects conscientious, not only accept the proffered support of some one not unlike covetous and sacrilegious Achan, but assiduously seek after it. It is still more evident, that there has not been due care taken to censure or exclude such persons, as are evidently the slaves of avarice, worldly lusts, and the pride of life; and to direct the searching word of God to their consciences, in such a manner as effectually to make them understand, that their profession of the doctrines of the gospel, their attendance on the ordinances, and their support of the ministers of Christ, will never save their souls, unless their idols be dethroned, and their hearts and lives renewed by converting grace. There is reason to fear that there are Achans in many of our congregations, whose lives prejudice men against the truth, and bring a secret blight on our ministry: nor "will the Lord be with us any more," unless we use our best endeavours, without any partial or personal regards, to separate them from among us. And it is proposed as a matter of serious inquiry, whether the present lamentable divisions among the professors of evangelical truth: the confessedly small success of the gospel, compared with that of former times; and the most alarming progress of open infidelity; be not in great measure owing to the same cause as Israel's defeat before Ai.—But first of all we should look into our own hearts, and make diligent search, whether there be not some accursed things there which God sees and abhors; some unmortified lust, some iniquitous gain "put among our own stuff," some withholding from God and the poor their dues, in order to gratify avarice, or support luxury and the pride of life. If this is the case, no wonder we do not prosper in our souls, or in our ministry; no wonder if we get little benefit from our attendance on ordinances, or see no considerable effects from our unremitting and most earnest preaching from year to year. Nor can we expect to prosper any better, until the accursed thing be destroyed out of our hearts, removed out of our houses, and forsaken in our lives. Let us, however, not only be careful, that we ourselves do not disseminate any secret iniquity; but remember that we are accountable for our families also, if we do not use all our circumspection, and exert our utmost authority, to preserve them free from every accursed thing. In this way will Israel prosper, our souls be "like a watered garden," and "the word of God have free course and be glorified." He will be with us and fight for us, and Israel shall no more turn their backs upon their enemies.

V. 19-26. Would we avoid the commission of gross iniquity, we must "make a covenant with our eyes" and all our senses: we must learn to behold every object by faith through the medium of God's word, not by sense through the medium of a worldly judgment and a carnal mind; we must repress the first movings of concupiscence, and pray earnestly not to be led into temptation; we must habituate ourselves to meditate on the future consequences of sinful gratifications to our characters, families, connexions, and temporal interests,—to our conscience, peace, and eternal concerns,—to the church of God, and the world around us; and to place ourselves, by an effort of the imagination, in those very circumstances in which we should be, were the sin committed, and the infatuation vanished; and to consider what our judgment and feelings in that case would be. We should also treat all expectations of secrecy and impunity as the delusions of Satan. From our Judge we can conceal nothing; and secreting our offences from our fellow-criminals will avail us very little, since we may be sure our iniquity will at length find us out. (Note, Num. 32:23.) We should also accustom ourselves to self-dinial and patient waiting: for the blessings that God reserves for his people are like fruit, which will be wholesome when it has had time to ripen, but will certainly be noxious if greedily and prematurely gathered.—When we are conscious that we have sinned, we should ingenuously confess our guilt; and if the matter requires it, we should glorify God and take shame to ourselves, by an open acknowledgment of our crimes, and justify him in all the punishments which we now endure: for, blessed be his name, through him who was made a curse for us, all manner of sins and blasphemies shall be forgiven to the true penitent. But even when final condemnation is escaped, what terrible effects does sin produce! What fatal consequences often ensue in this world, to the sinner himself, and to all connected with him! How "one sinner destroyeth much good!" What will then be the wrath to come! Let us take warning, and without delay flee from it to Jesus, the sinner's Friend.—Finally, though atrocious criminals should be punished with unrelenting firmness, and all should unite in protesting against their crimes; yet their misery should not be

CHAPTER III.

Joshua encouraged and instructed by God to form an ambushment against Ai. The city is taken and destroyed with the inhabitants, its king hanged up, and the spoil divided, 9-29. An altar is built on Beth-el, sacrifices are offered, the law is written on stones, and the blessings and curses pronounced, as Moses had commanded, 30-35.

AND the LORD said unto Joshua; "Fear not, neither be thou dismayed; take all the people of war with thee, and arise, go up to Ai: ¹see, I have given into thy hand the king of Ai, and his people, and his city, and his land.

2 And thou shalt do to Ai and her king, as thou didst unto Jericho and her king: ²only the spoil thereof, and the cattle thereof, shall ye take for a prey unto yourselves. ³Lay thee an ambush for the city behind it.

3 So Joshua arose, and all the people of war, to go up against Ai: and Joshua chose out thirty thousand mighty men of valour, and sent them away ⁴by night.

4 And he commanded them, saying, Behold, ye shall lie in wait against the city, ⁵even behind the city; ⁶hgo not very far from the city, but be ye all ready:

5 And I, and all the people that ⁷are with me, will approach unto the city: and it shall come to pass, when they come out against us, as at the first, ⁸that we will flee before them,

6 (For they will come out after us,) till we have ⁹drawn them from the city; for they will say, ¹⁰They flee before us, as at the first: therefore we will flee before them.

7 Then ye shall rise up from the ambush, and seize upon the city: ¹¹for the LORD your God will deliver it into your hand.

8 And it shall be, when ye have taken the city, ¹²that ye shall set the city on fire: according to the commandment of the LORD shall ye do. ¹³See, I have commanded you.

9 ¶ Joshua therefore sent them forth; and they went to lie in ambush, and abode ¹⁴between Beth-el and Ai, on the west side of Ai: but Joshua ¹⁵lodged that night among the people.

10 And Joshua arose up early in the morning, and numbered the people, and went up, he and the elders of Israel, before the people to Ai.

11 And ¹⁶all the people, ¹⁷even the people of war that ¹⁸were with him, went up, and drew nigh, and came before the city, and pitched on the north side of Ai: now ¹⁹there was a valley between them and Ai.

12 And he took about ²⁰five thousand men, and set them to lie in ambush between Beth-el and Ai on the west side of the city.

13 And when they had set the people, ²¹even all the host that ²²was on the north of the city, and their ²³liers in wait ²⁴on the west of the city; Joshua went that night into the midst of the valley.

14 And it came to pass, when the king of Ai saw ²⁵it, that they hastened and rose up early, and the men of the city went out against Israel to battle, he and all his people, at a time appointed, before the plain; but ²⁶he wist not that ²⁷there were liers in ambush against him behind the city.

15 And Joshua and all Israel made as if they were beaten before them, and fled ²⁸by the way of the wilderness.

16 And all the people that ²⁹were in Ai were ³⁰called together to pursue after them: and they pursued after Joshua, and were ³¹drawn away from the city.

17 And there was not ³²a man left in Ai or Beth-el, that went not out after Israel: and they left the city open, and pursued after Israel.

18 And the LORD said unto Joshua, ³³"Stretch out the spear that is in thy hand toward Ai; for I will give it into thine hand. And Joshua stretched out the spear that he ³⁴had in his hand toward the city.

19 And ³⁵the ambush arose quickly out of their place, and they ran as soon as he had stretched out his hand: and they entered into the city, and took it, and hastened, and set the city on fire.

20 And when the men of Ai looked behind them, they saw, and behold, ³⁶the smoke of the city ascended up to heaven; and they had no ³⁷power to flee this way or that way: and the people that fled to the wilderness turned back upon the pursuers.

21 And when Joshua and all Israel saw that the ambush had taken the city, and that the smoke of the city ascended, then they turned again, and slew the men of Ai.

22 And the other issued out of the city against them; so they were in the midst of Israel, some on this side, and some on that side: and they smote them, so that they ³⁸let none of them remain or escape.

23 And ³⁹the king of Ai they took alive, and brought him to Joshua.

insulted, nor their immortal souls forgotten: but calm exhortations, serious instructions, and compassionate exhortations, should be used to bring them to repentance, that they may obtain mercy from God, in a future world; and every method should be adopted, which can render the example of public justice productive of as deep and durable an impression as possible, upon the minds of the survivors.

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1, 2. Jericho had been taken by miracle, without danger or fatigue; in order to teach the people to depend on God, and to give him the glory of all their success. But they seem to have inferred that they might despise their enemies and indulge themselves. (Note, 7:3-5.) They were therefore in the next instance instructed, that diligence, self-denial, and the exertion of all their powers, both of body and mind were required, in order to secure success; and the whole force of Israel was commanded to march against this small city. Some think, however, that this was ordered, that all might equally share the spoil.—An ambush was also to be formed, by the command of God himself; for it was as lawful to outwit their enemies, as to overpower them. No treaties were violated, no oaths broken, no falsehoods uttered; and it cannot be requisite to inform our enemies of our intentions and purposes, however they may be deceived by appearances. But perjuries, lies, and infractions of treaties, cannot, in any war or in any case, be allowable or excusable. (Notes, 2:4-6. 9:19, 20. 2 Sam. 21:1-3. Ez. 17:15-21. 21:25-27.)

V. 9-12. There is some difficulty in determining, whether the thirty thousand men, first mentioned, (3, 4.) at length assaulted the city openly, whilst only the five thousand lay in ambush; or whether the whole force of Israel appeared in arms against Ai, and the thirty thousand formed one ambushment, and the five thousand formed a second in another place. But the latter opinion agrees best with the narrative.

V. 13, 14. After the first party was sent to lie in ambush, a whole day seems to have been spent in making preparations; and every thing being ready, Joshua during the next night drew up his army in the valley, and so was seen in the morning by the king of Ai.

V. 17. Greater infatuation cannot be imagined, than upon so trifling an advantage as the former, (7:4, 5.) and so slight an appearance of further success as the present, to leave the cities defenceless that they might pursue a numerous army! But the Canaanites were left to be blinded by pride, obstinacy, and rage against Israel, in order to their more speedy destruction. (Notes, 3:2, 9:1, 2. 11:19, 20.)—The king and people of Beth-el appear to have been confederate with those of Ai, and to have been subdued and destroyed at the same time.

V. 18. Joshua stretched forth his hand with the spear, perhaps with some flag upon it, at the time when God commanded him: probably it was a preconcerted signal to those who were in ambush, expected by some appointed to watch for it: and it was an especial token of the divine assistance. He seems to have remained upon some eminence, in the sight of the Israelites, during the battle; and to have persevered in holding up his spear, till all the enemies were destroyed; as Moses had done with his rod, during Joshua's conflict with the Amalekites. (26. Note, Ez. 17:8-13.)—Thus Joshua conquered by seeming to yield: and this has been accommodated to Christ, when "by death he overcame him who had the power 24 And it came to pass, when Israel had made an end of slaying all the inhabitants of Ai in the field, in the wilderness wherein they chased them, and when they were all fallen on the edge of the sword until they were consumed, that all the Israelites returned unto Ai, and smote it with the edge of the sword.

25 And so it was that all that fell that day, both of men and women, were twelve thousand, even all the men of Ai.

26 For Joshua drew not his hand back, where-with he stretched out the spear until he had utterly destroyed all the inhabitants of Ai.

27 Only the cattle and the spoil of that city, Israel took for a prey unto themselves, according unto the word of the LORD, which he commanded Joshua.

28 And Joshua burnt Ai, and made it an heap for ever, even a desolation unto this day.

29 And the king of Ai he hanged on a tree until even-tide: and as soon as the sun was down, Joshua commanded that they should take his carcass down from the tree, and cast it at the entering of the gate of the city, and raise thereon a great heap of stones, that remaineth unto this day.

30 Then Joshua built an altar unto the LORD God of Israel, in mount Ebal;

31 As Moses the servant of the LORD commanded the children of Israel, as it is written in the book of the law of Moses, an altar of whole stones, over which no man hath lifted up any iron:

of death," deprived the king of terrors of power to hurt his people, and prepared the way for the utter destruction of this last enemy.

V. 25. The men of Beth-el, who aided those of Ai, seem not to be included in this number.

V. 27. Thus the people began to receive a gracious recompense for their self-denial, in refraining from the devoted spoil of Jericho; Achan having already received the just punishment of his sacrilege.

V. 28. When a few houses had been set on fire, the flame and smoke would suffice to convince the men of Ai of their desperate situation. But after the Israelites had plundered the city, the whole was burnt down, and left to be a perpetual desolation; and the ruins continued as a proof of the transaction, till the close of Joshua's life, and probably long after, though we read of a city of nearly the same name in Nehemiah. (Neh. 11:31. Aija, or Aiya.)

V. 29. The kings of Canaan lay under the same curse as their subjects, and probably were more deeply criminal. The reserving of the king of Ai for a solemn execution, would tend to strike terror into the other kings, contribute to the success of Israel, and give their proceedings the stamp of a judicial process, and of executing the vengeance of God upon his enemies. (Notes, 10:24. 1 Sam. 15:32, 33. Is. 24:21, 22.)

V. 30-35. (Notes, Deut. 11:29, 30. 27.) As soon as Joshua found access to the mountains, Gerizim and Ebal, which the Lord had appointed; he without delay, and notwithstanding the unsettled state of Israel, and the machinations of their enemies, proceeded to renew the ratification of the covenant between the Lord and his people, as it had been commanded by Moses. Accordingly he built the occasional altar, (Marg. Ref. t.) and offered the instituted sacrifices; writing the law, or the prescribed abstracts from it, on the plastered stones; proclaiming the blessings and curses from the two mountains, according to the appointed form; and reading over the whole law to all the people.—It is evident, that the books of Moses, as written by him, are here repeatedly spoken of as extant at the time of this transaction.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-22. When sin is repented of, and put away as "an accursed thing," we may expect encouragement, and a blessing from our reconciled God and Father: and the more we fear him with filial reverence, and dread to offend him, the less need have we to "fear what man can do unto us."—When we truly believe, and rightly understand, that "without the LORD we can do nothing," that our sufficiency and success must come from him, and that all the glory must be rendered to him; we shall be far from lying down in supineness and self-indulgent sloth; on the contrary, we shall be excited to use, with all diligence and perseverance, every commanded and allowable means; and to seek the help and blessing of God to render them effectual. Ined inactivity, and they offered thereon burnt-offerings unto the LORD, and sacrificed peace-offerings.

32 And he wrote there upon the stones a copy of the law of Moses, which he wrote in the presence of the children of Israel.

33 And 'all Israel, and their elders, and officers, and their judges, stood on this side the ark, and on that side, before the priests the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, as well as the stranger as he that was born among them; half of them over against mount Gerizim, and half of them over against mount Ebal, as Moses the servant of the LORD had commanded before, that they should bless the people of Israel.

34 And afterward he read all the words of the law, the blessings and cursings, according to all that is written in the book of the law.

35 There was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read not before all the congregation of Israel, with the women, and the little ones, and the strangers that were conversant among them.

because we can do nothing of ourselves, when the Lord has promised effectual help to those who call upon him, must be the effect of man's perverseness and Satan's suggestions, thus wresting the Scriptures from their most obvious meaning: for in all other important concerns, common sense teaches us, that the less we can do of ourselves, the more need we have to seek the help, and to observe the directions of those who are able and disposed to assist us. And thus to be diligent and earnest with all our heart and soul in seeking salvation, resisting temptation and striving against sin, is true Christian wisdom, and the due medium between the extremes to which human nature is prone: for in such an arduous conflict, we need both exertion and much assistance, and they who speak as if a little exertion and a little help might suffice, know nothing experimentally of the warfare.—In every undertaking, prudent counsel is as conducive to success, as vigorous exertion; and on some occasions well-timed yielding secures the advantage better than pertinacious opposition.—They who "honour the LORD with their substance," and are not in haste to be rich, will eventually be no losers; yet Christians must wait till they arrive at the heavenly Canaan to receive their full reward: and there they will enjoy their everlasting portion, when that of worldlings will be spent, and their souls fixed in utter misery. Indeed "the prosperity of fools destroys them," and their short-lived presumptuous rejoicing will speedily end in lamentations, and mourning, and we.—As the Lord gives wisdom to those whom he loves, and means to prosper; so he infatuates those who have filled up the measure of their iniquity.

V. 23-35. It is our duty to reverence the aged, to honour those who are placed in authority over us, and to compassionate the weak and helpless, the feeble sex and tender age; but the Judge of all the earth will involve all the impenitent in one common condemnation, without any other distinction, than that of their different degrees of guilt; so that they who have abused the greatest abilities, riches, or authority, will be distinguished by the largest measure of divine vengeance.—However busy, unsettled, or exposed we are, the concerns of religion must have our first attention; and if we "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, all things else shall be added unto us." In doing this we must rest our hope on the atonement of the great Redeemer; and keep the holy law of God continually before us, as the rule of our grateful obedience. We must remember the awful curses of the old covenant, to quicken our pace in fleeing to the refuge which is appointed us, to keep alive the salutary fears of coming short, and to restrain us from sin in an hour of temptation. But we must embrace and plead the precious promises of the new covenant, for our encouragement, in denying ourselves and bearing the cross. We ought also to instruct our families, and train up our children in the knowledge of these most important subjects; and speak of them freely even to

3 And when the inhabitants of 'Gibeon heard what Joshua had done unto 'Jericho and to Ai,

4 They did 'work wilily, and went, and made as if they had been ambassadors; and took old sacks upon their asses, and 'wine bottles, old, and rent, and bound up;

5 And 'old shoes and clouted upon their feet, and old garments upon them; and all the bread of their provision was dry and mouldy.

6 And they went to Joshua unto 'the camp at Gilgal, and said unto him, and to the men of Israel, 'We be come from a far country; now therefore make ye a league with us.

7 And the men of Israel said unto 'the Hivites, Feradventure ye dwell among us: and 'how shall we make a league with you?

8 And they said unto Joshua, 'We are thy servants. And Joshua said unto them, Who are ye? and from whence come ye?

strangers, who are conversant among us. Happy are they, who begin early in life to attend to them: for in their declining age they may look back with comfort to their early engagements, and the unnumbered benefits which they have derived from them.

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. The inhabitants of Canaan in general must have heard, that the Israelites had passed over Jordan, and commenced hostilities: and in particular, that they had destroyed Jericho and Ai; and solemnly covenanted with JEHOVAH, as if already in possession of the country. Had they not been intimidated or infatuated, they would with combined force have opposed the passage of Israel over Jordan: but after all the miracles which had been wrought, an accommodation, if possible, was the only thing which they could reasonably attempt. (Notes, 3-5. 51.) From this, however, they were withheld by a desperate obstinacy and rage; and being ripe for vengeance, they were left to be hardened, and blindly to rush upon destruction of their own accord.—They confederated together at this time; but subsequent events seem to have deranged their first plans, and delayed their proceedings. The varied expressions here used, include the inhabitants of the land to the utmost western and northern borders. As the Girgashites are not mentioned in the history of the subsequent wars, (3:10, 24:11.) it has been concluded that they generally emigrated after the fall of Jericho.—This might indeed be the case; but the tradition of one of their Rabbies, quoted by Selden, that three letters were written by Joshua, before the invasion of the land by Israel, purporting, 'Let those who choose to flee, flee; let those that choose peace, enter into treaty; let those that choose war, take up arms': that in consequence of this, the Girgashites, believing the power of God, fled away retreating into Africa:—this, I say, has no foundation in Scripture, and is by no means consistent with the narrative there given. See Graves on the Pentateuch, Vol. II. pp. 43, 44.

V. 3-5. The Gibeonites had heard of the late destruction of Jericho and Ai, with the slaughter of all the inhabitants, as well as of the former miracles wrought in Egypt; and also of the destruction of Og and Sihon, with their subjects. (9:10.) They had also learned, that the Israelites were commanded to destroy all the inhabitants of the land, without entering into any league with them, or giving quarter; and that the Lord had expressly promised to give them the victory over them all. (24.) The other inhabitants of the land likewise had heard the same, and were thus rendered the more determined in their opposition: but the Gibeonites, or at least some of their principal men, (for it does not appear that they had a king,) were induced to believe that the word of the Lord would certainly be accomplished, and that all opposition would be unavailing; and they concluded, that the only prospect of safety lay in an accommodation, upon any terms. Had they cast themselves, without reserve, upon the mercy of Israel, and of Israel's God, there is no doubt that they would have been spared, as Rahab and her relations had been: for though the Lord would not allow his people to make exceptions to his general rule of destroying the Canaanites, for their own ease and emolument, by forming alliances with them while they continued idolaters; yet in this and all other cases, he was ready to favour those who trusted in his mercy. The Gibeonites, however, not being acquainted with this limitation, and interpreting the general command in its utmost rigour, despaired of being preserved, if they were detected; but they supposed, that if they could bring the rulers of Israel under the bond of an oath, even by means of deception, that

9 And they said unto him, From a very far country thy servants are come, 'because of the name of the Lord thy God: for 'we have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt,

10 And all that he did to the 'two kings of the Amorites that were beyond Jordan, to Sihon king of Heshbon, and to Og king of Bashan, which was at 'Ashtaroth.

11 Wherefore our elders, and all the inhabitants of our country, spake to us, saying, 'Take victuals 'with you for the journey, and go to meet them, and say unto them, 'We are your servants; therefore now make ye a league with us.

12 This 'our bread we took hot for our provision out of our houses on the day we came forth to go unto you; but now, behold, it is dry, and it is mouldy:

13 And these bottles of wine, which we filled, were new, and behold they be rent; and these our garments and our shoes are become old, by reason of the very long journey.

14 And the men took of their victuals, and asked not counsel at the mouth of the Lord.

oath would secure them from death. Accordingly they formed a stratagem, which cannot be vindicated; though it may admit of some excuse, from their imminent danger, and from their ignorance of the divine law: and they succeeded according to their expectation.—The supposition of some expositors, that these Gibeonites had before this refused terms of peace when offered them, is not only unsupported by facts but it is contrary to the general tenor of the narration.—The ambassadors, probably, were the chief persons among them, but they pretended to be sent by some foreign princes; and, according to the customs of those days, when inns at regular stages were not known, and consequently men took with them provisions for their journey, as is now done for a voyage; they fitted themselves out in such a manner, that they appeared to have come from a very distant country, to show that their provisions were either exhausted or spoiled by the length of their journey, and even their clothes and vessels worn out. No doubt the several circumstances were artfully devised, and appeared very plausible to Joshua and Israel; though we cannot so well judge of them by modern manners and customs.

V. 7. God had forbidden Israel to enter into a league with any of the devoted nations. (Marg. Ref. p.) An equal league, say many learned men: but the Scripture makes no such distinction. Indeed an agreement to spare the lives of such persons or tribes, as chose either to leave the country: or, renouncing idolatry, resigning all their possessions, and submitting to be slaves, to continue among the Israelites; is the only league, which it is supposed might be made with them. But even this does not appear to have been proposed to them beforehand.—Hivites. Marg. Ref. o.

V. 8-11. The ambassadors probably meant to insinuate, that the Israelites had never heard the name of their country, because of its great distance; though their countrymen had so far off heard the report of the works which God had wrought for his people, in desolating Egypt and rescuing them, and in destroying before them the kings of the Amorites. And they stated, that these reports had so impressed their minds, as to render them greatly desirous of their friendship; that for this purpose they had undertaken a very fatiguing journey; and that the nation was willing to become the tributaries of Israel, if they might in return have security that they should not be destroyed at any future period, by their increasing power and spreading dominion.—At the same time, they artfully avoided mentioning the passage of Israel over Jordan, and the destruction of Jericho and Ai; as willing it should be understood, that they had not yet heard of these more recent miracles and successes.—The address was well calculated to insinuate itself into the minds of the Israelites, who would doubtless be gratified with the thought of being so renowned, that their power was dreaded, and their friendship courted, by distant nations: while the favour of Joshua, and of the more pious among them, would be conciliated by the respectful mention which they made of the name and works of JEHOVAH; especially as it had been foretold that these miracles should produce this effect. (Notes, 2 Sam. 14:13-20. 15:7-9. Prov. 29:5.)

V. 14, 15. Joshua and the chief persons in Israel, having examined the provisions of the pretended ambassadors, hastily concluded, that the state of them corroborated the account which they had given; and without further hesitation entered into league with them, and by oath engaged that, instead of destroying, they would protect the people whom they represented. This precipitate treaty, entered into with strangers

15 And Joshua ^bmade peace with them, and made a league with them to let them live: and the princes of the congregation swore unto them.

[Practical Observations.]

16 ¶ And it came to pass at the end of three days, after they had made a league with them, ^cthat they heard that they ^dwere their neighbours, and ^ethat they dwelt among them.

17 And the children of Israel journeyed, and came unto their cities on the third day. Now their cities ^fwere ^gGibeon, and Chephirah, and Beeroth, ^hand Kirjath-jearim.

18 And the children of Israel smote them not, because the princes of the congregation ⁱhad sworn unto them by the LORD God of Israel. And all the congregation murmured against the princes.

19 But all the princes said unto all the congregation, ^jWe have sworn unto them by the LORD God of Israel: now therefore, we may not touch them.

20 This we will do to them; we will even let them live, ^klest wrath be upon us, because of the oath which we swore unto them.

21 And the princes said unto them, Let them live; but let them be hewers of wood and drawers of water unto all the congregation; ^las the princes had promised them.

22 And Joshua called for them, and he spake unto them, saying, ^mWherefore have ye beguiled us, saying, ⁿWe are very far from you; when ye dwell among us?

23 Now therefore ye ^oare ^pcursed; and there shall none of you be freed from being bondmen and hewers of wood and drawers of water for the house of my God.

24 And they answered Joshua, and said, Because it was certainly told thy servants, how that ^qthe LORD thy God commanded his servant Moses to give you all the land, and to destroy all the inhabitants of the land from before you, therefore we were sore afraid of our lives because of you, and have done this thing.

25 And now, behold, ^rwe are in thine hand: ^sas it seemeth good and right unto thee to do unto us, do.

26 And so did he unto them, and delivered them out of the hand of the children of Israel, that they slew them not.

27 And Joshua ^tmade them that day hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation and for the altar of the LORD, even unto this day, ^uin the place which he should choose.

CHAPTER X.

Five kings were against Gibeon, 1-5. At the request of the Gibeonites Joshua came to assist them; and, being encouraged by God, he routes the enemy with great slaughter; while still greater numbers are destroyed by hail-stones. 6-11. At Joshua's word the sun and moon stand still, 12-15. The five kings are discovered in a cave, and shut up there, till at length they are nominously put to death, 16-21. Makkedah, Libnah, Lachish, Eglon, Hebron, and Debir, a taken and destroyed, with the king of Gezer, and many others, 22-42. The army returns to Gilgal, 43.

NOW it came to pass, when ^aAdoni-zedek king of Jerusalem had heard how Joshua had taken Ai, and had utterly destroyed it; (^bas he had done to Jericho and her king, so he had done to Ai and her king; and ^chow the inhabitants of Gibeon had made peace with Israel, and were among them;

2 That ^dthey feared greatly, because Gibeon was a great city, as one of ^ethe 'royal cities, and because it was greater than Ai, and all the men thereof were mighty.

3 Wherefore Adoni-zedek ^fking of Jerusalem, sent unto Hoham king of ^gHebron, and unto Piram king of Jarmuth, and unto Japhia king of ^hLachish, and unto Debir king of Eglon, saying,

4 Come up unto me, ⁱand help me, that ^jwe may smite Gibeon: for it hath made peace with Joshua, and with the children of Israel.

come," and to seek shelter from the threatening storm, only increase the enmity and desperation of others.—When the consciences of sinners are first alarmed with the dread of wrath, and filled with the anguish of remorse, they are generally actuated by a "spirit of bondage." (Note, Rom. 8:14-17.) and being greatly ignorant of God, of his law, and his gospel of rich grace abounding even to the chief of sinners, they frequently seek relief by such methods as only serve to increase their guilt; and their carnal contrivances, and false dependences, are seldom free from assumed appearances and hypocritical pretences, by which they attempt to impose upon others, and do actually impose upon themselves. Yet when there is an evident earnestness to escape the wrath of God, we may confidently expect a happy event; that which began with a large mixture of evil, may yet end well; and sinners, who were under an awful curse, may become blessed and a blessing.

Y. 16-27. The Lord Jesus (the true Joshua) sees through every disguise and abhors all iniquity; yet he will not reject sinners, either on account of former crimes, or of the manifest evil which pollutes their endeavours for salvation. But he will reprove them, and convince them of their guilt; he will bring them to repentance, and shame them out of their secret hypocrisy; he will teach them to trust in his mercy alone; he will save their souls and make them his servants: and though he correct them for their sins, or allot them a low station and hard service in his church; yet he will teach them to acquiesce, and be thankful, and readily to say, "Behold, we are in thy hand: as it seemeth good and right unto thee to do unto us, do." And indeed, to exchange the highest station in the world, for the meanest place among the servants and in the courts of the Lord, though it appears a degradation, and is a trial, will in due time be found to be very great preferment. (Note, Ps. 84:10.) But he overrules many things for his own glory, and the advantage of his church, which are not done according to his commandments, and consequently are not examples for us to imitate.—Though we have been imposed upon, we must not think ourselves at liberty to retaliate: solemn engagements made, even to our hurt, must be conscientiously adhered to: and much allowance should be made for those whose minds are disquieted with the fear of impending ruin, and who have not enjoyed the advantage of good instruction.—But if men, in order to save their lives, are considered as acting reasonably, when they renounce all their interests, stoop to any concessions, accept of any terms, and become willing to endure any hardships: how reasonable is it, that we should be influenced by the fear of eternal punishment, and the hope of everlasting life, to renounce the world, mortify our lusts, deny ourselves, and submit to the cross: to humble and abase ourselves in the very dust before God; and to "count all but dung, that we may win Christ and be found in him?" (Note, Phil. 3:8-11.) that we should be in haste to have the covenant of peace ratified to our souls; to cut off the offending limb, and to pluck out the offending eye; and in short, to yield up ourselves to the Lord without reserve, craving only that our souls may be saved, and that he would make us his servants, though in the lowest place, and amidst the greatest hardships! In coming thus to the Saviour, we do not proceed upon a peradventure: we are invited to draw nigh, and are assured that "whosoever cometh unto him, he will in no wise cast out." But let us take heed, that we come and 5 Therefore the five kings of the Amorites, the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, the king of Eglon, gathered themselves together, and went up, they and all their hosts, and encamped before Gibeon, and made war against it.

6 And the men of Gibeon sent unto Joshua ^mto the camp to Gilgal, saying, ⁿ"Slack not thy hand ^ofrom thy servants; come up to us quickly, and save us, and help us: for all the kings of the Amorites that dwell in the ^pmountains are gathered together against us.

7 So ^qJoshua ascended from Gilgal, he, and all the people of war with him, and all the mighty men of valour.

8 And the LORD said unto Joshua, ^r"fear them not; for I have delivered them into thine hand: there shall not a man of them stand before thee.

9 Joshua therefore came unto them suddenly, and went up from Gilgal ^sall night.

10 And ^tthe LORD discomfited them before Israel, and slew them with a great slaughter ^uat Gibeon, and chased them along the way that goeth up to ^vBeth-horon, and smote them to ^wAzekah, and unto ^xMakkedah.

cleave to the Lord with an upright heart. We hope indeed that many of the Gibeonites were true believers, though not native Israelites: but we are sure that many who preach, and write, and labour very diligently, and even useful to others, are only "hewers of wood and drawers of water to the congregation of the LORD," and have no inheritance in Israel, but are themselves castaways.

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1-5. Adoni-zedek signifies the lord of righteousness, and this king was probably a descendant, as well as successor of Melchizedek, "the king of righteousness;" though he retained nothing of his progenitor's piety, but the mere name which his conduct belied. It cannot reasonably be doubted, that Jerusalem was the same place as Salem: (Notes, Gen. 14:18-20. Ps. 76:2.) and some think it obtained the name Jerusalem, about the time when Israel invaded Canaan.—The kings, whose dominions lay further north, as well as those in the south, had confederated against Israel, and probably were collecting their forces for a general assault: (Note, 9:1,2.) but the report of Gibeon's alliance with Joshua, induced these five kings, whose territories lay in the south, and near to the encampment of Israel, dreading the consequences of such an example, and desirous of revenge, to attack the Gibeonites, separately and in haste, that they might crush them, and intimidate others from imitating them; and that so they might be afterwards the more at liberty to attack the Israelites: but they only accelerated and facilitated their own destruction.—Jericho and Ai seem to have been the key of the land; but Gibeon was a larger city, and its inhabitants far more numerous and powerful.—The Gibeonites were among the Israelites, as allied to them and under their protection; but not as living in their camp or quarters.

V. 6. The Gibeonites confided in Joshua and Israel, that they would come to the defence of those, whom they had admitted to be their servants; for subjection entitles to protection: and they so confided in the God of Israel, that they did not doubt of their success in the expedition. But they informed Joshua that no time was to be lost.—The Amorites were the most powerful of the distinct tribes inhabiting Canaan; and therefore all the inhabitants are sometimes called by that general name. For Hebron was occupied by Hittites, and Jerusalem by Jebusites; and even the people of Gibeon, who are generally called Hivites, are also said to be "of the remnant of the Amorites." (2 Sam. 21:2.)

V. 7. The headquarters of Israel were still at Gilgal. (43. Note, 5:10.) There Joshua left the unarmed multitude, doubtless with a sufficient guard; and marched, with the men of the most approved valour, to defend the Gibeonites against the kings of Canaan.

V. 8. The enemies hitherto encountered were of small force, compared with the troops of these combined kings; and therefore the Lord encouraged Joshua by the assurance of a complete victory.

V. 9, 10. Joshua was an able commander; his army consisted of "mighty men of valour;" his measures were concerted with prudence, and executed with vigour and despatch; he marched all night, attacked the enemy at unawares, and doubtless his troops behaved well: yet the whole victory is ascribed to the Lord. (Notes, Ps. 44:1-3. 144:10.)—Their prudence, courage, and strength were his gift; he intimidated and confounded their enemies, and he rendered their measures successful

11 And it came to pass as they fled from before Israel, and were in the going down to Beth-horon, that the Lord cast down great stones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died: they were more which died with hailstones, than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword.

12 Then spake Joshua to the Lord, in the day when the Lord delivered up the Amorites before the children of Israel, and he said in the sight of Israel, "Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon; and thou Moon, in the valley of Ajalon.

13 And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. Is not this written in the book of Jasher? So the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day.

14 And there was no day like that, before it or after it, that the Lord hearkened unto the voice of a man: for the Lord fought for Israel.

15 And Joshua returned, and all Israel with him, unto the camp to Gilgal. [Practical Observations.]

16 ¶ But these five kings fled, and hid themselves in a cave at Makkedah.

17 And it was told Joshua, saying, The five kings are found hid in a cave at Makkedah.

18 And Joshua said, "Roll great stones upon the mouth of the cave, and set men by it for to keep them;

19 And stay ye not, but pursue after your enemies, and smite the hindmost of them; suffer them not to enter into their cities: for the Lord your God hath delivered them into your hand.

V. 11. Hailstones of an enormous size were showered down from above, and directed in so extraordinary a manner by the Lord himself, that they smote and slew the fugitive Canaanites in great multitudes, but did not fall upon any of their pursuers! (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 9:33. Rev. 16:17—21.)

V. 12—14. Joshua doubtless acted, on this occasion, by an immediate impulse upon his mind from the Spirit of God. He first "spoke to the Lord" in earnest prayer; and then to the sun and moon, as by authority from him, commanding those luminaries to stay their course. This he did publicly before all Israel, that they might hear the charge which he gave, and observe the obedience of these heavenly bodies. It would have been improper either that he should speak, or that the miracle should be recorded, according to the terms of modern astronomy. The sun appeared to the Israelites over Gibeon, and the moon over the valley of Ajalon, which is supposed to have been situated in a different direction: and there they appeared to be stayed in their course for "a whole day;" either for the space of about twelve or fourteen hours, or for the time of one diurnal revolution.—Many inquiries have been made concerning the way in which this miracle was wrought, and many difficulties and objections have been urged against understanding it literally. But the fact, as far as we are concerned about it, is authenticated by the divine testimony; and the manner in which it was accomplished, lies entirely out of our province, because beyond our discovery and comprehension. "Is any thing too hard for the Lord?" This question forms a sufficient answer to ten thousand difficulties, which puny objectors, under the assumed title of philosophers, have in every age been starting against the truth of God in his written word. (Note, Gen. 7:10—12.)—As there are no records of profane history so ancient as this event, it cannot be any cause for wonder, that Pagan authors have not mentioned it. Yet some intimation of it seems given in the fable of Phaeton driving the chariot of the Sun, and throwing all things into disorder, so that there was one day wholly unlike all before or after it.—This extraordinary miracle not only gave Israel an opportunity of completing their victory, but rendered Joshua honourable in the eyes of all the people; and both him and them terrible to the surrounding nations. It was also a public attestation, that the God of Israel was the Lord of the whole earth, and of the heavens; and a protest against idolatry; whilst the sun and moon, the worship of which formed the most ancient and plausible kind of idolatry, were obedient to the commands of the servants of JEHOVAH, the God of Israel. (Note, Deut. 4:19.)—The book of Jasher seems to have been a collection of records or poems, concerning the chief events of the wars of Israel. In this collection, it is 20 And it came to pass, when Joshua, and the children of Israel had made an end of slaying them with a very great slaughter, till they were consumed, that the rest which remained of them entered into fenced cities.

21 And all the people returned to the camp to Joshua at Makkedah in peace; none moved his tongue against any of the children of Israel.

22 Then said Joshua, "Open the mouth of the cave, and bring out those five kings unto me out of the cave.

23 And they did so, and brought forth those five kings unto him out of the cave, the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, and the king of Eglon.

24 And it came to pass, when they brought out those kings unto Joshua, that Joshua called for all the men of Israel, and said unto the captains of the men of war which went with him, Come near, put your feet upon the necks of these kings. And they came near, and put their feet upon the necks of them.

25 And Joshua said unto them, "Fear not, nor be dismayed, be strong and of good courage: for thus shall the Lord do to all your enemies against whom ye fight.

26 And afterward Joshua smote them, and slew them, and hanged them on five trees: and they were hanged upon the trees until the evening.

27 And it came to pass, at the time of the going down of the sun, that Joshua commanded, and they took them down off the trees, and cast them into the cave wherein they had been hid, probable, there were further particulars concerning this miracle: or a poem on the occasion, well known among the Israelites. (Notes, Num. 21:11—15. 2 Sam. 1:8.)

V. 15. It cannot be supposed that Joshua would march his army twenty or thirty miles in the midst of victory, just after the above-mentioned miracle had been wrought, to give them time to complete the destruction of their enemies. (19) This verse therefore forms an evident interruption of the narrative; it is not found in some versions; it is verbatim the same as the last verse of the chapter; and probably was inserted here by the error of some ancient transcribers.

V. 16—18. The kings escaped the hailstones and the sword, only to be reserved to a more ignominious death. For the cave, in which they took shelter, became first their prison, and then their grave. (Notes, 8:29. 2 Kings 19:36, 37.)

V. 20. A few stragglers escaped the general carnage, and got refuge in the fenced cities, but were soon followed thither and destroyed. Some, however, might flee to fenced cities farther to the north of the land, and at length to Tyre or Zidon; and so finally escape the slaughter. It is probable that numbers, in the more northern regions, thus fled from the sword of Israel; and produced a superabundance of inhabitants in those ancient cities, which made way for the colonies being sent into Africa, which ancient history records; and from which Carthage especially arose, the powerful but unsuccessful rival of Rome. (Note, Gen. 9:24, 25.)

V. 21. Probably, a camp was prepared at Makkedah, for the reception and accommodation of the army after the victory, in consequence of the kings being imprisoned in the cave near to it.—No mention is made of any Israelite having been killed, missing, or wounded; though we are particularly informed of the thirty-six men who were slain before Ai: but all are said to have returned in peace to the camp. (Notes, 7:3—5. Num. 31:48—54.) It may therefore be concluded, that every one was preserved; and the victory was so complete, that there was none who dared so much as to speak a word in contempt or reproach of the Israelites. (Note, Ez. 11:7.)

V. 24, 25. This action of the captains was not intended as a personal insult to the kings; but they subscribed, as it were, their condemnation as the hardened enemies of God, and doomed by him to ignominy and destruction: as rejoicing in his victory and triumph over them, and as taking encouragement respecting the remaining kings of Canaan. (Marg. Ref. v, x.)—The transaction was evidently typical of the conquests of the Redeemer, as rejoiced in by his people; who, in overcoming their spiritual enemies by his help, anticipate that glorious season, when all his and their 'des sha' be put and laid great stones in the cave's mouth, which remain until this very day, 28 ¶ And that day Joshua took Makkedah, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof he utterly destroyed, them, and all the souls that were therein; he let none remain: and he did to the king of Makkedah as he did unto the king of Jericho.

29 Then Joshua passed from Makkedah, and all Israel with him, unto Libnah, and fought against Libnah:

30 And the Lord delivered it also, and the king thereof, into the hand of Israel; and he smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein: he let none remain in it; but did unto the king thereof as he did unto the king of Jericho.

31 And Joshua passed from Libnah, and all Israel with him, unto Lachish, and encamped against it, and fought against it:

32 And the Lord delivered Lachish into the hand of Israel, which took it on the second day, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein, according to all that he had done to Libnah.

33 Then Horam king of Gezer came up to help Lachish: and Joshua smote him and his people, until he had left him none remaining.

34 And from Lachish Joshua passed unto Eglon, and all Israel with him, and they encamped against it, and fought against it:

35 And they took it on that day, and smote it with the edge of the sword; and all the souls that were therein he utterly destroyed that day, according to all that he had done to Lachish.

36 And Joshua went up from Eglon, and all Israel with him, unto Hebron, and they fought against it:

37 And they took it, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof, and all the souls that were therein: he left none remaining, (according to all that he had done to Eglon,) but destroyed it utterly, and all the souls that were therein.

38 And Joshua returned, and all Israel with him, to Debir: and fought against it:

39 And he took it, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof, and they smote them with the edge of the sword, and utterly destroyed all the souls that were therein; he left none remaining: as he had done to Hebron, so he did to Debir, and to the king thereof; as he had done also to Libnah, and to her king.

40 So Joshua smote all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the vale, and of the springs, and all their kings: he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed, as the Lord God of Israel commanded.

41 And Joshua smote them from Kadesh-barnea even unto Gaza, and all the country of Goshen even unto Gibeon.

42 And all these kings, and their land, did Joshua take at one time; because the Lord God of Israel fought for Israel.

43 And Joshua returned, and all Israel with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.

under his feet. (Notes, Gen. 3:14, 15, Ps. 110:5, 6, Rom. 16:17—20.)

V. 26, 27. Marg. Ref. Note, 8:29.

V. 28. Makkedah seems to have been taken by a sudden onset, the very day on which the other victory was obtained, and which had been lengthened out by the sun standing still: and while the five kings were ignominiously suspended before the city.—Some learned men however think, that nothing more is meant by the words that day, than that Makkedah was taken on the same day on which it was assaulted.—We are not expressly told, how the king of Jericho was slain: but probably he was hanged up, as the king of Ai was, and as these five kings were. (Notes, 8:29.)

V. 31—33. The king of Lachish had been before put to death. (23:26.)—Probably a detachment vanquished the king of Gezer, and destroyed his people, while Joshua and the main body took Lachish.

V. 36, 37. The king of Hebron was one of the five before hanged: (23:26.) but, as some time had now elapsed, probably his successor had been appointed. This might be deemed the more necessary, as it was a considerable place, having other cities dependent upon it.—It is not agreed, whether Caleb at this time conquered the Anakims, or whether some of them now escaped to Gaza; (Notes, 11:21—23.) and afterwards returning got possession of Hebron, and were destroyed by Caleb when the land had been divided. The latter opinion seems more consonant with the history. (Notes, 14:6—15, 15:13, 14, Judg. 1:10—15.)

V. 40—43. When the Israelites had first passed Jordan, they made but slow progress. Jericho was taken by miracle; but the city was desolated, and all the spoil was destroyed, or dedicated to sacred uses. (Notes, 6:17—19, 26.) They shared the spoil of Ai, but the city was burnt and made a heap. (Note, 8:28.) Gibeon surrendered and was spared. (Notes, 9.) But when their faith, patience, and obedience had been properly proved, their success was more rapid; and they were enriched by the spoil of all these cities, and by the houses both of the cities and villages, which were preserved for their use; and by the acquisition of all the adjacent country, and its flocks, and herds, and crops, and stores; while the inhabitants were either destroyed or driven away. Thus God gave them "great and goodly cities, which they built not; houses full of good things, which they filled not: and wells digged, which they digged not." (Deut. 6:10, 11.)—The Israelites, however, still continued in a body at Gilgal, and did not as yet inhabit their cities.—They had now conquered almost all the southern part of the land.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15. When sinners renounce the service of Satan and the friendship of the world, that they may make peace with God and join interests with Israel; they must not "marvel if the world hate them," if their former friends become their most rancorous foes, and if they meet with unexpected opposition and temptations. For thus Satan the God of this world discourages many who are convinced of their danger, and almost persuaded to be Christians; but are so afraid of the cross, that they dare not venture to act according to the dictates of their consciences. Yet indeed these trials should excite new converts to greater diligence, in seeking the comfortable assurance that the covenant of peace is ratified with them by a merciful God; in surrendering themselves the more unreservedly to his service; and in applying to him for protection and deliverance. For the meanest and most feeble of those who have just begun to serve the Lord, notwithstanding former crimes and present infirmities, are equally entitled to his defence, with those who have long and faithfully been his servants.—They, who are enemies to the Lord's people because they belong to him, are adjudged his enemies: nor do any sinners more hasten and augment their own condemnation, than such as combine to impede the progress of true religion, by persecuting and intimidating those who seem disposed to serve God.—No difficulties or dangers need dismay the believer, when in the path of duty and confiding in the Lord: and it is peculiarly incumbent upon us to defend and rescue the oppressed and afflicted, who have exposed themselves to trouble for our sake or the gospel's, and who look to us for help. In such a cause we ought not to be backward to endure hardship and fatigue, and expose ourselves to loss or inconvenience, rather than grieve, by needless delays, those who depend on our aid.—The assurance of divine assistance should animate us to action, and to devise and execute every proper plan to ensure success; and when we trust in the Lord, and give him the praise, we shall experience assistance in some measure proportioned to our boldness and diligence.—The sun, moon, and stars in their courses, (Note, Judg. 5:20.) yea, the whole creation, will fight for the Lord's people against his enemies, though not so miraculously, yet as effectually, as in the days of Joshua; for all things combine to promote the salvation of the righteous, and the destruction of the wicked. How infatuated then are they who harden their hearts against that God, whose mandate can arm all the universe to execute vengeance on his enemies!

V. 16—43. "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished:" their wisest counsels prove a snare to entangle them; their most valiant and vigorous exertions expose their weakness, and end in disgrace and dismay; their choicest blessings are changed into a curse; and their secure retreats become their prisons, or their graves.—Kings and mighty captains, who are disobedient to God, will at last be treated as arch-rebels, to be distinguished only by the deepest infamy and the heaviest vengeance: and all the Israel of God will join the triumph of the Captain of their salvation, in trampling upon the necks of their proudest opposers, and exclaiming, "So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord!" (Ps. 109:1, Ps.

14 And all ^{the} spoil of these cities, and the cattle, the children of Israel took for a prey unto themselves: but every man they smote with the edge of the sword, until they had destroyed them, ^{neither} left they any to breathe.

15 As ^{the} Lord commanded Moses his servant, so did Moses command Joshua, ^{and} so did Joshua: ^{he} left nothing undone of all that the Lord commanded Moses.

16 ¶ So Joshua took ^{all} that land, the hills, and all the south country, and all ^{the} land of Goshen, and the valley, and the plain, and the mountain of Israel, and the valley of the same;

17 Even from ^{the} mount Halak, ^{that} goeth up to Seir, even unto BaaI-gad, in the valley of Lebanon, under mount Hermon: and ^{all} their kings ^{he} took, and smote them, and slew them.

18 Joshua made war ^a long time with all those kings.

19 There was not a city that made peace with the children of Israel, save ^{the} Hivites, the inhabitants of Gibeon; all ^{other} they took in battle.

20 For ^{it} was of the Lord to harden their hearts, that they should come against Israel in battle, that he might destroy them utterly, ^{and} that they might have no favour, but that he might destroy them: ^{as} the Lord commanded Moses.

21 And at that time came Joshua, and cut off ^{the} Anakims from the mountains; from Hebron, from Debir, from Anab, and from all the mountains of Judah, and from all the mountains of Israel; ^{Joshua} destroyed them utterly with their cities.

22 There was none of the Anakims left in the land of the children of Israel; ^{only} in Gaza, in Gath, and in Ashdod, there remained.

23 So Joshua took the whole land, ^{according} to all that the Lord said unto Moses, and Joshua gave it for an inheritance unto Israel, ^{according} to their divisions by their tribes. ^{And} the land rested from war.

V. 16. The land of Goshen. (10:41.) This district of Canaan seems to have derived its name from the land of Goshen in Egypt; (Gen. 47:6.) perhaps from some similarity to that region, which was observed in it, in appearance or fertility.—Some think that “the mountain of Israel” means Beth-el; and others that it was some place where Jacob resided, which was called Israel from him.

V. 17. The length of the land from the borders of Seir, or Edom, to mount Lebanon, is here described.

V. 18. Caleb was forty years of age when he went from Kadesh-barnea to spy out the land, and he was eighty-five when those conquests were completed. (14:7—10.) Almost thirty-nine years of this time were spent before Israel passed over Jordan; so that this calculation leaves between six and seven years for the term of Joshua's wars.—The whole country from north to south was then subjected, and all the inhabitants, with whom the Israelites had met, were destroyed. The subsequent history shows that the nations were not exterminated, but that numbers concealed themselves till they were again able to make head against Israel; and many, it is supposed, fled to Zidon and Tyre, and thence migrated into distant countries and settled colonies in them. (Notes, 7, 8. 10:20. Gen. 9:24, 25.)

V. 19, 20. The Lord had forbidden Israel to make any league with the idolatrous inhabitants of the land: but the examples of Rahab and of the Gibeonites show, that individuals or cities, who would renounce idolatry, and heartily come into the interests of Israel, might be spared. The Canaanites in general, however, were not in the least disposed to do this; and they never so much as proposed any terms of accommodation. “For it was of the Lord to harden their hearts” they had filled up the measure of their iniquity; and were judiciously left to blindness, pride, and obstinate enmity, and to the power of Satan: and the dispensations of Providence were appointed in that manner, which most tended to render them pertinacious in resisting, and to drive them to desperation; in order that they might bring upon themselves that vengeance which they had justly merited, and of which the Lord had constituted the Israelites his executioners, by the commission given to Moses. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 4:21. 9:12—16. 14:3, 4. Deut. 2:30.) This last reason is added, and repeatedly mentioned, (15) to show that Joshua and Israel did not act out of cruelty, revenge, or avarice; but simply in obedience to God, which alone could induce pious men to make such undistinguishing slaughter of their fellow-creatures: and doubtless, many of them did very great violence to their own feelings and inclinations, while engaged in that service. (Notes, Num. 20:14—21. 21:21—25. 31:14—18.)

V. 21—23. The Anakims, whose name had formerly so terrified the unbelieving Israelites, no ways distinguished themselves in this war, but were subdued and destroyed with the other inhabitants. (Marg. Ref. r.)—It seems evident, that Joshua conquered the Anakims, and desolated their cities before the division of the land: yet several of the principal persons escaped into the country of the Philistines, and settled there; from whom Goliath, and the other giants afterwards mentioned, descended. But after a time some of them returned, with followers, and rebuilt the cities: and Caleb and Othniel, to whom that part of the country was assigned, vanquished and destroyed them after the division of the land, perhaps after the death of Joshua. (Notes, 10:36, 37. 14:6—15. 15:13—17. Judg. 1:10—15.) The conquered cities had doubtless before us been garrisoned, and some of the people dispersed through the country to cultivate the lands; and preparation was now making for the regular partition of it among their tribes and families. New occupations, with which the nation had hitherto been entirely unacquainted, now called for their attention: but the Lord, who gave them the land, was able to teach them to cultivate it; and they would soon make proficiency under such an Instructor. (Note, Is. 28:23—29.)—Great numbers of the ancient inhabitants still continued in the land, or waited in the adjacent countries for an opportunity of regaining their possessions; but, for the present, they lay concealed, or remained quiet; so that the Israelites were not molested by their assaults or incursions.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The believer must never put off his armour, or expect durable peace, till he closes his eyes in death; nay, as his strength, consolations, and usefulness are increased, he may expect more heavy trials and severe conflicts: but while he continues watching and praying, he may confidently trust that none of his enemies shall be permitted to assail him, till he is prepared for the battle.—The strongest faith would naturally grow weak, if we were left to ourselves; and whenever we view difficulties or dangers with an eye of sense, our hearts are overwhelmed with discouragement. But Jesus ever liveth to intercede for his people, and their faith shall not fail, however Satan may assault them. (Note, Luke 22:31—34.) By waiting upon the Lord they renew their strength; and their hopes revive, and their hearts rejoice, even in the midst of tribulation. Perplexing trials render their dependence on God more simple, their prayers more fervent, and in the event their gratitude more lively: and without exception, every cross and temptation, which the believer is enabled properly to endure, enriches his soul with increasing holiness, and will enlarge his everlasting inheritance.—The possession of those things on which the carnal heart is prone to depend, is unfavourable to the life of faith and the walk with God; and it is immensely better to be without secular advantages, than to have our everlasting interests endangered.—They who prosper in the ways of the Lord, attend to the precepts and directions of his word as well as to the promises; while simplicity of faith is shown by unreserved obedience. (Notes, Heb. 11:8—10, 13—16.)—The servants of God have different employments allotted them; but every service requires self-denial, in respect of some or other of our natural inclinations; and therefore, without the habit of submitting our will to his command, we cannot implicitly follow him. Nay frequently in pleasing God, we must expose ourselves to the censure and reproach of our fellow-creatures; and our best actions may by ill judging men be supposed to result from the worst of principles: but the testimony of our conscience, and the approbation of our Judge, will compensate all consequences.—Would we approve ourselves upright, we must “leave nothing undone which the Lord has commanded;” for though omissions are not so scandalous, either in the world or in the church, as commissions, they are as certainly acts of disobedience, and effects of a will unsubjected to the divine authority.—However tedious, sharp, and difficult the believer's warfare is, his patience in tribulation may be encouraged by the joyfulness of hope; for he will, ere long, rest from sin and sorrow in the Canaan above.—But how dreadful is the case of the obstinate unbeliever, who is not moved, either by promises, warnings, judgments, or mercies, to seek reconciliation to his offended God!—When transgressors have provoked Him to leave them to themselves, they soon, by increasing presumption and hardness of heart, make way for the execution of this purposed vengeance, and for the display of his righteousness in their eternal destruction: (Note, Rom. 2:4—6.) nor will numbers, strength, or eternal confidences avail, when God shall arise to execute judgment on his

CHAPTER XII.

A list of the kings subdued by Moses, eastward of Jordan, 1-6: end of the one; and thirty kings conquered by Joshua, westward of that river, 7-24.

NOW these are the kings of the land which the children of Israel smote and possessed their land on the other side Jordan, towards the rising of the sun; from the river Arnon unto mount Hermon, and all the plain on the east;

2 Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt in Heshbon, and ruled from Aroer, which is upon the bank of the river Arnon, and from the middle of the river, and from half Gilead, even unto the river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon:

3 And from the plain to the sea of Chinneroth on the east, and unto the sea of the plain; even the salt sea on the east, the way to Beth-jeshimoth: and from the south under Ashdod-pisgah.

4 And the coast of Og king of Bashan, which was of the remnant of the giants, that dwelt at Ashtaroth and at Edrei,

5 And reigned in mount Hermon, and in Salcah, and in all Bashan, unto the border of the Geshurites, and the Maachathites, and half Gilead, the border of Sihon king of Heshbon;

6 Them did Moses the servant of the Lord, and the children of Israel, smite: and Moses the servant of the Lord gave it for a possession unto the Reubenites, and Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh.

7 ¶ And these are the kings of the country, which Joshua and the children of Israel smote on this side Jordan on the west, from Baalgad in the valley of Lebanon, even unto the mount Halak, that goeth up to Seir; which Joshua gave unto the tribes of Israel for a possession, according to their divisions:

8 In the mountains, and in the valleys, and in the plains, and in the springs, and in the wilderness, and in the south country; the Hittites, the Amorites, and the Canaanites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites.

enemies.—Those trials and perils, the prospect of which deter many from a life of godliness, and often excite the apprehensions of the true believer, are frequently in experience too inconsiderable for notice, and only excite shame and surprise, upon the recollection of the alarms which they occasioned. Let sinners then take warning not to harden their own hearts, lest God should give them up to judicial hardness: let them lay down their arms of rebellion, and humbly sue for "peace, and they shall make peace;" the effect of which shall be "quietness and assurance for ever." And let none of us dread any thing in comparison of the wrath of God, which is more tremendous than we can possibly conceive. (Note, Ps. 90:1.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XII. V. 1-6. This chapter connects the history of the conquest of Canaan with the subsequent account of its division to the tribes of Israel. The passages referred to in the margin, seem to give all the useful information that can be collected concerning the narrative. (Notes, Num. 21:21-34. 32:29-41. Deut. 2:24-37. 3:1-11.)

V. 7. "Halak" signifies either division, or smooth. Perhaps this mountain divided the land of Judah from Idumæa. (11:17. marg.)

V. 14. The Israelites utterly destroyed king Arad and his cities, in the lifetime of Moses, and called the name of them Hormah. (Note, Num. 21:1-3.) Probably "the king of Arad," here mentioned is the same person. As his kingdom was on the southern border of Canaan, and not east of Jordan, it came into the possession of Israel under Joshua; and therefore he is numbered in that division of kings. Yet Hormah is here mentioned as a distinct kingdom from that of Arad: and perhaps there was another place of that name. (Num. 14:45.)

V. 24. Every considerable town or city was under the government of a king, who possessed the adjacent fields and villages, and ruled, as it is generally supposed, with despotic sway: and though the Canaanites doubtless waged frequent wars,

NOW Joshua was old and stricken in years; and the Lord said unto him, Thou art old and stricken in years, and there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed.

and laid adventures over each other; yet no one had acquired the sovereignty of the whole.—When Julius Cæsar landed in Britain, he found four kings in the single county of Kent: how many then must there have been in the whole Island!—A single view of a good map of ancient Canaan will show the reader all that learned men have conjectured or determined concerning the relative situation of the several places, which are mentioned in this and the following chapters. And indeed that is the only method of obtaining a clear idea of the subject.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The enjoyment of present blessings should revive the grateful remembrance of former mercies: and the benefit derived from the labours of the living servants of the Lord should remind us to respect the memories of those who have heretofore served Him and their generation. The national covenant, mediated by Moses, engaged many temporal advantages to Israel; but Jesus alone brings the whole multitude of believers to the promised rest and inheritance: and though his true people enjoy many blessings from him in this world: yet they do not enter upon the possession of their complete felicity, till they pass over the Jordan of death to the mansions above.—The vengeance of a righteous God, inflicted upon all these kings and their numerous subjects for their wickedness, should impress our minds with reverential awe of his majesty and purity, and with dread and hatred of sin: while the fruitful land, which he bestowed upon his chosen people, and thus prepared for their reception, should inspire our hearts with humble gratitude, and with hope and confidence in his mercy. In both instances the final event of all things is represented; when the wicked "shall go away into everlasting punishment, and the righteous into life eternal." Let us then "flee from the wrath to come," and seek and pray to be numbered with the saints here, that we may be numbered with them in glory everlasting.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIII. V. 1-5. Joshua is supposed unto the borders of Ekron northward, [†]which is counted to the Canaanite: [†]five lords of the Philistines; the Gazathites, and the Ashdoothites, the Eshkalonites, the Gittites, and the Ekronites; also the [†]Avites:

4 From the south, all [†]the land of the Canaanites, and [†]Mearah that [†]is beside the Sidonians, unto [†]Aphek, to the borders of [†]the Amorites:

5 And the land of the [†]Giblites, and all [†]Lebanon toward the sunrise, from [†]Baal-gad under mount Hermon, unto the entering into Hamath.

6 All the inhabitants of the hill-country, from Lebanon unto [†]Misrephoth-maim, and all the [†]Sidonians; [†]them will I drive out from before the children of Israel: [†]only divide thou it by lot unto the Israelites for an inheritance, as I have commanded thee.

7 Now therefore divide [†]this land for an inheritance unto the nine tribes, and the half-tribe of Manasseh,

8 With whom the Reubenites and the Gadites have received their inheritance, which [†]Moses gave them, beyond Jordan eastward, even as Moses the servant of the Lord gave them:

9 From [†]Aroer, that [†]is upon the bank of the river Arnon, and the city that [†]is in the midst of the river, and [†]all the plain Medeba unto Dibon;

12 All the kingdom of [†]Og in Bashan, which reigned in Ashtaroth and in Edrei, who remained of the remnant of the giants: for [†]these did Moses smite, and cast them out.

13 Nevertheless, the children of Israel [†]expelled not the Geshurites, nor the Maachathites: but the Geshurites and the Maachathites dwell among the Israelites until this day.

14 Only [†]unto the tribe of Levi he gave none inheritance; the sacrifices of the Lord God of Israel made by fire [†]are their inheritance, as he said unto them.

15 [†]And Moses gave unto the tribe of the children of Reuben inheritance according to their families:

to have been about one hundred years of age at this time; though not being informed how old he was when Israel left Egypt, we can only conjecture what time passed between that event and his death, at the age of one hundred and ten years. (24:29.) It is probable, however, that he found himself less capable of military services, than he had formerly been. (14:10,11.) A large proportion of the land yet remained in the possession of the ancient inhabitants; and perhaps he supposed that the division was not to take place till the whole was actually subdued. But the Lord was pleased graciously to remove his anxiety, and to direct his conduct, by commanding him, whilst he was able, and without further delay, to make preparation for dividing the land among those tribes which had not received their inheritance. The whole country, not excepting the parts possessed by the ancient inhabitants, was ordered to be thus allotted to Israel; which tended to remind them of the extent and certainty of the divine promises, and to encourage them to seek the more complete performance of them. It was also a caution, not to enter into any alliance with the remains of the devoted nations: and the leaders of each tribe were thus excited to levy war against those Canaanites, who kept them out of their inheritance.—Sihor was “the river of Egypt,” and some think a branch of the Nile; but this is not likely; it was rather some small rivulet just at the entrance of Egypt.—The Philistines were not descended from Canaan, but from Mizraim the son of Ham: (Gen. 10:6,13-20.) yet they were numbered with the Canaanites in this distribution. (Marg. Ref. d, g, m—q.)

V. 6. The Israelites had acquired the land by conquest; but they were authorized to seize upon what they could, i

16 And their coast was [†]from Aroer, that [†]is on the bank of the river Arnon, and the city that [†]is in the midst of the river, and all the plain by Medeba:

22 [†]Balaam also the son of Beor, the [†]south-sayer, did the children of Israel slay with the sword, among them that were slain by them.

23 And the border of the children of Reuben was Jordan, and the border thereof. This was the inheritance of the children of Reuben after their families, the cities and the villages thereof.

24 [†]And Moses gave inheritance unto the tribe of Gad, even unto the children of Gad, according to their families:

25 And their coast was Jazer, and all the cities of Gilead, and [†]half the land of the children of Ammon, unto Aroer, that [†]is before [†]Rabbah:

28 This [†]is the inheritance of the children of Gad, after their families, the cities, and their villages.

29 [†]And Moses gave inheritance unto the half-tribe of Manasseh: and this was the possession of the half-tribe of the children of Manasseh by their families.

nor to have it all in common, nor to share it out by consent or arbitration; but, with a solemn appeal to God himself, to divide it by casting lots: for Canaan was his land, and Israel was his people. This was likewise the readiest way of satisfying all parties, and preventing discontent and discord; and it most aptly typified the Lord's choosing, in his infinite wisdom and love, the temporal provision and eternal inheritance of his true people.—As every tribe had its inheritance determined by lot; so it is probable, that afterwards the subdivisions to every family and each individual were regulated in the same manner: and thus their estates would descend to posterity, not so much as the inheritance of their fathers, as that which the Lord had immediately assigned them. and all the towns of Jair, which are in Bashan threescore cities;

3. And half Gilead, and ^aAshtaroth, and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan, were pertaining unto the children of Machir the son of Manasseh, even to the one half of the children of Machir by their families.

32 These are the countries which Moses did distribute for inheritance in the plains of Moab, on the other side Jordan by Jericho eastward.

33 But unto ^athe tribe of Levi Moses gave not any inheritance; the LORD God of Israel was their inheritance, as he said unto them.

CHAPTER XIV.

The country west of Jordan to be divided by lot, to the nine tribes and a half, 1-5. Caleb demands Hebron and obtains it, 6-13.

AND these are the countries which the children of Israel inherited in the land of Canaan, which Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel, distributed for inheritance to them.

2 By ^alot was their inheritance, as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses, for the nine tribes, and for the half-tribe.

3 For Moses had given the inheritance of two tribes and an half-tribe on the other side Jordan: ^abut unto the Levites he gave none inheritance among them.

4 For the children of Joseph were two tribes, Manasseh and Ephraim: therefore they gave no part unto the Levites in the land, save cities to dwell in, with their suburbs for their cattle, and for their substance.

5 As the LORD commanded Moses, so the children of Israel did, and they divided the land.

6 ^aThen the children of Judah came unto Joshua, in ^aGilgal; and ^aCaleb, the son of Jephunneh the Kenezite, said unto him, ^aThou knowest the thing that the LORD said unto Moses the man of God, concerning me and thee in ^aKadesh-barnea.

7 Forty years old was I when Moses the servant of the LORD ^asent me from Kadesh-barnea to spy out the land; and ^aI brought him word again, as ^ait was in mine heart.

8 Nevertheless, my brethren that went up with me, made the heart of the people melt: but I ^awholly followed the LORD my God.

9 And Moses sware on that day, saying, ^aSurely the land whereon thy feet have trodden shall be thine inheritance, and thy children's for ever; because thou hast wholly followed the LORD my God.

10 And now, behold, the LORD hath kept me alive, as he said, these forty and five years, even since the LORD spake this word unto Moses, while the children of Israel ^awandered in the wilderness; and now, lo, I am this day fourscore and five years old.

11 As ^ayet I am as strong this day, as I was in the day that Moses sent me: as my strength was then, even so is my strength now, for war, both to go out and to come in.

12 Now therefore give me this mountain, whereof the LORD spake in that day; (for thou heardest in that day how the Anakims were there, and that the cities were great and fenced:) ^aif so be the LORD will be with me, then I shall be able to drive them out, as the LORD said.

13 And Joshua ^ablessed him, and ^agave unto Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, Hebron for an inheritance.

14 Hebron therefore became the inheritance of Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, the Kenezite, unto this day; ^abecause that he wholly followed the LORD God of Israel.

15 And ^athe name of Hebron before was Kirjath-arba, which Arba ^awas a great man among the Anakims. ^aAnd the land had rest from war.

V. 33. As Moses was himself of the tribe of Levi, he gave a special proof that he acted by divine authority, in thus overlooking his own family and his own tribe: for though the Levites were well provided for, yet the security of that provision was so interwoven with Israel's adherence to the worship of God, that, had they universally apostatized, the Levites would have been left destitute, whilst all the other tribes would have had possession of their estates; that is, without some immediate divine interposition.—Had Moses acted according to the natural bias of the human mind, he would probably have first provided for his own tribe; but on the contrary, he expressly appointed that they should have no inheritance in Israel. And his sons appear to have entered fully into the disinterested and unambitious spirit of their father; though in no respect distinguished from the rest of the Levites. (Marg. Ref. Notes. Gen. 48:5. Num. 31-3. 18:20.) The way in which this subject is uniformly mentioned, implies that the Levites had as good a title to their tithes and perquisites, as their brethren had to their estates.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Old age, gradually and almost insensibly, creeps upon mankind: and though their infirmities might, one would think, suffice to remind aged persons of their time of life; yet they generally need to be put in remembrance of it, and excited to prepare for approaching dissolution.—“Whatever our hand findeth to do,” respecting the glory of God, the salvation of our souls, or the good of our fellow-creatures, we should “do it with our might;” and the expectation of death, as well as the calamities of life should warn us to redeem our time, and seize upon present opportunities of usefulness. (Note, Ec. 9:10.) Our season of labour and of service will soon expire, and we shall shortly be at rest: we ought not therefore now to indulge sloth, or shrink from hardship; yet if it be the Lord's will to lay us aside, we should be willing to leave our designs unfinished, or to be completed by other hands. He knoweth all our infirmities, and will not forsake his servants, when old and incapable of work: when however the heart is zealous, they who cannot perform one service, will devise to be useful in some other way, though not equally splendid and honourable.—But one succession after another of godly persons and able ministers dies, and leaves an immense proportion of the earth in the possession of the great enemy of God and man; though the promise assures us that it will all in due time be wrested out of his hands, and become entirely the kingdom of the Lord Jesus. Indeed none of us in this world live up to our privileges and spiritual blessings, as delineated in the word of promise; being kept out of possession by our foes, and especially by “sin that dwelleth in us;” but this consideration should animate us to be active and courageous, and to expect and seek for still greater and richer acquisitions of knowledge, holiness, and heavenly consolations.—In the present state of human nature, it is the Lord's will that there should be distinctions of property, that every one may know and be contented with his own.—Wherever our habitation is placed, and in whatever honest way our portion is assigned us, we should consider them as allotted us by God, and acquiesce and be thankful: and every prudent method should be devised to prevent litigations about property.—The mercies of the Lord to his people, and his judgments upon his enemies, especially those who have tempted others to wickedness, ought never to be forgotten, and should frequently be mentioned; because they are honourable to him, and profitable subjects for our meditation.—The ministers of the Lord should study to show that they are peculiarly indifferent about worldly interests: and the people should take care that they want nothing suitable to their station; that they may neither be discouraged, nor taken off from serving at the altar. But happy are they, who have the Lord God of Israel for their inheritance, how little soever of this world falls to their share: his providence will supply their temporal necessities; and his ordinances and spiritual consolations will feast their souls, until they arrive at that “fulness of joy, and those pleasures which are at his right hand for evermore.”

NOTES.—CHAP. XIV. V. 3-5. (Notes, 13:14-33. 21. Num. 35:2-8.) As the descendants of Joseph formed two tribes, the nation consisted of twelve tribes, according to the number of Jacob's sons, without reckoning the tribe of Levi and as Joseph was allowed a double portion, Levi was otherwise provided for.

V. 6-15. Before the persons, appointed for that service, (Note, Num. 34:16-29.) had begun to divide the land by lot, Caleb came to Joshua at Gilgal, (where probably the tabernacle and ark of the Lord still remained,) to require that Hebron and the lands adjacent might be assigned to him; and his brethren of the tribe of Judah, attended him, as supporting his claim. It is probable, that when the other spies terrified the people about the Anakims who dwelt in Hebron, Ca-

THIS then was the lot of the tribe of the children of Judah by their families: even to the border of Edom; the wilderness of Zin southward was the uttermost part of the south coast.

4 From thence it passed towards Azmon, and went out unto the river of Egypt; and the goings out of that coast were at the sea. This shall be your south coast.

5 And the east border was the salt sea, even unto the end of Jordan: and their border in the north quarter was from the bay of the sea, at the uttermost part of Jordan.

6 And the border went up to Bethhogla, and passed along by the north of Beth-arabah; and lel proposed to take that place for his inheritance, and to wait for it till the Anakims were dispossessed: and that by divine direction Moses had engaged by oath that it should be so, at the time when the Lord declared that Joshua and Caleb alone should live to enter the promised land. (Notes, Num. 14:24, 27-30.) Caleb therefore solicited the performance of this engagement, and spake of it as well known to Joshua and all concerned. He likewise took occasion to rejoice in the testimony of the Lord, that he had "followed him wholly;" and in that of his conscience, that he had given "his report, as it was in his heart;" and having intimated how the other spies discouraged the people to their own destruction, he thankfully mentioned the goodness of God, in keeping him alive for forty-five years, whilst all that generation were wasted in the wilderness, and amidst all the perils of the wars in Canaan; and that he, at eighty-five years of age, was as strong, and as capable of war, as he had been at forty. All this became one, who was so eminent a character and venerable for age: being more than twenty years older than any man in Israel, except Joshua and some of the Levites. It seems from the narration, that the Anakims had again possessed themselves of Hebron, after it was taken by Joshua, and that Caleb undertook to drive them out. (Note, 11:21-23.) This he was ready to attempt, confiding, not in his own strength or valour, or in the assistance of his brethren, but in the Almighty God: and, in order to mark this more strongly, though it does not appear that he doubted the event, he thus expressed his confidence: "If the Lord will be with me, then I shall be able to drive them out."—Joshua and the princes, without hesitation, consented to his proposal: and "Joshua blessed him;" he prayed that he might have success in his intended expedition, and comfort in his inheritance.—In the next chapter we read of his driving out the Anakims; (Notes, 15:13-19.) and when the lots were cast, Hebron fell within the portion of Judah, so that he was not separated from his brethren. (15:54.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who desire to prosper and be comfortable in their undertakings and possessions, must "acknowledge the Lord in all their ways," refer every matter to his decision, and regulate their whole conduct by his commands.—The continuance of our lives, notwithstanding internal decays and diseases, and external perils and injuries, and while numbers are dying around us, ought thankfully to be acknowledged as the Lord's doing; and if health and vigour are enjoyed, at that time of life which to others is labour and sorrow, this demands peculiar gratitude. But old age, even when exempt from infirmity and pain, is neither honourable nor comfortable, except it be found in the way of righteousness; for a long life, spent in increasing guilt, diffusing wretchedness and wickedness, and "treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath," will prove the occasion of proportionably deeper condemnation. But they who seek the Lord early and "follow him wholly," and stand immovably firm in times of general apostasy and prevailing ungodliness, or in seasons of sharp temptation and imminent danger: if afterwards favoured with long life, and enabled to spend it in glorifying God and doing good, are the most distinguished and honourable of the human species. They may look back upon their lives past, spent, by the grace of God, in some measure usefully; and they may look forward to dissolution as speedily approaching, with holy consolation.—(Notes, 2 Tim. 4:6-8, 2 Pet. 1:12-15.) They have a testimony to their characters in the hearts of others, and may rejoice in the testimony of their own consciences. They have much to be thankful for; and it will become them, and they will know how with modesty and humility, to speak of all that God has done for them and by them; which will encourage others, and redound in many thanksgivings to his name. Though "the outward man decay," they will feel themselves as strong for their spiritual warfare as ever; and not fear by the help of God to drive out every enemy, which prevents their possession of the promised inheritance. Such eminent believers sometimes survive envy, calumny, and prejudice; their sun, which has long been obscured by intervening clouds of slanderous reports, groundless jealousies, and rancorous enmity, breaks through and shines with bright serenity before it sets. God himself blesses them; all around perceive it and call them blessed, and concur in showing them distinguishing respect: and great usefulness awaits their latter days, their closing scene, and dying testimony; while they declare to all around them, that the Lord, in performing his promises, has exceeded their largest expectations.—Let then young persons be persuaded to seek the Lord early: let tried and tempted Christians be encouraged to endure and wait patiently; and let those, who meet with opposition, calumny, neglect, or ill success in their well-meant endeavours to do good, stand their ground steadfastly.—Let us all trust in the faithful and merciful promises of God without wavering; and aim so to walk with him, that if we are taken away more early in life, we may be found ready; and if spared till old age, may close it honourably, usefully, and comfortably.

NOTES.—CHAP. XV. V. 1-12. (Num. 34:3-6.) After some general survey of the land, Joshua proceeded to allot to Judah, Ephraim, and the half of Manasseh, their situations and inheritances, before they left Gilgal; and afterwards removing to Shiloh, a more extensive and accurate survey seems to have been made, and the other tribes had their portions assigned them by lot also. (Notes, 18:1-10.)—The inheritance, which Judah actually possessed, was large; for it was intended that this tribe should have the preëminence, and it was the most numerous of all the tribes. But that which was at first allotted to them, contained half the southern part of Canaan, and was found too extensive: so that some deductions were afterwards made. (Note, 19:1-9.)—The relative situation of the tribes seems to have been decided by lot; but the proportion of land for each, to have been determined, in some measure, by the discretion of the persons appointed for that service.—"Bohan the son of Reuben," (6) was either one of Reuben's sons, who died before Jacob left Canaan, and had been buried in the place here mentioned; or some eminent person that had lately died there.—Several of the places spoken of must have been different from those called elsewhere by the same names. (Marg. Ref.) The portion, here marked out, was bounded, on the south, by the wilderness of Zin, and the southern coast of the salt sea; on the east by that sea, reaching to the place, at which it receives the waters of Jordan; on the north, by a line drawn nearly parallel to Jerusalem, across from the northern extremity of the salt sea, to the south boundary of the Philistines and to the Mediterranean Sea; which sea was its boundary, as far the river of Egypt.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

God delights to honour and bless those who honour and obey him, and to answer the expectations of such as confide in him; and wise and good parents will humbly endeavour to copy his example, in their conduct towards dutiful and obedient children.—It is a very valuable privilege to be closely united with families distinguished for faith and piety; and to contract marriage with those who have been ¹trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.—When the character of parents, the education of their children, and the children's consequent prudent and pious conduct combine: there is the fairest prospect that they will be settled in life, to the mutual comfort and advantage of all the parties concerned.—Nature teaches us to desire temporal benefits for our children: but grace will teach us to be far more desirous and earnest, in using means that they may be partakers of spiritual blessings.—When persons in the married state consult each other's comfort and advantage, and study to order all their concerns with mutual confidence and agreement, domestic felicity will be their recompense.—But, if affection to a creature animates men to such strenuous efforts and perilous adventures, what will the love of God our Saviour do, if it bear rule in our hearts? (Note, 2 Cor. 5:13-15.) The desire of enjoying his favour, of expressing our gratitude to him, and of promoting his glory, will prove a principle of self-denying obedience and patient suffering for his sake, even ¹"stronger than death" itself. (Cant. 8:6, 7. Phil. 1:19-26.) And if earthly parents, "being evil, know how to give good gifts to their children; how much more will our heavenly Father give good things to those who ask him!"—Husbands and wives commonly concur in seeking accessions to their temporal riches, and under certain limitations it may be allowable: but it is much better when they concur heartily in seeking "those things which are above," and praying for these spiritual blessings, in behalf of each other, of their children, and all around them. Indeed, all the blessings of both ¹"the upper and the nether springs," belong to the children of God; and, as related to Christ, they have the first or the largest portion for his sake, freely given them by the Father, as the lot of their inheritance. But they must exert themselves vigorously to subdue those enemies within and without, which keep them out of possession of the promised blessings: and he is ever ready to assist all who call upon him to succour them in this warfare. May the Lord then excite our diligence and increase our faith, that we may ¹"be strong in him and in the power of his might;" and then, instead of saying, "We cannot drive them out," we shall exclaim, "I can do all things, through Christ who strengtheneth me." (Note, Phil. 4:10-13.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XVI. V. 1-8. (Marg. Ref.) The inheritance of Ephraim, and the half tribe of Manasseh, extended from Jordan to the Mediterranean Sea, across the country. It lay north of the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, Simeon, and Dan, and south of the other tribes. The southern part of this general allotment was assigned to Ephraim, and the northern to Manasseh.

V. 9. Separate cities.] Some cities, which fell within the lot of Manasseh, seem to have been afterwards assigned to the Ephraimites who more wanted them: the and to Gezer: and the goings out thereof are at ¹the sea.

4 So ¹the children of Joseph, Manasseh and Ephraim, took their inheritance.

5 ¹And the border of the children of Ephraim, according to their families, was thus; even the border of their inheritance on the east side was ¹Ataroth-addar, unto Beth-horon the upper.

6 And the border went out toward the sea, to ¹Michmethah on the north side, and the border went about eastward unto ¹Taanath-shiloh, and passed by it on the east to Janohah:

7 And it went down from Janohah to ¹Ataroth, and to Naarath, and came to ¹Jericho, and went out at Jordan.

8 The border went out from ¹Tappuah westward unto the river Kanah; and the goings out thereof were at ¹the sea. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Ephraim by their families.

9 And ¹the separate cities for the children of Ephraim were among the inheritance of the children of Manasseh, all the cities with their villages.

10 And ¹they drave not out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer: but ¹the Canaanites dwell among the Ephraimites unto this day, and serve under tribute.

same probably was done in the case of some other tribes. (17:9, 11.)

V. 10. As there is no intimation that these Canaanites renounced idolatry, and came heartily into the interests of Israel; and as the Ephraimites were strong enough to subject them and compel them to pay tribute; no excuse can be made for their conduct, in sparing those whom God commanded them to destroy, and in making a league with them. (Notes, 17:11-18.) But they consulted their present ease more than either their duty, the common good of Israel, or their own true and durable interest. (Note, Judg. 1:28.) Gezer seems to have remained in the hands of the Canaanites till the days of Solomon. (Note, 1 Kings 9:16.) "The thirst of plunder, and the indulgence of licentious desires, were completely checked and defeated in the Jewish soldiery, by the very conditions on which alone they were enabled to subdue the condemned nations: and . . . the feelings of national hostility . . . were controlled and mitigated, by solemnly enjoining the exercise of as great severity in punishing idolatry among . . . themselves, as they were compelled to exercise against the condemned nations of Canaan: and it is evident from the event, that it was with reluctance, and only by compulsion, they exercised these severities, because, as soon as the impulse was withdrawn, they ceased to exercise any such severity, and on the contrary treated with culpable lenity, and regarded with a dangerous complacency, the remnants of those impious nations, whose total extermination, they had been warned was necessary to guard against the contagion of their vices and idolatries." Graves on the Pentateuch, Vol. ii. pp. 101, 102.—Contenting themselves with the tributes which were paid to them, they grew effeminate; . . . but applied themselves to the cultivation of their lands, which producing them great plenty and riches, they neglected the regular disposition of their settlement, and indulged themselves in luxuries and pleasures." Josephus, quoted by Graves, Vol. ii. p. 132.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our situation and provision in this present life, as well as our future inheritance, are appointed by the only wise and righteous God; and we should learn to acknowledge his goodness with thankfulness, and be contented with our portion, whether more or less abundant; because he knows what is best for us, and we have far more than we deserve.—The distinctions of property accord to the appointment of God, and must therefore be conscientiously maintained: nay, so far from fraudulently or violently attempting to entrench on them, we must not covet any thing that is another's, nor envy his prosperity, but rejoice in it. Yet brotherly love is not tenacious, but freely imparts what is superfluous, for the good of those in want, saying, "What is that between me and thee?" We should indeed in all things be more happy, did we more diligently obey our God.

NOTES.—CHAP. XVII. V. 1 Though Manasseh was the first-born of Joseph, yet Ephraim inherited before him. (16: Note, Gen. 48:17-20.) Machir is supposed to have been the only son of Manasseh, at least who lived to have children; (Note, 1 Chr. 7:14, 15.) and in some instances, an only son is called the first-born. (Note, Matt. 1:24, 25.) He was a man of war; probably he had distinguished himself whilst in Egypt, in the assault which the Philistines made upon the Ephraimites, and had defended his brethren. (Note,

CHAPTER XVII.

The lot of the half-tribe of Manasseh, 1, 2. The case of Zelophehad's daughters, 3-6. The borders of Manasseh, 7-11. The Canaanites remain, but are tribute, 12, 13. The sons of a sister petition for another lot, which Joshua refuses them, 14-18.

THERE was also a lot for the tribe of Manasseh, for he was the first-born of Joseph; to wit, for Machir, the first-born of Manasseh, the father of Gilead: because he was a man of war, therefore he had Gilead and Bashan.

2 There was also a lot for the rest of the children of Manasseh by their families: for the children of Abiezer, and for the children of Helek, and for the children of Asriel, and for the children of Shechem, and for the children of Hepher, and for the children of Shemida: these were the male children of Manasseh, the son of Joseph, by their families.

3 ¶ But Zelophehad, the son of Hepher, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, had no sons, but daughters; and these are the names of his daughters, Mahlah, and Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.

4 And they came near before Eleazar the priest, and before Joshua the son of Nun, and before the princes, saying, "The LORD commanded Moses to give us an inheritance among our brethren. Therefore according to the commandment of the LORD, he gave them an inheritance among the brethren of their father."

5 And there fell ten portions to Manasseh, beside the land of Gilead and Bashan, which were on the other side Jordan;

6 Because the daughters of Manasseh had an inheritance among his sons: and the rest of Manasseh's sons had the land of Gilead.

7 ¶ And the coast of Manasseh was from Asher to Michmethah, that lieth before Shechem, and the border went along on the right hand, unto the inhabitants of En-tappuah.

8 Now Manasseh had the land of Tappuah: but Tappuah, on the border of Manasseh, belonged to the children of Ephraim:

9 And the coast descended unto the river Kanah, southward of the river: these cities of Ephraim are among the cities of Manasseh; the coast of Manasseh also was on the north side of the river, and the outgoings of it were at the sea.

10 Southward it was Ephraim's, and northward it was Manasseh's, and the sea is his border, and they met together in Asher on the north, and in Issachar on the east.

11 And Manasseh had in Issachar, and in Asher, Beth-shean and her towns, and Ibleam and her towns, and the inhabitants of Dor and her towns, and the inhabitants of Taanach and her towns, and the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns, even three countries.

12 Yet the children of Manasse could not drive out the inhabitants of those cities, but the Canaanites would dwell in that land.

13 Yet it came to pass when the children of Israel were waxen strong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute; but did not utterly drive them out.

14 ¶ And the children of Joseph spake unto Joshua, saying, Why hast thou given me but one lot and one portion to inherit, seeing I am a great people, forasmuch as the LORD hath blessed me hitherto?

15 And Joshua answered them, If thou be a great people, then get thee up to the wood-country, and cut down for thyself there, in the land of the Perizzites, and of the giants, if mount Ephraim be too narrow for thee.

16 And the children of Joseph said, The hill is not enough for us: and all the Canaanites that dwell in the land of the valley have chariots of iron, both they who are of Beth-shean and her towns, and they who are of the valley of Jezreel.

17 And Joshua spake unto the house of Joseph, even to Ephraim, and to Manasseh, saying, Thou art a great people, and hast great power; thou shalt not have one lot only:

18 But the mountain shall be thine; for it is a wood, and thou shalt cut it down; and the outgoings of it shall be thine; for thou shalt drive out the Canaanites, though they have iron chariots, and though they be strong.

V. 3-6. Five portions were allotted to the half-tribe of Manasseh, west of Jordan; and that of Hepher, who seems to have had no son but Zelophehad, was divided among his five daughters. So there were ten portions, though of different magnitude. (Notes, Num. 27:1-11. 36.)

V. 7-10. (Marg. Ref.) The lot of Manasseh had that of Ephraim on the south, and the Mediterranean Sea on the west: but on the north-west it bordered on Asher; and towards the north-east, on Issachar. (Notes, 16:1-9. 19:17-31.)

V. 11-13. The inhabitants of some of these cities were subject to Manasseh: at first they could not drive them out, for want of faith and courage; and when they had prevailed against them, they let them remain as tributaries, contrary to the express command of God. (Note, 16:10.)—Three countries. (11) Or, districts.

V. 14, 15. Joshua was of the tribe of Ephraim, and his brethren might expect some special favour on that account. Their inheritance perhaps was less valuable than that of Judah; and as they thought, only sufficient for one tribe, and they were two: a considerable part of their land was held by the ancient inhabitants; and they supposed that if the Lord blessed and increased them in future, as he had in times past, they should be much straitened for room. These formed the grounds and encouragements of their petition. But they evidently undervalued the portion which the Lord had assigned them by lot: and they coveted what belonged to others, while they neglected to get possession of their own land. As a great people they were better able to labour and to fight, to clear and cultivate the unimproved woodlands, and to dispossess the Canaanites. And as the Lord had blessed them hitherto, they had the more encouragement to confide in his assistance: nor would Joshua show partiality to his kindred, any more than Moses had done.

V. 16. Chariots of iron.] It is supposed, that these chariots were armed with sharp scythes from the axes, on each side, underneath, and in different directions. They were drawn by swift and strong horses, and driven by expert charioteers, who were generally accompanied by warriors that fought from the chariots. They made dreadful havoc among undisciplined troops, or such as were not accustomed to them; and were exceedingly formidable in the first onset. But able commanders, by a skilful disposition of their forces; and well-disciplined troops, by regular and expeditious movements, rendered their force and fury vain: and sometimes by wounding and affrighting the horses, they were driven back upon their own army with terrible confusion and destruction. Wherever, therefore, war became a science, they fell into disuse as unwieldy and dangerous.—The objection made "by the children of Joseph," to Joshua's exhortation, was evidently the result of unbelief. What were chariots of iron to the Almighty power of Israel's God? (Notes, 11:4, 5. Num. 13:30, 31. Judg. 4:10, 14.)

V. 17, 18. Joshua gently reproved the claimants for calling their portion "one lot," and pointed out the improvement of which it was capable; and the extensive tracts of land, which might be cleared, and rescued from the Canaanites: and he assured them, that if they exerted their valour, power, and industry in dependence on the Lord; the iron chariots, and the strength of the Canaanites, would prove no bar to their success and prosperity.—The mountain, or wood, here spoken of, had perhaps not before been expressly allotted to these tribes; yet it lay within or near, the assigned limits.

4 Give out from among you three men for each tribe; and I will send them, and they shall rise and go through the land, and describe it according to the inheritance of them: and they shall come again to me.

5 And they shall divide it into seven parts: Judah shall abide in their coast on the south, and the house of Joseph shall abide in their coasts on the north.

for the performance of his promises, inducing cheerful obedience to his commands, will ensure to us an inheritance among his people in the heavenly Canaan, and every thing truly good for us in this world.—But, alas! even professed Christians are often more disposed to murmur, envy, and covet, than to be content, thankful, and ready to distribute. Indeed we are all more prone to grasp at what belongs to others, than to manage our own to the best advantage, and many complain of poverty, and encroach upon the benevolence of others, because they rebel against the sentence of divine justice, “Thou shalt eat thy bread in the sweat of thy brow.” Men excuse themselves from labour on any pretence: and nothing serves the purpose better, than having rich and powerful relations; though by providing for them these are often most criminally partial and unfaithful in disposing of those funds, with which they were intrusted for the public benefit. But there is more real kindness in pointing out to men the advantages within their reach, that they may be excited to improve them, than in gratifying their indolence and profusion. True religion gives no sanction to these evils: “We commanded,” says the apostle, “that if any man would not work, neither should he eat.” and many of our canons are only the language of sloth, which magnifies every difficulty into an impossibility, and represents every danger as inevitable destruction.—This is especially the case in our spiritual work and warfare: but even our professed relation to the Captain of the LORD’s host will not avail us, if we be indolent and self-indulgent. Our very complaints, that comforts are withheld, frequently result from negligence and fear of the cross; and when convinced that we can do nothing, we are apt to sit still and attempt nothing. But “as many as the Lord loves, he rebukes and chastens;” and if we belong to him, he will stir us up to be diligent, bold, and persevering in well-doing; to break our league with every sin, and renounce our worldly pleasures and sinful interests; to rise superior to our fears, and to exert our best endeavours. Then our complaints will be silenced, or rather turned into joyful thanksgivings; and, if “the LORD hath blessed us hitherto,” this should suffice to shame us out of our distrust and repinings.—May he teach us here to believe and obey, and give us an inheritance among his saints in glory everlasting!

NOTES.—CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. The tribes of Judah, Ephraim, and Manasseh, were settled in their possessions; and perhaps many others were dispersed in some parts of the land to cultivate it, where they could do it safely; it was therefore proper, that the tabernacle should be removed to a more central situation than Gilgal, where it had hitherto remained; and Shiloh was selected for that purpose, doubtless by direction from the Lord, who might be consulted on the occasion by Urim and Thummim. (Notes, Ex. 29:30. Num. 27:21.) This city was in the centre of Canaan, and as convenient as possible for all the tribes; and it was proper that the ark and tabernacle, the visible symbols of JEHOVAH’s presence, and the glory of the land, which stamped a relative holiness upon it, should be in the midst of it. Shiloh was in the lot of Ephraim, the tribe to which Joshua belonged: and it was expedient, that the sanctuary should be near the residence of the chief governor.—The name of this city is the same, as that by which Jacob predicted the Messiah; (Note, Gen. 49:10.) and some expositors suppose, that it was called Shiloh on this occasion, when selected for the resting-place of the ark, and the observance of those institutions which typified our great Peace-maker, and our access to God through his atonement and intercession.—That part of the seven parts, and bring the description hither to me, that I may cast lots for you here before the LORD our God.

7 But the Levites have no part among you; for the priesthood of the LORD is their inheritance: and Gad, and Reuben, and half the tribe of Manasseh, have received their inheritance beyond Jordan on the east, which Moses the servant of the LORD gave them.

8 And the men arose, and went away: and Joshua charged them that went to describe the land, saying, Go, and walk through the land, and describe it, and come again to me, that I may here cast lots for you before the LORD in Shiloh.

9 And the men went, and passed through the land, and described it by cities into seven parts, in a book, and came again to Joshua, to the host at Shiloh.

10 And Joshua cast lots for them in Shiloh before the LORD: and there Joshua divided the land unto the children of Israel, according to their divisions.

11 ¶ And the lot of the tribe of the children of Benjamin came up according to their families; country being subdued, the Israelites could assemble without interruption; and all personal cares and employments seem to have been laid aside, while, with one consent, they attended to this solemn and joyful religious duty. No doubt those, who still continued encamped, removed and pitched around the tabernacle as they had before done, both in the wilderness and in Canaan.—In this place the sanctuary of God remained, till the ark was taken by the Philistines in the time of Eli; (1 Sam. 4:) but soon after it seems to have been removed to Nob; though the ark was placed at Kirjath-jearim, probably till David removed it to mount Zion. (Notes, 1 Sam. 7:1, 21:1, 2. 2 Sam. 6:2.) So that the tabernacle was stationed at Shiloh between three and four hundred years. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. The dissatisfaction, which Ephraim and Manasseh had expressed respecting the inheritance allotted them, seems to have induced Joshua to stay the proceedings of the persons employed in dividing the land, till the camp had been removed to Shiloh, and another survey had been made. (Notes, 17:14-13.)

V. 3-10. The people, enriched with plunder, and living in plenty, were more incontinent on present ease and indulgence, than on obtaining possession of their permanent inheritances; which could not be done without new dangers and fatigues. (Note, 16:10.) In the mean time the Canaanites were recovering strength and courage, a great part of the land remained uncultivated, and the Israelites were impoverishing themselves, and contracting bad habits.—After a year or more had been spent in this manner, whilst they were but little acquainted with that part of the land which was not yet divided, Joshua reproved their slackness, and directed them how to proceed. Some general survey indeed must have been made, previous to the allotment of portions to the aforementioned tribes; but it had not been sufficiently exact and complete. Three persons, therefore, were chosen out of every tribe concerned, that an impartial and amicable settlement might be made; and perhaps they went in three companies for expedition. These surveyors, according to the instructions given by Joshua, made an exact measurement and description of the country as they could, both as to its extent and fertility; and divided the remains of the land into seven parts, that the seven remaining tribes might have their inheritances assigned them by lot: the situation being thus determined, and the quantity proportioned to their numbers. While employed in this perious work, they were, doubtless, peculiarly emboldened and protected by the Lord; and the Canaanites were intimidated and restrained from assaulting them: so that they all returned in safety to Shiloh; and Joshua with religious solemnity cast lots for them before the Lord.—On this survey it appeared, that Judah’s portion had been made disproportionately large: and therefore Simeon had his taken out from it; and Dan also, at least in part. (Notes, 19:1-9, 40-48.)

In a book. (9) The surveyors seem to have formed some kind of map of the country, as well as a description of it in writing. The Egyptians, from the situation of their fields, as annually overflowed by the Nile, acquired great skill in surveying and measuring land: and some of the Israelites had, no doubt, learned this from them: and further immediate teaching from God might be vouchsafed on this occasion. (Notes, Ex. 31:1-6.)

V. 11-20. (Marg. Ref.) In the prophetic blessing of Moses, Benjamin is placed between Judah and Joseph; (for Levi had no inheritance assigned him:) and at length, by lot, the portion of Benjamin fell between them. (Notes, Deut and the coast of their lot came forth between the children of Judah and the children of Joseph.

12 And their border on the north side was from Jordan: and the border went up to the side of Jericho on the north side, and went up through the mountains westward; and the goings out thereof were at the wilderness of Beth-aven.

13 And the border went over from thence toward Luz, to the side of Luz, which is Beth-el, southward, and the border descended to Ataroth-addar near the hill that lieth on the south side of the nether Beth-horon.

14 And the border was drawn thence, and compassed the corner of the sea southward, from the hill that lieth before Beth-horon southward; and the goings out thereof were at Kirjath-baal, which is Kirjath-jearim, a city of the children of Judah. This was the west quarter.

15 And the south quarter was from the end of Kirjath-jearim, and the border went out on the west, and went out to the well of waters of Nephtoi;

16 And the border came down to the end of the mountain that lieth before the valley of the son of Hinnom, and which is in the valley of the giants on the north, and descended to the valley of Hinnom, to the side of Jebusi on the south, and descended to En-rogel,

17 And was drawn from the north, and went forth to En-shemesh, and went forth toward Geliloth, which is over against the going up of Adummim, and descended to the stone of Bohan the son of Reuben,

18 And passed along toward the side over against Arabah northward, and went down unto Arabah;

19 And the border passed along to the side of Beth-hoglah, northward; and the outgoings of the border were at the north bay of the salt sea, at the south end of Jordan. This was the south coast.

20 And Jordan was the border of it on the east side. This was the inheritance of the children of Benjamin, by the coasts thereof round about, according to their families.

21 Now the cities of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, according to their families, were Jericho, and Beth-hoglah, and the valley of Keziz,

22 And Beth-arabah, and Zemaraim, and Beth-el,

23 And Avim, and Parah, and Ophrah,

24 And Chephar-haammonai, and Ophui, and Gaba; twelve cities with their villages:

25 Gibeon, and Ramah, and Beeroti,

26 And Mizpeh, and Chephirah, and Mozah,

27 And Rekem, and Irpeel, and Taralah,

28 And Zelah, Eleph, and Jebusi, (which is Jerusalem), Gibeath, and Kirjath: fourteen cities with their villages. This is the inheritance of the children of Benjamin according to their families.

CHAPTER XIX.

The lot of Simeon, 1-9; of Zebulun, 10-16; of Issachar, 17-23; of Asher 24-31; of Naphtali, 32-39; of Dan, 40-48. The inheritance assigned to Joshua, 49-51.

AND the second lot came forth to Simeon, A even for the tribe of the children of Simeon, according to their families: and their inheritance was within the inheritance of the children of Judah.

2 And they had in their inheritance, Beer-sheba, and Sheba, and Moladah,

3 And Hazar-shual, and Balah, and Azem,

4 And Eltolad, and Bethul, and Hormah,

5 And Ziklag, and Beth-marcaboth, and Hazar-susah,

7 Ain, Remmon, and Ether, and Ashan; four cities and their villages:

8 And all the villages that were round about these cities, to Baalath-beer, Ramath of the south. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Simeon, according to their families.

9 Out of the portion of the children of Judah was the inheritance of the children of Simeon:

The borders of this tribe on the north were the same as those of Ephraim on the south: and his southern boundaries the same as the northern borders of Judah; but drawn from west to east, instead of from east to west. (15:1-12, 16:1)-As the inheritance of Benjamin did not reach to the Mediterranean Sea, and no other sea or lake is supposed to have been in those parts; perhaps the expression, "compassed the corner of the sea southward" (14) might be rendered, "made a circuit on the side next the sea towards the south;" for this clause seems to connect the account of the northern border, which is contained in the preceding verses, with that of the southern which follows.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ordinances of religion form our most important business, and must be attended to in the first place, even in preference to our worldly affairs, if we would be happy in our own souls, and prosper in our undertakings: (Note, Matt. 6:33, 34.) and when properly administered and attended on, by all ranks and orders of men, they form the glory and bulwark of any nation: for "them that honour God he will honour, and they who despise him shall be lightly esteemed." We indeed have the true Tabernacle, the true Ark of the covenant, and the mercy-seat, not only in the midst of us, but every where present: and when we meet in the courts of the Lord, he is as really though not sensibly present, as he was between the cherubim in the tabernacle of Israel. (Notes, Matt. 18:19, 20:28, 28:19, 20.) But what return do we render for such benefits? What improvement do we make of them? Alas! the ordinances of God are generally neglected; his sabbaths are violated; his truths are opposed, despised, or abused; and his commandments and authority are trampled upon! Few in comparison seem to value the salvation proposed to sinners in the gospel: and even they who profess to accept of it, are often, through indolence, self-indulgence, and fear of difficulties, rendered very irresolute and slack in "possessing the inheritance which the Lord God hath given them." Indeed many of them do not understand the extent of their privileges, because they have not carefully surveyed them: and when preserved from terrors and distress of conscience, and able to keep up some tolerable hope of salvation, with a little comfort from time to time in sacred ordinances; they seem to think that they possess all that can be expected in this world, and consider heaven as an estate in reversion, when they shall be ejected from their present too well beloved tenure of worldly possessions! Nor are they aware, that a close walk with God, increasing conformity to him, love of him and of one another, and a will in all things subjected to his will, form the very substance of heavenly felicity; and that much more of these blessed privileges may be enjoyed on earth, than any of us have hitherto experienced. But the Captain of our salvation will rebuke this slackness: and he commands his ministers to declare to his people, the truths which respect their present sanctification and progress in divine life, as well as their future inheritance, that they may be excited to press onward to the enjoyment of them. At his command we may boldly undertake any service, and need fear no enemies. He assigns to each of us our present and our future portion: yet in this appointment he takes into the account that diligence, vigilance, and faithfulness, which through his grace we are enabled to exercise: and as the industrious husbandman and intrepid warrior are generally, so the diligent, watchful, and courageous Christian is always, the most prosperous. "Having therefore food and raiment, let us be therewith content;" and may our wealth be laid up in the land of promise above, whither all the tribes of the redeemed will in succession shortly arrive, and receive their incorruptible inheritance. (Notes, Matt. 6:19-21. Col. 3:1-4.)

NOTES.-CHAP. XIX. V. 1-9. (Marg. Ref.) The inheritance of the tribe of Judah was found to be more than was necessary, or than properly came to their share; a portion was therefore allotted to the tribe of Simeon, taken from the south-west part of it: and it seems that, without murmuring, Judah renounced his claim, at the instance of Joshua, and of those who had been nominated to the office of dividing the land. (Notes, 15:32. Gen. 49:5-7. Num. 26:14.)-Sheba for the part of the children of Judah was too much for them; therefore the children of Simeon had their inheritance within the inheritance of them.

10 ¶ And the third lot came up for the children of Zebulun, according to their families; and the border of their inheritance was unto Sarid.

11 And their border went up toward the sea, and Maralah, and reached to Dabbasheth, and reached to the river that is before Jokneam;

12 And turned from Sarid eastward toward the sunrising unto the border of Chisloth-tabor, and then goeth out to Daberath, and goeth up to Japhia.

13 And from thence passeth on along on the east to Gittah-hepher to Ittah-kazin, and goeth out to Remmon-methoar to Neah;

14 And the border compasseth it on the north side to Hannathon: and the outgoings thereof are in the valley of Jipthah-el;

15 And Kattath, and Nahallal, and Shimron, and Idalah, and Beth-lehem: twelve cities with their villages.

16 This is the inheritance of the children of Zebulun, according to their families, these cities with their villages.

17 ¶ And the fourth lot came out to Issachar, for the children of Issachar, according to their families.

18 And their border was toward Jezreel, and Chesulloth, and Shunem, 19 And Hapharaim, and Shihon, and Anaharath.

20 And Rabbith, and Kishion, and Abez,

21 And Remeth, and Engannim, and Enhadadah, and Beth-pazzez;

22 And the coast reacheth to Tabor, and Shanaimah, and Beth-shemesh, and the outgoings of their border were at Jordan: sixteen cities with their villages.

23 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Issachar, according to their families, the cities and their villages.

24 ¶ And the fifth lot came out for the tribe of the children of Asher, according to their families.

25 And their border was Helkath, and Hali, and Beten, and Achshaph, 26 And Alammelech, and Amad, and Misheal; and reacheth to Carmel westward, and to Shihor-libnath,

27 And turneth toward the sunrising to Beth-dagon, and reacheth to Zebulun, and to the valley of Jipthah-el toward the north side of Bethemek, and Neiel, and goeth out to Cabul on the left hand;

28 And Hebron, and Rehob, and Hammon, and Kanah, even unto great Zidon;

29 And then the coast turneth to Ramah, and to the strong city Tyre, and the coast turneth to Hosah; and the outgoings thereof are at the sea, from the coast to Achzib:

30 Ummah also, and Aphek, and Rehob: twenty and two cities with their villages.

31 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Asher, according to their families, these cities with their villages.

32 ¶ The sixth lot came out to the children of Naphtali, even for the children of Naphtali according to their families.

33 And their coast was from Heleph, from Allon to Zaanannim, and Adami, Nekeb, and Jabneel, unto Lakum; and the outgoings thereof were at Jordan:

34 And then the coast turneth westward to Asnoth-tabor, and goeth out from thence to Hukkok, and reacheth to Zebulun on the south side, and reacheth to Asher on the west side, and to Judah upon Jordan toward the sunrising.

35 And the fenced cities are Ziddim, Zer, and Hammath, Rakkath, and Chinnereth, 36 And Adamah, and Ramah, and Hazor,

37 And Kedesh, and Edrei, and En-hazor,

38 And Iron, and Migdal-el, Horem, and Beth-anath, and Beth-shemesh; nineteen cities with their villages.

39 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Naphtali, according to their families, the cities and their villages.

40 ¶ And the seventh lot came out for the tribe of the children of Dan according to their families.

41 And the coast of their inheritance was Zorah, and Eshtaol, and Ir-shemesh,

42 And Shaalabbin, and Ajalon, and Jethlah,

43 And Elon, and Thimnathah, and Ekron,

44 And Eltekeh, and Gibbethon, and Baalath,

45 And Jehud, and Bene-berak, and Gath-rimmon,

46 And Me-jarkon, and Rakkon, with the border before Japho.

47 And the coast of the children of Dan went was the same place as Beer-sheba, or a suburb of that city: otherwise there would have been fourteen cities.

V. 10-16. (Marg. Ref.) Zebulun was younger than Issachar: yet he was placed next before him, both in the prophecy of Jacob, and in that of Moses: (Gen. 30:18-20. 49:13-15. Deut. 33:18, 19.) and his inheritance was allotted to him before Issachar had his. It lay to the north of Issachar, near to the lake of Gennesaret, in the region of Galilee.—There were twelve principal cities in the lot of this tribe; but they are not here particularly enumerated; for many of the places mentioned were merely the boundaries of the lot assigned to Zebulun. The Beth-lehem, here mentioned, lay at a great distance from Beth-lehem-Judah, (Note, Mic. 5:2.)

V. 17-23. The inheritance of Issachar lay to the south of Zebulun, the south-west of Naphtali, the south-east of Asher, and the north of Manasseh; and reached almost from Jordan to the Mediterranean: yet the lots of Manasseh and Asher are supposed to have met on the sea-shore. (Marg. Ref.)—The nature of the case is sufficient to satisfy any person, upon reflection, that these accounts must to us be obscure, and particular explanations of them in great measure uncertain.

V. 24-31. (Marg. Ref.) The inheritance of Asher lay to the most northern part of the land; having Issachar on the south-east, the extremity of Manasseh on the south, and Zebulun and Naphtali on the east.—It seems to have formed an angle almost as far as Zidon; though Tyre, which is more to the south, was without its boundaries.—Tyre, though not so old as Sidon, yet was of very high antiquity. It was a strong city in the time of Joshua; it is called צֵר כְּנָעַן "the city of the fortress of Sor." Josh. 19:29. Interpreters raise difficulties in regard to this passage, and will not allow it to have been so ancient: with what good reason I do not see, for it is called by the same name, "the fortress of Sor," in the history of David: (2 Sam. 24:7.) and the circumstances of the history determine the place to be the very same. Bp. Louth on Is. 23:7.—Perhaps the Canaanites, aided by the Zidonians, fortified Tyre, when first expelled by Joshua. (Notes, 10:20, 11:18. Is. 23:1, 6, 7. Ez. 26:3-6.)—Cabul seems to have been a city, and therefore distinct from the country thus called by Hiram King of Tyre: but it was in the same neighbourhood, and probably had its name for a similar reason. (1 Kings 9:13. Marg.)—There is a doubt, whether the Kanah, here mentioned, be the same place where Christ wrought his first miracle, or another city of the same name more to the north.
